YORKTOWN, TEX., -

To the Senate of the United States:

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned respectfully protest against the enactment by Congress of any legislation for the extension of the parcel-post service beyond its present limitations, for the following reasons:

(1) That the law now on the statute books fully provides for a strictly rural parcel post (see R. S., 33 L., 40 ch., 1759, Apr. 28, 1904. Also, rules and regulations, Rural Delivery Service, sec. 98, p. 28, Mar., 1907).

(2) That it is a step in the wrong direction—paternalistic and dangerous in its tendencies.

(3) That it would create an enormous deficit in the Post Office Department.

(4) That it would revolutionize the commercial system in the United States.

(4)*That it would revolutionize the commercial system in the United States.

(5) That it would seriously delay the delivery of legitimate mail.

(6) That it would deplete or destroy the prosperity of innumerable country towns and villages, and therefore must be regarded as a menace to the welfare of all the people.

(7) That it is class legislation in that it discriminates against the country merchant and favors the great retail mail-order houses.

(8) That it is in effect a subsidy to the retail mail-order houses—wrong in principle and unfair in practice.

(9) That a local rural parcel post other than now provided by statute is merely an "entering wedge" for a general parcel post, and for that reason must be regarded as the initial step toward all the evil consequences of a general parcel post, and subject to all the objections of such a system. such a system.

House joint memorial 2.

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—Whereas the land laws of the United States were enacted at an early

Whereas the land laws of the United States were enacted at an early date in our history; and

Whereas there has been since such enactment a radical change in public-land conditions, in that a great majority of the untaken public lands of the United States lie in the arid and semiarid region, where homestead occupancy, by reason of the lack of water for purposes of irrigation and domestic use, is attended by great privation and suffering on the part of the settler; and

Whereas homestead settlers are for the most part men of family, with small means, who are unable for a period of five years to occupy their claims and live without an income from a soil nonproductive and non-sustaining by reason of lack of irrigation and rainfall; and

Whereas these settlers, by reason of said harsh conditions, have been and are greatly discouraged, many of whom have abandoned their claims and departed to other countries where the land laws are less rigorous and Governments are more hospitable and beneficent, to the great detriment of the State and the United States. Be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Idaho do hereby protest against the five-year residence requirement of public-land laws of the United States, and do hereby respectfully ask and petition that said residence requirement be reduced to a period of three years; be it further

Resolved, That we most heartly commend the work of the Idaho residence requirement be reduced to a period further

Resolved, That we most heartily commend the work of the Idaho delegation in both branches of Congress who have enlisted their services in behalf of settlers upon public lands, and that we do most respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity of enacting remedial legislation along the lines recommended by Senator Borah, to the end that the present oppressive conditions may be relieved.

The secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward copies of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to our Representatives in Congress.

WILFRED L. GIFFORD, Secretary of State.

House joint memorial 1.

To the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington, D. C.:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent;

Whereas in the northern part of the State of Idaho, and especially in Clearwater County, there are vast areas of land which have been filed upon by scrip holders and owners, there being in said county alone land in this condition amounting to over 30,000 acres; and Whereas such scrip filings have been pending before the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office for a great number of years without approval; and

Whereas the approval of said scrip filings by the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office must be had before the land covered thereby may be taxed in the State of Idaho for State or county purposes; and

Whereas the inability of the State and county to tax such land and compel it to bear its just share of taxes levied for State and county purposes, works a great hardship on the State of Idaho, and especially upon the county wherein these large areas of land are located;

Now therefore your memorialists respectfully request that an approval be had of these selections at the earliest possible moment, and that every effort be made to expedite such approval to the end that the land in the situation above described may speedily be compelled to bear its just proportion of taxation; and be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be, and he is hereby, instructed to forward this memorial to the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office and coples thereof to the Representatives of the State in the Congress of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY (S. DOC. NO. 294).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate dated January 25, 1912, I transmit herewith for the information of the Senate a letter from Mr. F. A. Cleveland, chairman of the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, giving the names of the members and officers of the commission, their ages, what official positions, if any, they have held, and the salaries they are receiving in their present positions. WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1912.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 293).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message of the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith three reports from the Commission on Economy and Efficiency. They relate to the following subjects: 1. The centralization of the distribution of Government publications.

2. The use of window envelopes in the Government service.

3. The use of a photographic process for copying printed and written documents, maps, drawings, etc.

The first report recommends that the work of distributing documents be centralized in the office of superintendent of public documents in the Government Printing Office as a sub-stitute for the present method of distribution by each of the departments, offices, and bureaus issuing such documents. plan does not contemplate any change in the authority which determines the persons to whom documents shall be sent, but only that the physical work of wrapping, addressing, and mailing the documents shall be done at one place, and that the place of manufacture.

Documents are now printed and bound at the Printing Office and conveyed to the several departments and bureaus, where they are wrapped and addressed and sent to the post office, and afterwards from the post office to the railroad station, which is near the Printing Office. One result of the proposed plan will be to eliminate this unnecessary transportation of the large number of documents annually issued by the depart-Departments will be relieved of the trouble and expense of handling, storing, and accounting for documents; a better control can be exercised over the number of copies of a document to be printed at one time or, when printed, the number to be bound from time to time; and the accumulation of undistributed copies of the same documents in several offices will be avoided.

The centralization of the work of wrapping and addressing documents will permit the use of the most improved mechanical devices and a saving of labor that is not possible when the work is done in many offices.

I approve this recommendation of the commission and commend it to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

The report on the use of window envelopes is transmitted for the information of the Congress.

The report relative to the use of a photographic process for copying printed and written documents, maps, drawings, etc., is transmitted also for the information of the Congress. It does not require legislation. The attention of all departments has been called to this improved method of securing copies which heretofore have been made by hand at a cost of many times greater than is incurred by the photographic process. The report of the commission indicates that the adoption of this labor-saving device has resulted in a large direct saving in expense in the departments.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1912.

WORK OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT AND OTHER MATTERS (H. DOC. NO. 504).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

There is no branch of the Federal jurisdiction which calls more imperatively for immediate legislation than that which concerns the public domain, and especially the part of that domain which is in Alaska. The report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is transmitted herewith, and the report to him of the governor of Alaska, set out the public need in this regard with great force and in satisfactory detail.

The progress under the reclamation act has made clear the defects of its limitations, which should be remedied. The rules governing the acquisition of homesteads, of land that is not arid or semiarid, are not well adapted to the perfecting of title to land made arable by Government reclamation work.

I concur with the Secretary of the Interior in his recommendation that, after entry is made upon land being reclaimed, actual occupation as a homestead of the same be not required until two years after entry, but that cultivation of the same shall be required, and that the present provision under which the land is to be paid for in 10 annual installments shall be so modified as to allow a patent to issue for the land at the end of five years' cultivation and three years' occupation, with a reservation of a Government lien for the amount of the unpaid purchase money. This leniency to the reclamation homesteader will relieve him from occupation at a time when the condition of the land makes it most burdensome and difficult, and at the end of five years will furnish him with a title upon which he can borrow money and continue the improvement of his holding.

I also concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior that all of our public domain should be classified and that each class should be disposed of or administered in the manner most appropriate to that particular class.

The chief change, however, which ought to be made, and which I have already recommended in previous messages and communications to Congress, is that by which Government coal land and phosphate and other mineral lands containing nonmetalliferous minerals, shall be leased by the Government, with restrictions as to size and time, resembling those which now obtain throughout the country between the owners in fee and the lessees who work the mines, and in leases like those which have been most successful in Australia, New Zealand, and Nova Scotia. The showing made by investigations into the successful working of the leasing system leaves no doubt as to its wisdom and practical utility. Requirements as to the working of the mine during the term may be so framed as to prevent any holding of large mining properties merely for speculation, while the royalties may be made sufficiently low, not unduly to increase the cost of the coal mined, and at the same time sufficient to furnish a reasonable income for the use of the public in the community where the mining goes on. In Alaska there is no reason why a substantial income should not thus be raised for such public works as may be deemed necessary or useful.

There is no difference between the reasons which call for the application of the leasing system to the coal lands still retained by the Government in the United States proper and those which exist in Alaska.

There are now in Alaska only two well-known high-grade coal fields of large extent-the Bering River coal field and the Matanuska coal field. The Bering River coal field, while it has varying qualities of coal from the bituminous to the anthracite, is very much lessened in value and usefulness by the grinding effect to which in geological ages past the coal measures have been subjected, so that the coal does not lie or can not be mined in large lumps. It must be taken out in almost a powdered condition. The same difficulty does not appear to the same extent in the Matanuska coal fields. The Bering River coal fields are only 25 miles from the coast. They are within easy distance of an existing railroad built by the Morgan-Guggenheim interests, and may also be reached through Controller Bay by the construction of other and competing railroads.

Controller Bay is not a good harbor, but could probably be made practical with the expenditure of considerable money. The railroad of the Morgan-Guggenheim interests, running from Cordova, could be made a coal-carrying road for the Bering River fields by the construction of a branch to those fields not exceeding 50 or 60 miles. It is practicable, and if the coal measures were to be opend up, doubtless the branch would be built. In the present condition of things there is no motive to build the road, because there is no title or opportunity to open and mine the coal.

The Matanuska coal fields are a longer distance from the coast. They are from 150 to 200 miles from the harbor of Seward, on Resurrection Bay. This is one of the finest harbors in the world, and a reservation has been made there for the use of the Navy of the United States. A road constructed from Seward to the Matanuska coal fields would form part of a system reaching from the coast into the heart of Alaska, and open the great interior valleys of the Yukon and the Tanana, which have agricultural as well as great mineral possibilities.

The Alaska Central road has been constructed some 71 miles of the distance from Seward north to the Matanuska coal fields, but the construction beyond this has been discouraged, first, by the fact that there has been no policy adopted of opening up the coal lands upon which investors could depend, and, second, because there seemed to be a lack of financial backing of those engaged in the enterprise. The Secretary of the Interior has ascertained that the bondholders, who are the real owners of the road, are willing to sell to the Government, and he recommends the purchase of the existing road, such reconstruction as may be necessary, its continuance to the Matanuska coal fields, and thence into the valleys of the Yukon and the Tanana. It would be a great trunk line, and would be an opening up of Alaska by Government capital.

I am not in favor of Government ownership where the same certainty and efficiency of service can be had by private enterprise, but I think the conditions presented in Alaska are of such a character as to warrant the Government, for the purpose of encouraging the development of that vast and remarkable territory, to build and own a trunk line railroad, which it can lease on terms which may be varied and changed to meet the growing prosperity and development of the Territory.

There is nothing in the history of the United States which affords such just reason for criticism as the failure of the Federal Government to extend the benefit of its fostering care to the Territory of Alaska. There was a time, of course, when Alaska was regarded as so far removed into the Arctic Ocean as to make any development of it practically impossible, but for years the facts have been known to those who have been responsible for its government, and everyone who has given the subject the slightest consideration has been aware of the wonderful possibilities in its growth and development if only capital were invested there and a good government put over it. think the United States owes it, therefore, to Alaska, and to the people who have gone there, to take an exceptional step and to build a railroad that shall open the treasures of Alaska to the Pacific and to the people who live along that ocean on our west-The construction of a railroad and ownership of the fee do not necessitate Government operation. Pursuant, however, to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, I suggest to Congress the wisdom of providing that the President may appoint a commission of competent persons, including two Army engineers, to examine and report upon the available routes for a railroad from Seward to the Matanuska coal fields and into the Tanana and Yukon Valleys, with an estimate of the value of the existing partially constructed railroad and of the cost of continuing the railroad to the proper points in the valleys named. This proposal is further justified by the need that the Navy of the United States has for a secure coaling base in the North Pacific. The commission ought to make a full report also as to the character of the coal fields at Matanuska, and the problem of furnishing coal from that source for mercantile purposes after reserving for Government mining a sufficient quantity for the Navy.

I have already recommended to Congress the establishment of a form of commission government for Alaska. The Territory is too extended, its needs are too varied, and its distance from Washington too remote to enable Congress to keep up with its necessities in the matter of legislation of a local character.

The governor of Alaska in his report, which accompanies that of the Secretary of the Interior, points out certain laws that ought to be adopted, and emphasizes what I have said as to the immediate need for a government of much wider powers than now exists there, if it can be said to have any government at all.

I do not stop to dwell upon the lack of provision for the health of the inhabitants and the absence or inadequacy of laws, the mere statement of which shows their crying need. I only press upon Congress the imperative necessity for taking action not only to permit the beginning of the development of Alaska and the opening of her resources, but to provide laws which shall give to those who come under their jurisdiction decent protection.

LOWER COLORADO RIVER.

There is transmitted herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior setting out the work done under joint resolution approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the expenditure of $1,000, 000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to be expended by the President for the purpose of protecting lands and property in the Imperial Valley and elsewhere along the Colorado River in Arizona. The money was expended and the protective works erected, but the disturbances in Mexico so delayed the work, and the floods in the Colorado River were so extensive that a part of the works have been carried away, and the need for further action and expenditure of money exists. I do not make a definie recommendation at present, for the reason that the plan to be adopted for the betterment of conditions near the mouth of the Colorado River proves to be so dependent on a free and full agreement between the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States as to joint expenditure and joint use that it is unwise to move until we can obtain some agreement with that Government which will enable us to submit to Congress a larger plan, better adapted to the exigencies presented than the one adopted. It is essential that we act promptly, and through the State Department the matter is being pressed upon the attention of the Mexican Government. Meantime, a report of the engineer in charge, together with a subsequent report upon his work by a body of experts appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, together with an offer by the Southern Pacific Railroad to do the work at a certain price, with a guaranty for a year, and a comment upon this offer by Brig. Gen. Marshall, late Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and now consulting engineer of the Reclamation Service, are all herewith transmitted.

WATER POWER SITES.

In previous communications to Congress I have pointed out two methods by which the water-power sites on nonnavigable streams may be controlled as between the State and the National Government. It has seemed wise that the control should be concentrated in one government or the other as the active participant in supervising its use by private enterprise. In most cases where the Government owns what are called waterpower sites along nonnavigable streams, which are really riparian lots, without which the power in the stream can not be used, we have a situation as to ownership that may be described as follows: The Federal Government has land without which the power in the stream can not be transmuted into electricity and applied at a distance, while it is claimed that the State, under the law of waters as it prevails in many of our Western States, controls the use of the water and gives the beneficial use to the first and continuous user. In order to secure proper care by the State governments over these sources of power, it has been proposed that the Government shall deed the water-power site to the State on condition that the site and all the plant upon it shall revert to the Government unless the State parts with the site only by a lease, the terms of which it enforces and which requires a revaluation of the rental every 10 years, the full term to last not more than 50 years. A failure of the State to make and enforce such leases would enable the Government by an action of forfeiture to recover the power sites and all plants that might be erected thereon, and this power of penalizing those who succeed to the control would furnish a motive to compel the observance of the policy of the Government.

The Secretary of the Interior has suggested another method by which the water-power site shall be leased directly by the Government to those who exercise a public franchise under provisions imposing a rental for the water power to create a fund to be expended by the General Government for the improvement of the stream and the benefit of the local community where the power site is, and permitting the State to regulate the rates at which the converted power is sold. The latter method suggested by the Secretary is a more direct method for Federal control, and in view of the probable union and systematic organization and welding together of the power derived from water within a radius of 300 or 400 miles, I think it better that the power of control should remain in the National Government than that it should be turned over to the States. Under such a system the Federal Government would have such direct supervision of the whole matter that any honest administration could easily prevent the abuses which a monopoly of absolute ownership in private persons or companies would make

BUREAU OF NATIONAL PARKS.

I earnestly recommend the establishment of a Bureau of National Parks. Such legislation is essential to the proper management of those wondrous manifestations of nature, so startling and so beautiful that everyone recognizes the obligations of the Government to preserve them for the edification and recreation of the people. The Yellowstone Park, the Yosemite, the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the Glacier National Park, and the Mount Rainier National Park and others furnish appropriate instances. In only one case have we made anything like adequate preparation for the use of a park by the public. case is the Yellowstone National Park. Every consideration of patriotism and the love of nature and of beauty and of art requires us to expend money enough to bring all these natural wonders within easy reach of our people. The first step in that direction is the establishment of a responsible bureau which shall take upon itself the burden of supervising the parks and of making recommendations as to the best method of improving their accessibility and usefulness.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON THE COST OF LIVING.

There has been a strong movement among economists, business men, and others interested in economic investigation to secure the appointment of an international commission to look into the cause for the high prices of the necessities of life. There is no doubt but that a commission could be appointed of such unprejudiced and impartial persons, experts in investigation of economic facts, that a great deal of very valuable light could be shed upon the reasons for the high prices that have so distressed the people of the world, and information given upon which action might be taken to reduce the cost of living. The very satisfactory report of the Railway Stock and Bonds Commission indicates how useful an investigation of this kind can be when undertaken by men who have had adequate experience in economic inquiries and a level-headedness and judgment correctly to apply sound principles to the facts found.

For some years past the high and steadily increasing cost of living has been a matter of such grave public concern that I deem it of great public interest that an international conference be proposed at this time for the purpose of preparing plans, to be submitted to the various Governments, for an international inquiry into the high cost of living, its extent, causes, effects, and possible remedies. I therefore recommend that, to enable the President to invite foreign Governments to such a conference, to be held at Washington or elsewhere, the Congress provide an appropriation, not to exceed $20,000, to defray the expenses of preparation and of participation by the United

The numerous investigations on the subject, official or other, already made in various countries (such as Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, and the United States) have themselves strongly demonstrated the need of further study of world-wide scope. Those who have conducted these investigations have found that the phenomenon of rising prices is almost if not quite general throughout the world; but they are baffled in the attempt to trace the causes by the impossibility of making any accurate international comparisons. This is because, in spite of the number of investigations already made, we are still without adequate data and because as yet no two countries estimate their price levels on the same basis or by the same methods.

As already indicated, the preliminary conference itself would entail a comparatively small expense, and most of the subsequent investigations for which it would prepare the way could be carried out by existing bureaus in this and other Governments as part of their regular work and would require little, if any, additional appropriations for such bureaus.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

The extraordinary growth of industry in the past two decades and its revolutionary changes have raised new and vital questions as to the relations between employers and wage earners which have become matters of pressing public concern. These questions have been somewhat obscured by the profound changes in the relations between competing producers and producers as a class and consumers—in other words, by the changes which, among other results, have given rise to what is commonly called the trust problem. The large-scale production characteristic of modern industry, however, involves the one set of relations no less than the other. Any interruption to the normal and peace-ful relations between employer and wage earner involves public discomfort and in many cases public disaster. Such interrup-tions become, therefore, quite as much a matter of public concern as restraint of trade or monopoly.

Industrial relations concern the public for a double reason. We are directly interested in the maintenance of peaceful and stable industrial conditions for the sake of our own comfort and well-being; but society is equally interested, in its sovereign civic capacity, in seeing that our institutions are effectively maintaining justice and fair dealing between any classes of citizens whose economic interests may seem to clash. Railway strikes on such a scale as has recently been witnessed in France and in England, a strike of coal-mine workers such as we have more than once witnessed in this country, and such a wholesale relinquishing of a public service as that of the street cleaners recently in New York, illustrate the serious danger to public well-being and the inadequacy of the existing social machinery either to prevent such occurrences or to adjust them on any equitable and permanent basis after they have arisen.

In spite of the frequency with which we are exposed to these dangers and in spite of the absence of provision for dealing with them, we continue to assume with easy-going confidence that in each new case, somehow or other, the parties to the dispute will find some solution which will be agreeable to themselves and consistent with the public interest. We all see the grave objections to strikes and lockouts, however necessary they may be in extreme cases; and we are ready to criticize the more extreme phases of the industrial conflict, such as boycotts and blacklists; but we leave the situation such that industrial disputes lead inevitably to a state of industrial war in which these are the only weapons left to the two combatants. No more clumsy or expensive method of determining the rate of wages and the hours and conditions of labor could well be devised. The successful operation of the Erdman Act as between interstate railroads and their employees shows how much good can be done by proper legislation.

At the moment when the discomforts and dangers incident to industrial strife are actually felt by the public there is usually an outcry for the establishment of some tribunal for the immediate settlement of the particular dispute. But what is needed is some system, devised by patient and deliberate study in that will meet these constantly occurring and clearly foreseeable emergencies-not a makeshift to tide over an ex-Not during the rainstorm, but in fair weather should the leaking roof be examined and repaired.

The magnitude and complexity of modern industrial disputes have put upon some of our statutes and our present mechanism for adjusting such differences—where we can be said to have any mechanism at all-a strain they were never intended to bear and for which they are unsuited. What is urgently needed to-day is a reexamination of our laws bearing upon the relations of employer and employee and a careful and discriminating scrutiny of the various plans which are being tried in several of our own States and in other countries. This would seem to be the first natural step in bringing about an adjustment of these relations better suited to the newer

Numerous special investigations, official and unofficial, have revealed conditions in more than one industry which have immediately been recognized on all sides as entirely out of harmony with accepted American standards. It is probable that to a great extent the remedies for these conditions, so far as the remedies involve legislation, lie in the field of State action; but such a comprehensive inquiry as is necessary to furnish a basis for intelligent action must be undertaken on national initiative and must be nation-wide in its scope. In view of the results that have followed the activities of the Federal Government in education, in agriculture, and in other fields which do not lie primarily within the field of Federal legislation, there can be no serious argument against the propriety or the wisdom of an inquiry by the Federal Government into the general conditions of labor in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that some of the remedies will lie with the separate States, or even entirely outside the sphere of governmental activity, in the hands of private individuals and of voluntary agencies. One legitimate object of such an official investigation and report is to enlighten and inform public opinion, which of itself will often induce or compel the reform of unjust conditions or the abatement of unreasonable demands.

The special investigations that have been made of recent industrial conditions, whether private or official, have been fragmentary, incomplete, and at best only partially representative or typical. Their lessons, nevertheless, are important, and until something comprehensive and adequate is available they serve a useful purpose, and they will necessarily continue to be made. But, unquestionably, the time is now ripe for a searching inquiry into the subject of industrial relations which shall be official, authoritative, balanced, and well rounded, such as only the Federal Government can successfully undertake. The present widespread interest in the subject makes this an opportune time for an investigation, which in any event can not long be postponed. It should be nonpartisan, comprehensive, thorough, patient, and courageous.

There is already available much information on certain aspects of the subject in the reports of the Federal and State bureaus of labor and in other official and unofficial publications. One essential part of the proposed inquiry would nat-urally be to assemble, digest, and interpret this information so far as it bear upon our present industrial conditions. In addition to this the commission should inquire into the general conditions of labor in our principal industries, into the existing relations between employers and employees in those industries. into the various methods which have been tried for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers and for avoiding or adjusting trade disputes, and into the scope, methods, and resources of Federal and State bu-reaus of labor and the methods by which they might more adequately meet the responsibilities which, through the work of the commission above recommended, would be more clearly brought to light and defined.

MISBRANDING IMPORTED GOODS.

My attention has been called to the injustice which is done in this country by the sale of articles in the trade purporting to be made in Ireland, when they are not so made, and it is suggested that the justice of the enactment of a law which, so far as the jurisdiction of the Federal Government can go, would prevent a continuance of this misrepresentation to the public and fraud upon those who are entitled to use the statement in the sale of their goods. I think it to be greatly in the interest of fair dealing, which ought always to be encouraged by law, for Congress to enact a law making it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to use the mails or to put into interstate commerce any articles of merchandise which bear upon their face a statement that they have been manufactured in some particular country when the fact is otherwise.

BUILDING FOR PUBLIC ARCHIVES.

I can not close this message without inviting the attention of Congress again to the necessity for the erection of a building to contain the public archives. The unsatisfactory distribution of records, the lack of any proper index or guide to their contents, is well known to those familiar with the needs of the Government in this Capital. The land has been purchased and nothing remains now but the erection of a proper building. I transmit a letter written by Prof. J. Franklin Jameson, director of the department of historical research of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, in which he speaks upon this subject as a member of a committee appointed by the executive council of the American Historical Association to bring the matter to the attention of the President and Congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 2, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message will be printed, and, as it deals with various subjects, will lie upon the table, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 8853. An act for the relief of John L. Baird was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 18985. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, morning business is closed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a motion; but before making the motion I understand the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] desires to make a personal statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho rises to a question of personal privilege, which the Senator will state.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, some one has been guilty of bad manners. I notice in the North American, a paper published in Philadelphia, in the Issue of February 2, referring to the proceedings of the Senate on February 1, it is stated:

Senator Herburn, of Idaho, to-day effectually blocked the effort of Senator Lodge and other members of the Committee on Foreign Relations to have the Senate grant unanimous consent to the fixing of a day for the voting on the arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France. The Massachusetts Senator asked that voting begin February 29, but, declaring that he desired earlier action, Mr. Heyburn refused his assent.

HEYBURN then made a long speech against the treaties as "appointing the monarchs of Europe as the guardians of this Republic."

All the Democratic Senators except Martine of New Jersey left the Chamber, as did most of the Republicans.

That article is subject to criticism in that it charges Members of the Senate with having been guilty of bad manners. That charge should not come from anyone purporting to report the proceedings of the Senate and sending such report out to be published in the newspapers. I am advised that this is an Associated Press dispatch. If it is, the representatives of the Associated Press have charged the Democrats of this body, except the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], with having been guilty of bad manners during the performance of the public duties in the Senate. I think it is proper to call attention to the fact. I say, if the fact charged was true, it would amount only to a charge of bad manners and should not be made by a representative of any newspaper which is allowed the privileges of the gallery or of the floor.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Thursday, immediately after the close of morning business. I shall submit some remarks on the pending arbitration treaties.

Mr. LODGE, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaties with Great Britain and France in open executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaties named by him in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The so-called arbitration treaties are before the Senate in open executive session.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I renew the request I made last Thursday, which I believe will now be agreed to without objection. I ask that the treaties be taken up on February 29. the final vote on all amendments thereto to be had upon that legislative day, the vote to be taken upon all amendments to the resolutions on the legislative day of March 5, and that the vote be had upon the passage of the resolutions, as they shall then be amended, on the legislative day of March 6.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that is the original proposition which he made?

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely the original proposition I

Mr. BACON. I understood the original proposition which was made by the Senator from Massachusetts to be that we would take up the treaties and would vote on all amendments and pending amendments and upon the resolutions on that legislative day. The other was a suggestion which was subsequently made.

Mr. LODGE. That was the second request I made. The first request

Mr. BACON. That is the one I wanted to have submitted. Mr. LODGE. In the first request, which I very greatly preferred, I asked that the vote on the treaties be taken on Tuesday, the 5th of March, before the adjournment on that legislative day, and on all amendments pending or to be offered.

Mr. BACON. With the exception of the date, that is the proposition which I hope the Senator will now submit.

Mr. LODGE. That is the one which I first offered, and I prefer that form very much.

Mr. BACON. What date did it provide? Mr. LODGE. March 5. The Senator March 5. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] asked that it be extended from February 29 to March 5, when I made it March 5.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing to have that date fixed, and I hope the Senator will stand by that original proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President, then I make the request in that form-that the vote on the treaties be taken on Tuesday, the 5th of March, before adjournment on that legislative day, and on all amendments pending or to be offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understand that that involves the proposition that the treaties will be taken up for action on that day.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I understand that the treaties will be taken up for action on that day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to hear the request read once

Mr. LODGE. I asked unanimous consent that the treaties be taken up for action on the 5th of March, and that on that legislative day before adjournment a vote be taken on the treaties and on all amendments pending or to be offered.

Mr. BACON. That is, amendments to the treaty—

Mr. BACON. Mr. LODGE. Now pending or hereafter to be offered.

Mr. BACON. Either to the treaty or to the resolutions of ratification?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; the treaties and the resolutions of ratification.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. That includes, I take it, Mr. President, the amendments offered to the treaty as well as the amendments offered to the resolutions?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; amendments to the treaties and the resolutions of ratification.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there has been some colloquy over here, and we could not exactly hear. Will the Senator please state the proposition again?

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that on the 5th of March next the treaties and the resolutions of ratification shall be taken up and that a vote be had upon the treaties and the resolutions of ratification before adjournment on that legislative day and upon all amendments to the treaties or the resolutions of ratification now pending or hereafter to be offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if any Senator desires to speak to-day on the treaties, I shall be more than glad; but if there is no Senator who is desirous of now going on, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

SHEPLER WARD FITZGERALD AND ALDEN GEORGE STRONG.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5046) to authorize the appointment of Shepler Ward FitzGerald and of Alden George Strong to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate. The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

- Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not object to this request, but I desire to say that after this bill has been acted upon I will ask for the regular order-that the calendar be proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Shepler Ward FitzGerald and Alden George Strong to the grade of second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, with lineal rank in accordance with their respective ratings at the competitive examination held under the law by the War Department in September, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the bill go over for the present. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

CONFEDERATE NAVAL MONUMENT IN VICKSBURG NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 2925) providing for a Confederate naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park was announced

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, do I understand that a request is made that the bill go over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a request made that it

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether it is in order or not, but I should like to make a proposition to the Senator from Idaho. So far as I can control the situation—and I think can control a good deal of it-the Senators from the South will not vote on this bill at all, if the Senator will allow it, without objection, to come up for consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the bill should be placed under Rule IX. The question involved, if discussed at all, can not be discussed under the five-minute rule. the Senator from Mississippi will agree to that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To what proposition? Mr. HEYBURN. That it can not be discussed under the fiveminute rule. Therefore it ought to be placed under Rule IX, where it would come up on motion, if the Senate voted to take it up. I do not think it would be seemly to enter into an agreement that a part of the Senate of the United States should not perform its constitutional duty. I think that would not be the proper thing to do. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say simply this: The impression seems to have somehow gone out that this is a request made by the South, or by the veterans of the Confederate service. This bill embodies a recommendation made by the Vicksburg National Park Commission, a majority of whom are ex-Federal soldiers. The bill was introduced by me upon the request of the ex-Federal officer who is chairman of that commission. It received the approbation of the War Department. It received the unanimous vote of those members of the Military Affairs Committee who were present on that day. Then the attempt was made to put it somewhat in the light of being—oh, I hardly know what; a "rebellion against the Government," or something of the sort. To free it of that suspicion, at any rate, and to free it of the character of being a request at the hands of the South, or what is left of whatever navy it ever had, I am perfectly willing, if the Senator from Idaho will not use obstructive and dilatory tactics against the bill, to agree that I and, so far as I can control events, others who are either Confederate soldiers or sons of Confederate soldiers shall not vote on the bill at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should not like to be a party to any agreement based upon the proposition that the expression of the will of the Senate should be given by less than the entire Senate, or by any particular part of it.

The Senator from Mississippi is mistaken if he thinks that with me this is a question of personal bitterness. It is not. Whether it were supported by men from my own State—as it is, I believe—or from any other State in the Union would not affect my judgment as to the passage of a measure of

When I came to this body I hoped never to be called upon to discuss any question growing out of the unfortunate condition to which this measure refers. I have no bitterness in my heart against any man because of the side upon which he was engaged. My opposition to the bill is based upon my views as to the principle of government involved—the sentiment of government, if you please-but there is no personal bitterness in my heart. It would be immaterial to me whether this measure were supported by men from the North or by men from Were it introduced by a man from the North, I should feel toward it just as I do under existing circumstances.

After a former discussion of this matter the newspapers saw fit to select certain phrases or statements, or partial statements, upon which to base a great deal of very bitter criticism. I have remained silent under it, because I thought the good judgment of the Senator from Mississippi, and those who may be in accord with him as to the contemplated legislation, would see the unwisdom of pressing questions of this kind.

I think if he realized how deeply the sentiments of those who participated in that conflict on the side of the North are stirred by legislation of this kind he would be somewhat appalled. The Senator represents an affirmative line of action in this measure. The people do not want that line of action to be established or entered upon by Congress. The discussion of it necessarily involves a strong expression of sentiment and of criticism. A bill of this kind could not be discussed without that kind of criticism which is most unfortunate in this body.

I hope the Senator will agree that the bill shall go over under Rule IX, and remain there until such time as the Senate of the United States may be more in sympathy with this kind of legislation. I ask that the bill go over under Rule IX.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Until when? Mr. HEYBURN. Under Rule

Under Rule IX.

Until when? The Senator said until some Mr. WILLIAMS. time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Until it is called up under Rule IX.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but I thought the Senator said until something else.

Mr. HEYBURN.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as Senator Foote is said once to have remarked to Senator Davis, "Speak for yourself, Senator." When the Senator from Idaho says that a little bill like this can not be discussed without bitterness-

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator misunderstood me. I said that it necessitated criticism that engendered bitterness.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah! When the Senator from Idaho says that a little bill like this can not be discussed without necessitating sentiments that engender bitterness, he may speak for himself, but not for me. It can be discussed without engendering any bitterness from me, I am sure. I am glad there is no bitterness "in the heart" of the Senator from Idaho, and that if at any time his tongue has somewhat indicated a different situation it was because he spoke perhaps hurriedly, or did not mean all he said.

But, Mr. President, it seems to me there has been a great deal said about "bridging the bloody chasm," and a great deal more said about "bringing a great reunited country to the front," with all of its citizens actuated by the highest degree of a common patriotism. A great deal has been said about the "magnanimity" which the victors, constituting one section, showed to the defeated, constituting the other half, after the late war between the States. If that is to be mere lip service, and is not heart-intended, it is about time we knew it. Cerand is not heart-intended, it is about time we knew it. Certainly a bill of this kind could be discussed, by me at any rate, without any sort of bitterness, either of language or of feeling; and certainly no "sentiment" evoked by me would justify any "bitterness" coming from any other human being in the world.

When I reflect, Mr. President, that at the very door of the Parliament house in Great Britain there stands a magnificent statue to Oliver Cromwell; when I reflect that the great general of the Boers, Gen. Botha, was made secretary of war in the South African Colonial Government, with English sanction and initiative; when I reflect that this war has been over nearly half a century, it seems to me that we, Confederate soldiers and sons of Confederate soldiers, ought not to be placed in the attitude in which this sort of opposition places us.

Now, Mr. President, history is history and the past is the ast. No man could make it a part of the present except sentimentally. That much, I think, the Senator from Idaho will admit.

I think the Senator from Idaho will go further with me and confess that the memory of the courage, the constancy, the perseverance of American citizens anywhere is worthy of per-

During that war the people of one group of the United States were on one side. The people of another group were on another side. In the sense in which the words United States were used prior to 1861, in the sense in which they are used now, there was then no United States Government, but two groups of formerly united and then disunited States under two governments. People of these two States groups fought because they honestly differed upon subjects which have been settled by the greatest court in the world, the court of arms, and for the most part that settlement has been incorporated in the Constitution of the United States in its amendments.

Now, with all that behind us, there comes a time when a magnanimous and generous ex-Federal soldier, the chairman of the Vicksburg Military Park Commission, writes a letter to me, because that park happens to be in my State, and requests me to introduce a bill which is prepared not by me, but by the commission. I send it first to the committee; then it is sent to the War Department. The War Department suggests modification and indorses it. It is merely the expenditure of a few dollars in order to erect a monument to the valor of certain American citizens from certain States who happened at that time to be fighting against other American citizens from other States. Both of them were a little bit previous to that time citizens of the same Government; both of them a little bit after that time citizens of the same Government.

Now, it is a mere sentiment like this. I care nothing for the bill, though much for the spirit it represents. I would not have introduced the bill on my own motion. Some criticisms have been published in the South of me because I introduced it, seemingly upon the ground that I was begging something or asking something. That was not the case at all. This com-mission merely concluded that as the people's treasure had erected a monument to the memory of the Federal Navy en-gaged in the campaign in and around Vicksburg there ought to be, when the time came for the great reunion, the semicentennial of the Battle of Vicksburg in 1913, a monument also to the naval heroes of the Confederacy who participated in that campaign, the officers and the men who commanded the Arkansas and various other craft, which my friend the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton] will remember.

Now, in all coolness, in all "brotherly love," as far as the sections are concerned, or we as Senators are here concerned, it strikes me that this it rather a small matter upon which to predicate a revival of past feelings or a relighting of the old fires that have virtually gone out everywhere.

I say to the Senator from Idaho, of course I can not accept the proposition to put it on the calendar under Rule IX. Of course, he understands that I understand that what he means by that is that the bill shall never come up. That would be by that is that the bill shall never come up. That would be the fate of it precisely. If I consented to that, that would be the result; and the Senator, I know, does not want to take that sort of an advantage of a new and an inexperienced Senator such as I confess myself to be, although he looked at me very frankly when he made the proposition. I shall not do that. I do think that the Senator might, in a spirit of willingness to recognize that sectional animosities have been buried, consent at any rate not to obstruct the passage of the bill. All I ask is that the Senate shall have the privilege of voting upon it. Nobody will cry if it is defeated. I shall not, certainly.

So I made the proposition in good faith that, if the Senator was afraid that "the Confederacy" was still running the Senate of the United States, those of us who even had fathers connected with that unfortunate though, in my opinion, somewhat glorious cause would not vote upon the bill at all. In other words, it is to be a pure act of magnanimity and of sentiment and brotherly love from you of the North. If it does not come from the major side in magnanimity and in affection, the bill is worth nothing. If it passed by a majority which our votes constituted, then it would be worth nothing for the purposes for which the brave and magnanimous and chivalrous ex-Federal soldier intended it to serve—the purpose of signalizing admiration and respect from victors to vanquished, and paid for out of the Treasury which both sides and their descendants as a reunited people have fed and built up by a common taxing system. The money which will build it, like that which built the Federal naval monument in the same park, is as much ours-the survivors and descendants of one group of Statesas yours-the survivors and descendants of the other.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not opposing this bill because the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are favoring it. I would oppose it as quickly and as strenuously if it came from a Senator on this side of the Chamber. It is the sentiment of the bill that meets with my disapproval.

The Senator from Mississippi has likened this to the case of Cromwell. Why, Cromwell won. Cromwell was at the head of the Government of England, as was his son. They represented, and demonstrated on the battle field that they represented, England. There is no comparison to be made between that case and this.

Now, Mr. President, one thing leads to another. Along the same lines and, perhaps, in the same spirit—I do not know—there was on January 18, 1912, introduced in the Senate a bill for the relief of certain Confederate officers for improper and illegal injuries inflicted. I call the careful attention of Senators to this measure as illustrating to some extent the spirit that meets with the opposition. I read it:

illegal injuries inflicted. I call the careful attention of Senators to this measure as illustrating to some extent the spirit that meets with the opposition. I read it:

Whereas upon the 18th day of June, 1864, upon the demand of Mai, Gen. I. G. Foster, commanding the Union forces of the Department of the South, 50 Confederate officers were sent to him by the order of Mai, Gen. Halleck, United States Army, for the purpose of retailation, the said Mai, Gen. Foster, assuming certain correspondence between him and Mai, Gen. Sam Jones, of the Confederate Army, that certain Union officers held as prisoners of war in the city of Charleston, S. C., were so located in said city that they were in danger of being injured from the explosion of shells fired from Batteries Waggoner, Gregg, and other land batteries, and from the United States fiet shelling the aforesaid city; and Whereas, after mutual explanation between the aforesaid United States and Confederate generals, the said misunderstanding resulted in the exchange of the 50 Confederate officers sent to Maj, Gen. Foster, as aforesaid, for an equal number of United States officers; and Whereas, notwithstanding after said explanation and mutual exchange, together with evidence that the facts charged were false, the said Gen. Foster again called for 600 other Confederate officers of different ranks, who were being held as prisoners of war at Fort Delaware, to be sent to Morris Island as subjects for special retailation, notwithstanding no charges were made against them other than prisoners of war captured in battle. By order of Maj, Gen. Halleck, United States Army, on the 20th day of August, 1864, the said 600 Confederate officers of different ranks, who were being held as prisoners of war at Fort Delaware, to be sent to Morris Island, S. C. The capacity of the steamer was inadequate for such a number and an advertise of the fire of the curs of the such states army, on the 20th day of August, 1864, the said 600 Confederate mercent of the sundancers of the sundancers

Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby ordered and directed to pay to each survivor of the 600 aforesaid officers and to the legal heirs of the deceased officers the sum of $5,000 each, as damages and reparation for the acts aforesaid.

The bill was referred January 18, 1912, to the Committee on

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss that measure now. I read it only for the purpose of showing that this alleged spirit of complacent submission is not at all times evidenced by Members of this body from those States that undertook to secede from the Union. There is a challenge in that Senate bill No. 4652 that will not go unanswered in the hearts of the people who believe that the war was conducted on the part of the Union within the laws of mercy and fairness. A challenge like that sent out to the great majority of the people of this country is not calculated to procure consideration for the bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi, Senate bill No. 2925.

There are other bills pending elsewhere in the Congress of the United States as radical as the one that I have just read.

I will take the liberty to admonish those who dream that this country is ready for submission to such legislation that they are as mistaken as were those who sat in this body or elsewhere in 1860 and 1861.

The talk about waving the bloody flag has long since ceased to have any potency in the mind of the people. It is a senseless charge. Who brings out the bloody flag? That bill is as red with the bloody sentiment that actuated those men who now seek to dip their hands in the Treasury of the United States as though it had been under the bleeding, gaping wounds of the patriots of the North upon the battlefield.

What occasion is there for bringing into this body a reminder of that conflict? What occasion is there for doing that, with the hope of gaining a few dollars toward paying the expenses of building monuments or tablets in commemoration of those unfortunate times?

There will be no bloody flag waved by me. I have never voluntarily since the close of that conflict brought the question up for consideration or discussion. Unless provoked to it in defense of the sacred memories that are in the hearts and the minds of the people of the North, I would never bring it up directly or indirectly. Can you not let that ghost lie dead in its grave and be content to think what you please of the issue or the sentiments surrounding it or of the men engaged in it? Can you not be content as a people, local to the South, who engaged in that struggle to pay tribute to those whom you deem Must you compel every other citizen to bow the knee to your sentiments? Do you think we have no graveyards crowded with the memories of our own people? Do you not think that the people of the North whose stalwart men went to the front and lost their lives have any sentiment that you are bound to respect? When the ground upon which the prison pen of Andersonville stood became a national cemetery, and the man who was guilty of the murders committed within it having been hanged under trial and conviction, do you not think that the building of his statue as a commemoration of his memory and his deeds sank deep in bitterness into the souls of the North?

I would not carry these memories or the mention of them further now, but if the question of the righteousness of paying out of the Treasury of the people of this loyal and united Nation money to build monuments for the avowed purpose of crowning with honor and glory the deeds of those who sought to destroy the Union, do you not think that is carrying it a good way? Do you think you are safe in doing it?

Let us drop this sectional question. Let there be no North and no South and no East and no West. You will find no Member of this body more ready than I to join with you. I did not force the consideration of this measure upon the Senate. It was forced upon the attention of the Senate through the proceedings providing for the introduction, reference, and report of

It is not now my intention to discuss this measure, except as I have replied in my own way to the suggestions of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] upon this occasion. measure is not before the Senate, except upon my suggestion or request that it go over under Rule IX.

Let us bar out from this body the boast or the blame of either side for their participation in that unfortunate struggle.

will meet you more than halfway.

Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho says: "Let us bar out from this body the boast or the blame of either Does he mean that? Does he mean to bar out from the body the boasts of both sides?

Mr. HEYBURN.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And of the major side as well as the minor

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; the boasts of both sides.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, you will bear me witness, and every Senator will bear me witness, that the statement embodies itself a boast and is a boast hitherto unful-I am not asking that the Senate of the United States shall furnish me an arena to boast about the courage or the constancy of those who lost out in that great struggle. The Senator from Idaho can not deflect from the consideration of the real question which will be before this Senate when this bill comes up, the attention of Senators or of the country, by that sort of talk. Nobody is proposing to fight the war over. not proposing to make this the subject matter of a lecture upon the glories of the Confederacy. I might be tempted to defend quite sympathetically and glowingly some things concerning its soldiers and sailors and even its cause if a little innocent bill like this were taken as a pretext to attack them, but certainly in no other way.

Why, the Senator might just as well have read a public buildings bill or a rivers and harbors bill as the bill which he read-No. 4652. He might just as well, so far as its relevancy is concerned, have read some account of the suffering American soldiers in British prison hulks during the Revolutionary War written on our side, or some account of the sufferings of the British soldiers in American prisons as written from the British side, as to have undertaken to have made such a mountain out of this little molehill of a bill by reading another bill.

I do not believe that there are 10,000 men in America who agree with the Senator from Idaho; I do not believe there are 2,000 or 200 that ever wore the blue and fought under the Stars and Stripes against their fellow citizens, temporarily dissevered from them, who agree with the Senator from Idaho. I do not mean by that that there might not be men who would be willing to vote against the bill. Let it come up and let it be voted against if Senators want to do so, but why pick it out for obstructive tactics?

Then the Senator has pretty amply illustrated his ability to make rhetoric out of nothing. He refers to "treading on the sacred memories in the minds of the North." Now, who, in the name of common sense, has been treading or trying to tread upon any sacred memories in the minds of the people of the North? Surely I am too innocent and inoffensive looking a creature to be charged with that sort of offense. I do not think I have even looked hostile toward "the North" or toward "memories" or toward anything else. I have trod on nothing that I know of. In fact, if the Senator from Idaho knew me better, he would know that I frequently step out of my way upon the sidewalk to keep from treading upon an ant. I certainly would not tread upon "sacred memories." If he knew me better, he would know that I have such a modest opinion of myself that I would not imagine that I could tread out the memory which 2,000,000 Union soldiers have made for -the memory on one side of the victory in a war themselvesthat side considered a just and glorious one, and a memory everywhere of magnificent courage and constancy and heroism displayed by them. I have no idea of "treading" out anything. I would not want to tread out even the public service of the Senator from Idaho, if I could. [Laughter.]

He says that we want for this monument to take money out of "the Treasury of the people of the United States." In the name of God, Mr. President, are we down South not a part of the people of the United States? Have we not been ever since this country was colonized, except for four short years, when we were not? Was there in any sense in which we use the term now any United States during that four years' time under one Government? There were two sets or congeries, of formerly United States, but then temporarily disunited States, and then for four years under different governments. For this four years we were not these United States, but these "disunited States." Then we came together again.

Our forefathers built this Union together. The South furnished its share. I am not boasting. When American liberty wanted a pen, Thomas Jefferson furnished it; when it wanted a tongue, Patrick Henry gave it; when it wanted a sword, George Washington wielded it. When the American Union had been consolidated under the new Constitution and it wanted somebody with a grand legal intellect to stableize it by legal decisions, John Marshall was the man who did it. And when later on we struck enemies-foreign enemies this time-upon stricken battle fields, the heroes of that war, as leaders, were Scott and Taylor, who were southerners. The only two victories won during the war of 1812 on land were by Winfield Scott at Lundy's Lane and Andrew Jackson at New Orleans.

I am not boasting at all; I am merely answering the blind assumption—the arrogant assumption, if you please—that a man can refer to "the people of the United States" now in the year 1912 and forget that the people of the South were and are now part and parcel of the people of the United States. Whose money is this in the Treasury if it is not proportionately ours as well as yours? Who placed it there? The people who bore the taxes placed it there. It is no more your Treasury than mine; it is no more your Government than mine. I never fired a shot during the war between the States; I never smelt gunpowder. I was not 11 years old until after Johnston's sur-render. I have no doubt that if I had been born in time there might have been a different result [laughter]; the Union might have been dismembered and African slavery perpetuated upon the American continent. As Brig. Girard said in writing his memoirs, "It is a curious coincidence that the Emperor Napoleon never lost a battle when I was present and fighting." [Laughter.]

It may be merely a coincidence. Why should the Senator from Idaho begin to read me lectures at this late day? served in the "infantry" in arms, and so did he, unless I am mistaken, for he does not look like he is much older than I am, though he may be a great deal older. It may be true that if he had been born in time, too, the Confederacy would have gone down quicker. [Laughter.] I feel sometimes that the last surviving man who wants to "render treason odious" has been sent by the State of Idaho to the United States Senate; but do not make it odious on this little bit of a piece of granite that is to cost $50,000 and to be placed where? In a military park. Were the military parks intended to commemorate nothing except one side of the War between the States? Why, every military park in the country answers the Senator with marble shafts that have been erected to both. A military park is a map. Here is a monument showing where this command stood and another monument showing where that one stood, regardless of which side they served upon. Here is a road running along a certain parapet or a line of fortifications to outline it all. It is American history; it is not merely Northern Why, you are stultifying yourself. When we said we had a right, or when our forefathers said it—for I hardly said it; I could hardly be charged with it—if I said it, I merely repeated what I heard about that time. I surrendered very early, when Grierson's brigade came by on the road, great big men and great big horses, and I had had an idea up to that time-I was then about 9 years old-that a Yankee was a little fellow and that I could whip three of them. I surrendered very early. [Laughter.] When we said we had a right to set up for ourselves you denied it. Now you spend the common money collected from all of us and deny that we have parcel or lot in it.

I am not fighting any war now. I do not know whether I would have fought any then or not if I had been big enough, though, as I said a moment ago, I sometimes dream that with this eagle eye of mine and strong and stalwart right arm, if I had been turned loose upon the battle field a different story might have been recorded in history. [Laughter.] And doubt-less, upon the other side, had the Senator from Idaho been turned loose a different story would have been recorded. genius and Stonewall Jackson's valor would doubtless have gone down in very short order. I am sure if they had consented to debate the matter according to Senate rules and placed the cause on the calendar, it would have taken them a long time at any rate to overcome the Senator from Idaho. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, it strikes me that some things are said very unthoughtedly. The Senator "does not want any North or any South or any East or any West." Do not you? I do. I would not take out of the history of this country, if I could, the part that the Yankee did in building it. I would not take out of the history of this country the part that the southern country gentleman took in building it—Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Monroe and Marshall and all the balance of them. The only sort of unity that I believe in is not a unity of uniformity; but it is a unity like the unity of the ocean, infinite in seeming monotony of space as you look over it, but infinite also in the variety of its ripples and in the multitudinous laughter of its waves.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one moment I will yield. I do not think there is a single section of this country—the enterprise, the courage of the western pioneer, the conservative stalwartism of the southerner, the ingenious mind cultivation of the Yankeethat has not contributed something to make it what it is. It is one, but one in variety; one out of many, e pluribus unum, and the only unum I care anything about is the unum e pluribus. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to make a suggestion, because I do not desire to speak further upon this question I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he really thinks there is anything in the suggestion that we were not old enough to fight in the ranks? Does not the principle come to us as an inheritance and devolve upon us the duty of standing by it regardless of whether we happened to be old enough?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a word more and I am through. Would not the same argument apply to the Revolutionary War? Could any man be deprived of credit because of the fact that he was too old or not old enough?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, when a man inherits more than his father feels, he is inheriting too much. [Laughter and manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I did not-

Mr. WILLIAMS. When a man inherits more than his ancestors are willing to confess that they believe, he is inheriting too much.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Visitors in the gallery will refrain from manifestations of approval or disapproval.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think the Senator intended to say

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I mean to say is this: That those who fought the war—that is what I mean, if the Senator has misunderstood me-have buried the bitterness; they have held every year reunions of the blue and the gray, and each man is telling the other how he honors his courage and his valor; and I say that when we of the new generation talk about "inheritmore than they of the old fighting generation feel, we are inheriting too much.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, does it occur to the Senator that if he were to apply the rule and carry it out, that patriotism would cease when the last soldier who participated in that war had died?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; patriotism would not cease, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; nor patriotic views nor sentiments. Mr. WILLIAMS. Patriotism would not cease, Mr. President; but patriotism, defined to be a state of character requiring that the other side should not receive a due accord for whatever they merited because of valor and constancy and courage and sincerity-if that be patriotism, that would cease, of course; and it ought to.

What is a national park? It has monuments all around it commemorating all those that had anything to do with the battle or campaign which the national park was laid out to commemorate. Why should the Federal Government not build this monument to the Confederate Navy for $50,000, when it has built another monument to the Federal Navy engaged in the seige of Vicksburg for, I think, $200,000? I see before me an old soldier who wore the blue, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], who was in those campaigns down there, who knew just what happened with the land forces and with the naval forces; who went to a Confederate prison hospital, and who laid side by side with a sick Confederate boy—a boy who had his body servant take care of his Federal companion while he took care of himself. The men who fought that struggle with one another-and that is what I mean-learned to respect one another, and, in the course of time, though of course it took time, to love one another.

In the name of common sense, if they have buried it all; if an ex-Federal soldier who engaged in this very siege and all these battles has made this recommendation; if an ex-Federal soldier, as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, has indorsed it and voted for it; then why can not the Senator from Idaho and I, who were merely "infantry in Senator from Idaho and I, who were merely "infantry in arms," let the bill come to a vote, at least? I am not asking him to vote for it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator speaks of the occurrence of the Senator from Minnesota and the young soldier from the South lying in prison together. Why, one of the dearest friends I ever had in my life, who was associated with me personally, and in a business way as well, throughout many, many long years, perhaps more closely than anyone else, car ried the message that sent Pickett into the charge. He went from the University of Virginia into the army of the South, and served throughout the war; he was a gentleman worthy of any man's acquaintance; we lived in the same cabin, we shared the same life, and we loved each other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah! Then I conjure the Senator from Idaho, by the sacred memory of that sweet love, to let this bill at least come to a vote. I do not conjure him to vote for the bill-I conjure nobody to do that-but to let it come to a vote. and to let it be decided by the votes of those who represent northern constituencies alone. I am willing to do that unless there should be in this body some one from the South who was born and raised in the North; then let him vote.

I simply want to see how far the talk about a "reunited and the "bridging of the bloody chasm" and how far the constant talk about "the Spanish-American War having buried" all these things is lip service and how far it is heart religion. So far as I am concerned it is heart religion.

Mr. President, I ask for the regular order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

The bill goes over on objection.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—— The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that demand for a few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure. Mr. SWANSON. I do not wish to intrude myself in this I see no necessity for doing so. The Senator from Mississippi has well stated the position of the southern men in reference to this monument. It came as a gracious, magnani-mous request from a Federal soldier. It would be a poor return on the part of the South not to accept that gracious request from a Federal soldier. My only purpose in speaking at this time is because the Senator from Idaho has seen fit to allude to a bill introduced by myself as a reason why this measure introduced by the Senator from Mississippi should not

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I refrained from connecting the Senator's name with the bill in any way.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not ashamed of the bill. I introduce nothing of which I am ashamed.

I wish to say in this connection that the bill to which I refer was introduced by me at the request of a gallant, warm-hearted, brave, splendid soldier, who stated the facts recited in it. I do not know them personally. If the Senator had read the bill carefully, he would have ascertained that it contains no reflection upon the manner in which the war between the two sections was conducted.

The bill refers to a special incident of hardship suffered by 600 officers. It states that the Federal Government, laboring under the impression that there was a necessity for retaliation, on the supposition that the Confederate Government was improperly treating some Federal officers, took 600 Confederate officers and subjected them to certain treatment, as the bill states, for the purpose of retaliation, not in the ordinary course of waging war. It was ascertained that this was a mistake; that there was no occasion for it; that the Federal authorities did not approve it.

After the war was over, when these were ascertained to be the facts, as Maj. Murray states to me, he thought it proper that the Government should consider any claim for compensation that might be presented for these hardships endured—this sickness, this loss, the various uncalled-for incidents, and the unnecessary retaliation,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I withdrew my demand for the regular order, I feel at liberty to take a moment to ask the Senator if he does not think there are in the recital of the bill very serious accusations against Maj. Gen. Foster and Maj. Gen. Halleck? Does not the Senator think it is an unfortunate recital?

Mr. SWANSON. The recital possibly may be unfortunate. I can not vouch for the facts contained in the recital. Maj. Murray tells me they are true. If they are true, the conduct of Maj. Gen. Foster was more unfortunate, as it appears there.

Mr. GALLINGER. If those 600 Confederate officers sustained an injury, the North feels that tens of thousands of Union soldiers sustained an injury by way of retaliation in the prisons of the South, where they were literally starved to death. I think it is unfortunate, and I entirely agree with the Senator from Idaho, that it is unfortunate, to revive these memories by way of discussion in the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not purpose to discuss the war between the two sections. I do not wish to enter into it, or how it was conducted. I simply have been requested to introduce this bill by two or three hundred officers who think they have a special case that is isolated from the others; that they were subjected to retaliation which was not necessary. The mistakes were corrected by the Federal Government as soon as they were ascertained. The Federal Government itself corrected them. But they have no other remedy than as provided in this bill.

The Federal Government was generous enough to correct these mistakes as soon as they were called to its attention. This bill is simply presented for the consideration of the Government to correct mistakes which, if these recitals are true-and I can not youch for them-the Government itself corrected and should be glad to make amends for.

If that is reviving the embers of the war I am not aware of it. If these men suffered, and the Federal Government subsequently ascertained that they were improperly retaliated upon, I know no other place, no other tribunal, in which the matter could be presented for consideration than the Congress of the United States. I can not vouch for the facts. I have no idea, no purpose, no desire, no wish, to revive the embers of the late

Some of these gentlemen are constituents of mine. They think they have a claim. They think it ought to be presented to the Government. If they were retaliated against while helpless prisoners, and that course was afterwards ascertained to be wrong, they feel their claims should be considered and paid by the Government. I am frank to say, if the facts are as it is stated that they are, for which I can not vouch, I am satisfied that any Government would be glad to make reparation and correction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will announce the next business on the calendar.

STANDARD OIL AND AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANIES.

Senate concurrent resolution 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co., was announced as the next business in order

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

DENTAL SURGEONS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy was announced as next in

I think it due the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] that he be notified that the bill is up for consideration; or else I feel it my duty to object to its consideration to-day, because I know he is deeply interested in it. I ask, therefore, that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

PENSION BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

The bill (S. 4314) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

There are four of those special pension Mr. McCUMBER. bills upon the calendar. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has already indicated his desire to have them passed over from day to day until he can submit some remarks, I understand, concerning them. I have watched the calendar each day, as has the Senator from Georgia, and we have passed them over from day to day. If it is agreeable to the Senator, I wish he would indicate some day on which we may take them up and dispose of them. Then they can go over until that day. I am not disposed to press the bills until he is entirely ready to

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow them to be passed over, I will endeavor to-morrow to indicate a time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well, Mr. President. I will ask, then, that calendar Nos. 141, 186, 187, and 253, being Senate bills 4314, 4623, 4624, and House bill 17671, go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the bills indicated will go over. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are also two additional bills. The VICE PRESIDENT. The understanding is that all bills of the property shall go over at the request of the Senator form. of like nature shall go over at the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

PORT OF HOLEB, ME.

The bill (S. 3160) to establish Holeb, Me., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. There is an amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out section 2 in the following words: SEC. 2. That Lowelltown, Me., is hereby abolished as a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me.

And to insert:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to discontinue Lowelltown as a subport of entry whenever he may be satisfied that the maintenance of such subport is no longer necessary to the transaction of the public business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI STATE CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

CATHERINE RATCHFORD.

The bill (S. 4050) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $900 for the relief of Catherine Ratchford because of the death of her son, James Ratchford, on or about the 7th day of August,

A. D. 1895, caused by the injuries received by him on or about the 24th day of July, 1895, while an employee of the United States Government, riprapping on the Missouri River, near Leavenworth, Kans., because of the negligent and careless acts of omission of his foreman in using a rotten and defective rope after he had notice of the same and after they had promised to replace the same.

Mr. OLIVER. The bill has been read heretofore.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARBITRATION OF JUSTICIABLE CONTROVERSIES.

Senate resolution (S. Res. 176) requesting the President to make certain inquiries of the Governments of Great Britain and France touching the arbitration of justiciable controversies or disputes was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over.
The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.
The next two bills on the calendar, Senate bill 4623 and Senate bill 4624, being pension bills, will go over.

CLAIMS OF OTTAWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1014) for the relief of the Ottawa Indian Tribe of Blanchard Fork and Rouch de Boeuf was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs striking out all after the enacting clause was read on a former occasion. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced

Mr. GALLINGER. At the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

SUPPRESSION OF BUBONIC PLAGUE IN HONOLULU.

The bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $82,225 dollars, to pay to the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Co., $9,500; Prussian National Fire Insurance Co., $2,850; North German Fire Insurance Co., $8,000; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Fire Insurance Co., $8,000; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Co., $10,450; Royal Insurance Co., $25,100; Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Co., $6,900; New Zealand Fire Insurance Co., $6,025; Firemen's Fund Insurance Co., $9,250; National Fire Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., $4,150; the aforesaid sums being the amounts paid by each of the said companies on account of insurance against fire on property in the Territory of Hawaii, which property was destroyed by the Government in the suppression of the bubonic plague in said Territory in the years 1899 and 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the author of the bill to make some explanation in regard to it. It appropriates a con-make some explanation in regard siderable sum of money.

Mr. CRAWFORD. A similar bill has been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims several times. If the Senator will refer to the report attached to the bill, he will see that it is quite full and goes into all the details.

It seems that in 1899 and 1900, to stop the spread of the bubonic plague in Honolulu, the Government of the United States destroyed a very large amount of property. It created a tribunal there to appraise the value of the property and make settlement, and, with the exception of the particular claims covered by the policies of fire insurance, the claims were adjusted and paid. There was a question as to the liability of the insurance companies for the losses sustained by the destruction of the property covered by their policies, and until that question was determined the Government withheld pay-The companies were compelled to go into the courts to have the matter determined as to whether or not they were liable. In each of these cases in the suits between the property owner and the company it was held that the company was liable.

They presented before the committee satisfactory evidence showing that they had paid the amounts appropriated by the bill in satisfaction of the judgments. The committee allowed them no costs and no interest, but simply reported in favor of the payment of the actual sums which they disbursed, the Government having destroyed the property. There is a recomendation from the State Department in the different administrations since the fire occurred.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator how these buildings were destroyed. What was the method?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They were destroyed by fire.

Mr. REED. By the Government?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Fire was set by the agents of the Government in the infected districts to remove the danger connected with the spread of the plague. Some of the buildings were blown up with dynamite.

Mr. REED. Were the owners of the property reimbursed by the Government?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not in these cases. They recovered the amount from the companies. The Government withheld payment because of a question as to whether the owners of the property could recover from the companies.

Mr. REED. As I understand the Senator, the owner of a house which was burned and upon which there was insurance did not receive pay from the Government for his house?

Mr. CRAWFORD. He did not.

Mr. REED. But he afterwards recovered payment from the insurance company for the amount?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under the policy; and under the subrogation clause and the assignment made and the settlement the companies claim reimbursement from the Government. Mr. REED. So the owner of the property will not get his insurance and also get money from the Government?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, no; that is utterly impossible.

Mr. REED. It is only paid for once?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. It amounts to no more than if we had paid for uninsured property in the first instance?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is exactly true; and there are no costs and no accumulated interest allowed.

Mr. REED. One question further. Were the premiums deducted, or are they allowed the companies?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not so sure about that. There are quite a number of claims; and in going over them my recollection is that the premium is not included in the amount allowed here.

Mr. SMOOT. All were deducted.
Mr. CRAWFORD. All were deducted; I am quite sure that is the fact.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF MINES AND FORESTRY SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 13570) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). This bill has been heretofore considered as in Committee of the Whole and amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——
Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill if the title is to be changed, or did he intend that it should include Forestry Service employees?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The amendment that was adopted the other day included the United States employees in the Forestry Service. I do not think the title needs to be amended.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand the bill, it simply extends the provisions of the act of 1908 to the Bureau of Mines and the employees of the Forestry Service.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; that is all.

Mr. REED. I do not want to oppose the bill by any means, but it is manifest that certain employees would be omitted from the bill, men who were injured on the Panama Canal, who were referred to in the message of the President. I should like to ask the Senator if the bill can not be so amended as to cover those cases.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the act of 1908 covers the employees on the Panama Canal. The original act which we seek to amend was passed for the purpose of granting relief to the employees on the Panama Canal, at Government arsenals, in the Reclamation Service, and at navy yards. The bill proposes to add these other classes to that law.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, I am sorry to say I have not the details perfectly in mind; it was called to my attention, and I laid it on my desk intending to take it up; but, as I understand it, there are some half dozen or more men who were injured on the Panama Canal and who are not included within the terms of the bill.

Will the Senator permit me? Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is a general statute under which specific appropriations are made to relieve the individuals who from time to time receive injuries and are entitled to the protection of the general act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President— Mr. REED. I did not conclude my statement. My understanding is that the President in a message has recommended taking care of those particular cases, and it seems to me that this might be an opportune time to include them in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Missouri I will state that I remember very well the cases he has referred to. The accident occurred before May 30, 1908, when the law was passed, and the President recommended that special relief be given to those who were injured. That, I believe, has been undertaken to be accomplished by special bills for their relief, which no doubt will be considered by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, special bills are necessary in each case, anyway. The particular cases were named by the President; he simply called the attention of Congress to them; but provision will have to be made for all such cases by specific bills

This is an amendment of a general statute, and simply en-larges the general statute so as to bring in the Bureau of Mines and the Forestry Service.

Mr. REED. I have no desire to do anything to delay the passage of the bill; and if those other matters can not be properly included I certainly do not propose to make any objection to its LOAN OF TENTS AND COTS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Macon, Ga., in May, 1912, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk. I will state that I have conferred with the chairman of the committee and it is acceptable to the committee, and furthermore that the War Department has been communicated with and it has indicated that the provisions of the amendment could be complied with without any inconvenience or injury to the service. In the eighth line, after the word "reunion," I move to insert the words "and also such number of cots as the War Department may conveniently furnish."

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, there is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed. The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution

PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII.

The bill (S. 4360) to provide for the establishment of aids to navigation in Pearl Harbor, Hawail, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be authorized to establish aids to navigation in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, at a cost not to exceed $80,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 875) for the relief of the Mission Farm Co., Peter Volondra, and others was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated belonging to the Rosebud Tribe of Indians-in the State of South Dakota, to the following-named corporation and persons the respective amounts as follows: The Mission Farm Co., $1,835; Peter Volondra, $187.50; M. E. Robertson, $62.50; E. E. Bead, $187.50; James V. Satra, $75; Cash Rogers, $255; Ed Neiness, $87.50; Jacob Hempel, $22.50; Isaiah Davis, $187.50; Alvin Hoffman, $50; Louis Bordeaux, $1,385; Charley Pavlik, $50; George W. Coleman, $875; W. S. Hatten, $200; Frank Rothleutner and George W. Coleman, $750; Hugh Coleman, $54.50; Charles Kolkofen, $62.50; for damages caused to each of said parties by a certain fire set by the carelessness of the employees of the Government in the regular line of their duty and as incident thereto, in the Indian Service, on the Rose-bud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, and across the State line in Nebraska, on the 20th day of October, 1909.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to home-steads, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 12, after the word "lie," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the absence of said entryman or of his family from the land for a period not exceeding six months in any one calendar year shall not be held or construed as interrupting the continuity of the three years' residence required by this section, but in case of commutation the 14 months' actual residence as now required by law must be

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 3, after the word Provided," to strike out the following words:

"Provided," to strike out the following words:

That no entryman shall be required to establish residence on the land so entered within 6 months: And provided further. That where there may be climatic reasons the Commissioner of the General Land Office may, in his discretion, allow the settler 12 months from the date of filing in which to commence his residence on said land, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 21, after the word "apply," to insert the words "except that the pro-vision allowing a six months' residence during any calendar year shall apply to all homesteads," so as to make the section

Sec. 2. That all existing pending entries shall be perfected under and according to the terms of this act, except entries under section 6 of an act passed and approved February 19, 1909, and section 6 of an act passed and approved June 17, 1910, providing for an enlarged homestead, and that as to entries under said sections this act shall not in any wise apply, except that the provision allowing a six months' residence during any calendar year shall apply to all homesteads.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON OIL LANDS.

The bill (S. 3045) to provide for agricultural entries on oil lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 3, page 3, line 9, after the word "sane," to strike out:

the word "sane," to strike out:

The oil deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of law applicable thereto at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to acquire oil deposits or the right to mine and remove the oil under the laws of the United States shall have the right, at all times, to enter upon the lands selected, entered, or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for oil thereon, upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the oil deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the oil therefrom, and mine and remove the oil, upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The reserved oil deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I see by the report that this bill will apply to between three and four million acres of land.

Mr. SMOOT. It will apply to 3,800,000 acres as the department reports, Mr. President.

Mr. SHIVELY. It seems to me that at least we ought to have some explanation of the bill by the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all that the bill does is to allow lands that have been withdrawn as oil lands by proclamation of the President to be entered by an entryman who secures only the surface rights, as is the case in coal lands. The entryman secures no right whatever to the oil under the land; the Government reserves that. The bill is recommended by the department, and applies to lands located in California, Utah, Wyoming, and a number of other Western States. Those lands have been withdrawn on the supposition that there is oil under the lands, but this bill allows an entryman to enter the lands as agricultural lands, but to get title to the surface only, and the oil that may be found, if it is ever found, is reserved to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is there any statute under which the exploitation of the oil on the land may be regulated?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the statute which applies to coal lands.
Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I think I will object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

ALBERT S. HENDERER.

The bill (S. 4751) for the relief of Albert S. Henderer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Albert S. Henderer $1,572.04 for damages arising out of an injury sustained by him while employed in the east gun shop, United States Navy Yard, Washington, D. C., on the 11th of August, 1903.

ENROLLMENTS AND LICENSES OF VESSELS.

The bill (S. 4475) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the issue of eurollments and licenses of vessels of the United States" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States," approved April 24, 1906, by striking out the words "of 20 net register tons or over," so that it will read as follows:

That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to consolidate into one document in the case of any vessel of the United States the form of enrollment prescribed by section 4319 of the Revised Statutes and the form of license prescribed by section 4321 of the Revised Statutes, and such consolidated form shall hereafter be issued to a vessel of the United States in lieu of the separate enrollment and license now prescribed by law, and shall be deemed sufficient compliance with the requirements of laws relating to the subject.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

The bill (S. 3622) to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, to provide a compensation for superintendents of na-tional cemeteries, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 4875. The superintendents of the national cemeteries shall receive for their compensation from $80 to $100 a month each, according to the extent and importance of the cemeteries to which they may be respectively assigned, to be determined by the Secretary of War, except the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) Cemetery, whose compensation may be $125 per month, at the discretion of the Secretary of War; and they shall also be furnished with quarters and fuel at the several cemeteries.

And to insert:

SEC. 4875. The superintendents of the national cemeteries shall receive compensation as follows: Twenty-six superintendents, class 1, $95 per month; 20 superintendents, class 2, $90 per month; 10 superintendents, class 3, $85 per month; 14 superintendents, class 4, $80 per month; and the compensation of the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) Cemetery shall be $125 per month; and they shall also be furnished with quarters and fuel at the several cemeteries.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4875 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4875. The superintendents of the national cemeteries shall receive compensation as follows: Twenty-six superintendents, class 1, $95 per month; 20 superintendents, class 2, $90 per month; 16 superintendents, class 3, $85 per month; 14 superintendents, class 4, $80 per month; and the compensation of the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) Cemetery shall be $125 per month; and they shall also be furnished with quarters and fuel at the several cemeteries."

PRACTICE IN FEDERAL COURTS.

The bill (S. 4029) to amend chapter 11 of the Judicial Code was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend chapter 11 of the Judicial Code, entitled "Provisions common to more than one court," by adding at the end thereof new sections, to be known as section 274A and 274B, to read as follows:

Sec. 274A. In case any of said courts shall find that a suit at law should have been brought in equity or a suit in equity should have been brought at law, the court shall order any amendments to the pleadings which may be necessary to conform them to the proper practice. Any party to the suit shall have the right, at any stage of the cause, to amend his pleadings so as to obviate the objection that his suit was not brought on the right side of the court. The cause shall proceed and be determined upon such amended pleadings. All testimony taken before such amendment shall stand as testimony in the cause with like effect as if the pleadings had been originally in the amended form.

Sec. 274B. In all actions at law equitable defenses may be interposed by answer, plea, or replication without the necessity of filing a bill on the equity side of the court. The defendant shall have the same rights in such case as if he had a bill embodying the defense or seeking the relief prayed for in such answer or plea. Equitable relief respecting the subject matter of the suit may thus be obtained by answer or plea. In case affirmative relief is prayed in such answer or plea the plaintix shall file a replication. Review of the judgment or decree entered in such case shall be regulated by rule of court. Whether such review be sought by writ of error or by appeal, the appellate court shall have full power to render such judgment upon the record as law and justice shall require.

COAL LANDS IN ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 244) extending the operation of the act of June 10, 1910, to coal lands in Alabama was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that all the public lands containing coal deposits in the State of Alabama which are now being withheld from homestead entry under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operations of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883, may be entered under the homestead laws of the United States subject to the provisions, terms, conditions, and limitations prescribed in the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," approved June 10, 1910.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. A. EMBRY.

The bill (S. 183) for the relief of G. A. Embry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to G. A. Embry, of Estill County, Ky., $200 in full compensation for services rendered the United States during the War with Spain.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire what was the character of the services rendered? Is there a report with the bill? Mr. BRADLEY. The service rendered by Dr. Embry was the examination of recruits during the Spanish War. To prevent the expense of recruits going to Lexington, they were examined by Dr. Embry in Irvine, Ky., and only such men were sent to the general muster place as could pass the examination. It was a saving to the Government.

Mr. BACON. It was done by authority, was it?

Mr. BRADLEY. It was done under my order as governor of Kentucky.

Mr. BACON. It must have been properly done, then.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the bill.

Mr. WARREN Mr. President I do not be seen to be seen

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not know whether I heard the bill aright, but I understand it proposes to allow two advancements on the retired list. I inquire if the Senator who reported the bill is present?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he is not.
Mr. WARREN. I ask that the bill go over, then.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

O. C. F. DODGE.

The bill (S. 2335) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Ensign O. C. F. Dodge, United States Navy, now on the retired list, a lieutenant on the retired list, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the report read in that

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the re-

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I can make a brief statement which, I think, will satisfy him.

The bill is a very meritorious one, and was unanimously reported from the committee. Mr. Dodge was in the Navy. He became sick and had to undergo a surgical operation. He was ordered to Massachusetts, I think, and while there and before he recovered—and, by the way, he consulted physicians outside of the Navy—he was ordered to sea, although he was in no condition to perform such service. He was sent on a trip around the world. When he arrived at San Francisco he was in such physical condition that he had to be relieved; and for over 11 months, although he had passed the mental examination for promotion, he was prevented from taking the physical examination and was finally obliged to retire because of his physical condition. He is a young man and entitled to the next higher rank, but he was retired without that advancement. Other bills similar to this have been passed, and I hope this bill will also be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems that he finished his four years' academic course at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CURTIS. He finished his four years' course at the academy, and if he had not been ordered to sea he probably would have recovered and been still in the service.

Mr. GALLINGER. And during the trip, or shortly afterwards, he contracted tuberculosis.

Mr. BACON. I think the explanation is a good one. I only asked for the reading of the report because there was no information before the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSANE CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The bill (S. 316) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 4843 of the Revised Statutes," approved February 9, 1900, with reference to insane civilian employees of the Military Establishment, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act of Congress approved February 9, 1900, entitled "An act to amend section 4843 of the Revised Statutes," so as to read as follows:

That section 4843 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out the paragraph which reads: "Second. Civilians employed in the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments of the Army who may be, or may hereafter become, insane while in such employment," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Second. Civilians employed by the several Staff Departments of the Army who may be, or may hereafter become, insane in such employment, and who have no legal residence at any place within the territorial limits of the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the matter is, of course, of no importance, but the bill which has just been passed appears on the calendar as having been reported by me from the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS JOINT OPERATIONS.

The bill (S. 310) relative to joint operations of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps was announced as next in order. Mr. LODGE. I ask that that bill go over. It is a very important measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

LIGHTHOUSE TENDERS.

The bill (S. 4361) to provide for the construction of lighthouse tenders for general service was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to use the appropriation of $60,000 for a lighthouse tender for the fifteenth (now the thirteenth) lighthouse district, made by the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1319), for constructing a lighthouse tender for general service. It also authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in his disretion, to use the appropriation of $200,000 for a lighthouse tender for the first lighthouse district and elsewhere, made by the acts of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 331), and March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 970), for the construction of two lighthouse tenders for general service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPRAISAL OF UNALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Anairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "classified," to insert "or reclassified"; in line 5, after the word "appraised," to insert "or reappraised"; in line 7, after the word "reservation," to strike out "heretofore"; in line 8, after the word "entry," to strike out "which were" and insert "but";

and on page 2, line 1, after the word "entry," to insert "or where the existing classification or appraisement is, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, erroneous," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be classified or reclassified and appraised or reappraised, in such manner as he may deem advisable, the unallotted or otherwise unreserved lands within any Indian reservation opened to settlement and entry, but not classified and appraised in the manner provided for in the act or acts opening such reservations to settlement and entry, or where the existing classification or appraisement is, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, erroneous.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will explain it. I do not understand it from the reading.

Mr. DIXON. This bill, I will say, has been recommended by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BACON. That is the last statement I want to hear. I want something about the reasons for the bill, not what somebody else thinks.

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me to guide my own opening remarks, I will get down to what the bill really means. I again say that two Secretaries of the Interior have asked for the enactment of the bill. It has already passed the House of Representatives. It is to cover a certain mistake-

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a Senate bill. Mr. DIXON. Yes; but a similar bill or a bill in the same wording has passed the other House. It is to cover a condition which arises when any Indian reservation is opened to settlement. The board of appraisers appraise the land, but in every case certain Indians received allotments which afterwards may not suit them. They will then take other allotments; but the land which they first selected has never been appraised, the board of appraisers having gone out of existence. On nearly every reservation you will find from five to six or seven thousand acres of such unappraised lands. The board has died; it has become functus officio. In other cases where mistakes have been made—for instance, clerical errors—the department is powerless to afford any relief, because the classification is stratified, and there is no changing it unless the Secretary of the Interior has express authority to do so. The committee was unanimous in asking that the bill be reported; and I assure the Senator from Georgia that no more meritorious small piece of legislation is on the calendar to-day to relieve such situations that arise from the very necessity of the case.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the explanation is very clear. The Senator will recognize the importance that we should have that information.

Mr. DIXON. I am very glad the Senator from Georgia has informed himself.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

GREAT SALT POND LIGHT STATION, R. I.

The bill (S. 4576) to provide for improving the light station, moving the fog signal, and building a keeper's dwelling at Great Salt Pond Light Station, R. I., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to improve the light station, move the fog signal, and build a keeper's dwelling at Great Salt Pond Light Station, R. I., at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.

The bill (S. 4607) to amend section 3618 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the sale of public property, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 3618 of the Revised Statutes by adding at the end thereof a proviso as follows:

Provided, That this restriction shall not apply to proceeds received from contractors for bags, reels, barrels, drums, carboys, or other containers used in the delivery of material and returned to them at a price agreed on in the contract, but such proceeds shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation from which the purchase of the material was made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 6, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 5, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Architect of the universe, Father of all souls, Dispenser of all good, in whose all-encircling love we live and move and have our being, draw us by Thy holy influence close to Thee, enlarge our spiritual vision that we may understand Thy purposes more clearly and work together with Thee for the betterment of mankind in all forms and conditions of life, and Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 3, 1912, was read and approved.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer—
The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day primarily.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 366.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, and at such place or places as it may deem necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is it in order to offer any resolution prior to the calling of the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Not if anybody objects.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I should like to be heard on that

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to hearing the

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to call the Speaker's attention to the rule which authorizes the Committee on Rules to report at any time. Calendar Wednesday is the only day on which the Committee on Rules could not make a privileged report. It stands on a different footing from any other com-

The SPEAKER. What rule does the gentleman refer to?
Mr. HENRY of Texas. In a moment I will cite the Speaker to it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has reference to paragraph 56 of Rule XI, I think.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is the rule I refer to. Mr.

Speaker that rule reads:

It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules, and, pending the consideration thereof, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of. The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall provide that business under paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV shall be set aside by a vote of less than two-thirds of the Members present; nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made, as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. Speaker, there are only two limitations on that power of the Committee on Rules to report, and they are set out in the latter part of that clause. With the exception of those two limitations, the Committee on Rules has the right to call up for consideration a report at any time. The rule is just as plain as the English language can make it, and I insist that the gentleman's point of order is not well taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the rule provides that it shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules. It is also true that while the language of the rule reads that way, it is held, as the Chair will find in the manual, on the same page, that although highly privileged a report from the Committee on Rules is not in order after the House has voted to go into the Committee of the Whole. Also a conference report has precedence of it, even when the yeas and nays and previous question have been ordered. So that under the rules it is not always in order to call up a report from the Committee on Rules.

Since that rule was put in the rules the rule in regard to the Unanimous Consent Calendar has gone in, paragraph 3 of Rule

XIII, which provides:

On days when it shall be in order to move to suspend the rules the Speaker shall, immediately after the approval of the Journal, direct the Clerk to call the bills which have been for three days upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The unanimous-consent rule provides, as I have said, that immediately after the reading of the Journal the Speaker shall direct the Unanimous Consent Calendar to be called. The two rules are apparently in conflict in their wording, but, having already been held that a report from the Committee on Rules was not always in order to be called up, not in order where the House has voted to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and not in order against a conference report, it is for the Speaker to construe which of the two rules has priority; and the meaning of the rule that it is not always in order to call up a report of Committee on Rules, whether it does not mean that it is always in order unless under the rules something else has priority. In this case, under the unanimous-consent rule, the Unanimous Consent Calendar has priority.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and desiring full time to discuss and consider it, in order that we might arrive at a conclusion, I withdraw the resolution this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his resolution, and the Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

MUNICIPAL BRIDGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 16693, to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge at St. Louis, Mo.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of the bridge authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved June 25, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of two years from the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the author of the bill desires to move an amendment to which I have no objection, and that is to strike out in line 8 the word "two" and insert the word three.'

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the reason for the amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the author of the bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, the city authorities of St. Louis have requested me to offer this amendment. Under the present act the time to complete the bridge will run until the 7th of January, 1913. If the bill is passed as it is, it will be an extension of only one year. An extension of two years beyond the time which they now have is desired. I am acting at the wishes of the mayor and the council and city authorities of St.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Bartholdt, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COTTON REPORTS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14052) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue certain reports relating to cotton.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue a report, on or about the first Monday in July of each year hereafter, showing by States and in total the number of acres of cotton then in cultivation in the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue a report, on or about the first Mondays in August, September, and October of each year hereafter, showing the condition of the cotton crop of the United States on these respective dates.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue each year hereafter, immediately following the publication of the ginning report of the Census Bureau of December 1, an estimate of the total production of cotton in the United States for the current crop year.

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing provisions be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the bill provides for the publication of reports in each year hereafter. Does the gentleman from South Carolina intend to omit the publication of the reports in these months for

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I presume not. I am glad that the gentleman has suggested that, and I will try to correct that by an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we strike out the word "hereafter" in the bill wherever it occurs. It occurs three different times.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer that as an amendment. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Line 6, page 1, strike out the word "hereafter"; line 11, page 1 strike out the word "hereafter"; page 2, line 5, strike out the word "hereafter."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Lever, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PERMANENT MANEUVERING GROUNDS.

The next business was House joint resolution 178, creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of a permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and Artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, and to likewise report as to certain lands in and around the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission consisting of five officers of the Army of the United States to make a full and complete investigation and consider carefully whether or not it is advisable to make, establish, and maintain a maneuvering ground and camp of inspection, rifle and Artillery ranges for United States troops at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama. Said commission shall fully consider the advantages and disadvantages of the lands contiguous to or near the city of Anniston, Ala., for the purpose herein stated, and report fully as to probable number of acres of land necessary to purchase and the probable cost of the same, and as to all facts and conditions material to be considered in the premises. The report shall be filed in the War Department by March 1, 1912, and communicated to Congress as soon as practicable by the President.

Sec. 2. That said board or commission shall also examine carefully all lands in and around the city of Anniston, Ala., that may be proposed to be donated to the United States for the establishment and maintenance thereon of a maneuvering encampment and rifle and Artillery ranges for the assembling of troops from the group of States composed of Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina and report on the advisability of establishing such camps, rifle and Artillery ranges on such lands proposed to be donated, and whether the lands proposed to be donated are sufficient in quantity for the purpose proposed and conveniently located for use by troops from said States, and the facilities for transportation of troops and supplies to and from said lands, and such other facts as may be material to be considered in the premises.

Sec. 3. That the said board or commission shall serve without com-premises.

SEC. 3. That the said board or commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be paid actual necessary expenses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry of the author of the bill as to how much this is likely to cost?

Mr. BLACKMON. I did not understand the question.

Mr. MANN. If this commission be authorized, what will be the expense?

Mr. BLACKMON. You mean for the investigation?

Mr. MANN. Of the investigation.

Mr. BLACKMON. Perhaps $125. Mr. MANN. Well, how is it possible to make a full and complete investigation and consider carefully whether or not it is advisable to make, establish, and maintain this maneuvering ground at an expense of $125?

Mr. BLACKMON. It will be merely the expense of the railroad fare from here to Anniston, Ala., and incidental expenses of five men, and I suppose they can do it in a day, perhaps.

Mr. MANN. In a day? Mr. BLACKMON. I believe they can make the investigation in a day or, perhaps, in a day and a half.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman, who is well informed, the report on the resolution seems to indicate that the Inspector General of the Army has already been over these grounds and made a report.

Mr. BLACKMON. I will state to the gentleman that I asked for a preliminary investigation before I would ask for an official commission to make the investigation and if the proposition was not feasible I did not want to put the committee or Congress to the trouble of dealing with the question.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman in reference to the statement in the report of Inspector General Mills?

Mr. BLACKMON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In which he says concerning this proposed maneuvering ground:

The gentlemen who are desirous of attracting the attention of the War Department to this situation are prepared to donate to the Government 4,000 acres of land, and say that lands up to, say, £5,000 to 30,000 acres can be purchased at an average price of $15 per acre. They, or various land companies which they represent, own a good deal of the land, and have options on a considerable portion not owned by them.

Is it the expectation that the Government will purchase the land on which these gentlemen now have options?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will state to the gentleman that that was for the purpose of getting options on this land in order that if the Government should undertake to locate this camp they would have the lands in such shape as they could be sold to the Government at a price not exceeding perhaps $15 an acre, and it is for the purpose of a saving to the Government in the event that location is made that these options have been taken.

Mr. MANN. Now, as I understand from this report, the Inspector General thinks if these maneuver grounds or camp is established it will require 25,000 to 35,000 acres of land.

Mr. BLACKMON. No; he says this, that that amount of land suitable for this purpose could be obtained, but he does not say that is necessary. This board is to determine how many acres ought to be procured.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he does say this as to what the extent of the maneuvering grounds ought to be, that this tract is approximately 9 miles from south to north and 3½ to 5½ miles from east to west, which would indicate it would take in that amount of acreage.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would state to the gentleman he says that much land is available and suitable for maneuvering purposes and could be obtained if the Government wants it. does not say it would require that much, but that that much land is available; that a strip of land from north to south 9 miles long is available for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. Well, he refers to this tract of land as being suitable for maneuvering purposes-

Mr. BLACKMON. There are many thousands of acres suitable, but he does not say that much is required.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has given a good deal of attention to this subject and I would like to ask him this: We are now engaged in purchasing forest reservations in the Appalachian Range at a very large expense. Why is it not perfectly practicable, if it is necessary to have maneuvering grounds in that section of the country, as very likely it is, to use a portion of these Appalachian forest reserves which we propose to purchase?

Mr. BLACKMON. Well, I am not prepared to say about that.

I do know this, that the group of States

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Why put the Government to this expense of buying this maneuvering ground when she has already ample grounds, and has heretofore used them for maneuvering purposes? I refer to the maneuvering ground-not in my district, but at Fort Riley, Kans.—where they have 30,000 or 40,000 acres that they have used for many years for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman will have to ask the War Department. They say they will have to have a location situated in this group of States.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. In further explanation, I will say those grounds in Kansas have been used almost year after year for that very purpose.

Mr. BLACKMON. The War Department say they need a maneuvering ground in this group of States.

Mr. MANN. If it be a fact that maneuvering grounds are necessary in the States referred to in the report, is it not desirable, if the commission be appointed, that that commission have authority to select a maneuvering ground wherever it pleases and not confine it to the examination of grounds at a particular place?

Mr. BLACKMON. While I offered that resolution for this particular place, I would have no objection, I will say to the gentleman, to the commission making an examination of grounds in any part of this group of States that the War Department says is essential for such grounds, because I am willing to risk the report of this commission.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to bring a resolution like this up on Calendar Wednes-day, so that we could properly amend it in that the committee should have power to select a maneuvering ground in any of these States?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will say to the gentleman that a similar resolution to this has been passed by the House, authorizing the inspection of grounds in the State of Tennessee, and it does not follow that this commission is going to select this place. But I think we ought to have an opportunity to make the inspection and have a report made to the House.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for one other question? Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman states that that resolution authorized the investigation of grounds in Tennessee.

I want to say that it also included grounds in Georgia.

Mr. BLACKMON. This is a copy of your resolution.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform the House on what authority of law Inspector General Mills, or anybody else in the War Department, at the expense of the Government. made an examination of these grounds and made a report on them?

Mr. BLACKMON. I suppose he was acting under the authority of the War Department. I know he was designated and performed the work, but I did not examine the statute to see whether he had the right to do it or not. He made a favorable report, too.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think he has allowed sufficient time to this commission to make a full report by the 1st of March, 1912?

Mr. BLACKMON. The Inspector General went there and spent two days, and made his report in about four or five days.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman must allow some time for the resolution to go through the Senate and be approved by the President, and it seems to me that we allow very little time for a thorough investigation and report.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.
Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask him what he thinks about the advisability of Congress authorizing an examination of these various sites before it determines whether it wants any tracts or not. What we are trying to do now is to get the War Department to dispense with the use of property which it has maintained at great expense. Does not the gentleman think that before we authorize any survey of any place we ought to determine something of the policy that is to conrol the War Department?

Mr. BLACKMON. I would answer the gentleman by saying if I thought it involved any tremendous amount of expense to the Federal Government I might think there was something in that contention.

Mr. SHERLEY. I realize the gentleman's position, because I had the same thing put up to me a few years ago as to a similar site in the State of Kentucky. This resolution does not involve the Congress at all, but if you get a favorable report as to locality-and you can easily get it as to dozens of localities-the effect of it will be to bring a pressure on Congress so that the people in that particular vicinity may have the benefit of a Government establishment there.

Mr. BLACKMON. I am not aware, I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky, that a favorable report could be obtained on any number of sites. I did not understand that to be the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. My experience has been such that I know that when you ask a war officer not to pass upon the broad project, but simply upon the question whether a particular piece of ground is suitable for a particular purpose, he usually goes on the assumption that the Congress is favorable to the general purpose, and if he finds the topography suitable he says so, and in that way you get a favorable report.

Mr. BLACKMON. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that I think there are very few points in the United States that are suitable for this particular purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can find you a dozen in my State, with the same price of land and the same kind of topography, and I am confident that that is true also with respect to half a dozen States similar to Alabama and Kentucky. What I am pointing out is that just by such little innocent-looking bills as this we embark on a policy that involves the Government eventually in an expenditure of millions of dollars. We now have Army posts galore, and we must get rid of some of the land we own, instead of getting more land for such purposes.

Mr. BLACKMON. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky

if he did not introduce a resolution similar to this one?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not; but if I had it would have been subject to the same considerations that I am suggesting now. It should not be understood that I am blaming the gentleman. I am simply asking this House to consider the advisability of going slow in these matters. Instead of proceeding indirectly in this manner toward the acquisition of further tracts of land for military purposes, we ought to devise means for disposing of some of the tracts that we already have.

Mr. BLACKMON. This resolution does not call for the disposal or acquisition of the land. It is simply to determine whether it is a suitable place.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Kansas? Mr. BLACKMON. I do.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, for the reason that I have already suggested-and for the further reason that the gentleman in whose district the maneuvering grounds are located that I referred to a while ago is sick and can not be here, and ought to be here when this is considered—I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER, HODGES FERRY, MO.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16677) to authorize Butler and Stoddard Counties, of Misseuri, to construct a bridge acress the St. Francis River at Hodges Missouri, to Ferry, Mo.

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Butler and Stoddard, in the State of Missouri, corporations organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Hodges Ferry, Mo., in the county of Stoddard, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Adamson, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DAM ON JAMES RIVER, MO.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14484) to amend an act approved February 24, 1911, authorizing J. W. Vance and others to construct and maintain a dam and tunnel on the Big Bend of the James River, in Stone County, Mo., to create electric power.

Be it enacted, etc., That S. 574 of the Sixty-first Congress, entitled "An act to authorize J. W. Vance and others to construct a dam across the James River, in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the river again, to create electric power, approved February 24, 1911," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F. Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo.; L. B. Durnill (styled A. B. Durnill in the former act), D. H. Kemp, Sig Solomon, J. J. Davis, S. A. Chappell, and W. M. West, of Monett. Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, I. W. Jarrett (a son of the late J. H. Jarrett, deceased), of Aurora, Mo.; and William H. Standish, formerly of Aurora, Mo., now of Reeds Spring, Stone County, Mo.; L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., their heirs and assigns, be, and they are thereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam on the Big Bend of the James River at or near section 10 or 14 in township 23 north, range 24 west, in the county of Stone and State of Missouri, across the said James River, and to impound thereat such portion of its waters and by canal and tunnel to conduct the same across the Narrows from said point of said Big Bend to the said river again, as may be necessary for electric-power purposes.

"The construction, maintenance, and operation of the dam herein authorized, as well as the determination of the rights and obligations under the permission granted hereby, shall be, in all respects, in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906."

And the said act shall apply to this as of the date of the approval

And the said act shall apply to this as of the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I do not wish to object. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the words "S. 574 of the Sixty-first" and insert in lieu thereof the words "section 1 of the act of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The Public Printer seems to have gotten pretty badly mixed up on the punctuation marks in this bill, and I think they ought to be properly corrected.

Mr. RUSSELL. What is that?

Mr. MANN. I say the Public Printer has gotten pretty badly mixed up on the punctuation marks in different parts of the bill. In the first place, the title is supposed to be in quotation marks. It is not a quoted title, by the way, nor are the quotation marks in the correct place, if it were. I suggest that we strike out those quotation marks in line 4, page 1, and in line 1, page 2. The marks are not where they belong. The title is not a quoted title.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Russell], the author of the bill, who is an authority on punctuation, if he has any objection to the suggested amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to the punctuation being corrected.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the quotation mark in line 4, page 1, before the word "An," and strike out the quotation marks on page 2, line 1, after the word "eleven."

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Mr. MANN. On page 3, at the end of section 1, the Public Printer has inserted outside quotation marks where inside quotation marks should be and has inserted inside quotation marks where outside quotation marks should be. I ask that that may be corrected by the Clerk, and submit that as a part of my request.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these amendments will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, strike out lines 8 and 9 and in lieu thereof insert the following:
"SEC. 2. That the privilege granted shall cease and be determined unless the actual construction of the aforesaid dam is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 14, page 3, by striking out the figure "2" and inserting the figure "3."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This permission to build a dam across this river provides for the creation of electrical power. As I understand, we have passed what is called the general dam bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And this has reference to that, What I am getting at is this: A few weeks ago we had a discussion here in reference to the permission to take water from a Government dam.

Mr. ADAMSON. This is not a Government dam.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand that. I am coming to that. We made a good many amendments to that bill in reference to the selling of electrical power. In this case we permit, under the general law governing these subjects, the building of a dam for the creation of electrical power, but say nothing about any charge that may be made to people who buy this electrical power. I want to ask the gentleman, Is there any more reason why a grant of this kind should be made in this case than in the other case?

Mr. ADAMSON. Our idea is that this is no grant at all. This is a proposition to build a dam by private parties on privately owned land with private money. The Government, having the easement of the right to navigate the navigable rivers of the country, simply consents. That is all the Government does. It consents that these parties may obstruct the river, provided they do it in a way that will enable the Secretary of War to preserve the interests of navigation.

The Government has no participation in building this dam at all. It is not a riparian owner. It has no proprietary interests in any of the constructions. The only figure it cuts is to consent that a navigable stream may be obstructed by a dam, and it couples with that consent the condition that it shall be built in accordance with the general dam act, so that the Secretary of War may protect the interests of navigation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand the gentleman that this only permits these parties to build a dam across the river. Mr. ADAMSON. I will further answer the gentleman that this is not an original proposition. The consent of Congress was given by an act passed several years ago. The object of the present bill is to correct an error. The names of the in-corporators were erroneously printed in the other bill. The only purpose of this bill is to correct the names of those incorporators, without affecting the grant or the purposes of the other act in any way at all.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. But does it not occur to the gentleman that the same principle is involved, so far as the people of that community are concerned, in the granting of permission to build this dam that is involved in the building of the dam on the Black Warrior River in Alabama?

Mr. ADAMSON. The dam on Black Warrior River was built with Government money with a contract with private parties to lease the water power or to take the power that was furnished. There is no element of governmental expenditure in this dam at all. Sometimes it is insisted in these privately constructed dams that there should be reserved in the Secretary of War the right to regulate the rates. I do not know whether that is in the original act or not—probably not.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I think there is an easy differentiation between two principles. The original act, to which this was amendated two principles. the two principles. tory, was passed following the passage by Congress of a general dam law. After the original general dam law was passed we passed an amendatory general dam law and included in it everything that Congress was willing to put into that law. it did not go quite as far as I was personally in favor of, I think it went to the limit of what Congress was willing to do.

Mr. ADAMSON. Did it go to the extent of providing that the Secretary of War might fix the rates?

Mr. MANN. I think not. The Alabama proposition was quite a different thing. We set out the conditions. Of course, the State of Missouri under this act has full power to regulate the charges of this corporation if it is a semipublic corporation; but under the Alabama act they probably would not have had that authority. There they were given the use of something the Government was partly creating, and we set out in that act the provision under which these people were given the power. But here everything under this act is subject to the provisions of the general dam law, which are as stringent as Congress, I think, was willing to make.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield? I do not understand that there was anything in the general dam act further than to provide that the Secretary of War has the power to have this dam removed whenever, in his judgment, it becomes necessary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; there is a great deal more in it. Mr. ADAMSON. It provides every specification.

Mr. MANN. I would not say that he has the power to fix

Mr. ADAMSON. But, at any rate, this is simply to amend one part of the bill, which is already the law. That is the sole purpose of this bill—to correct the name of the incorporators.

Mr. MANN. I think it does more than that; it provides a different method of constructing the dam and conveying the water, but nothing that would injure navigation.

Mr. ADAMSON. It corrects an error in the location.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It has occurred to me that the principle of providing rates for water power to these people in Missouri is not much different from what it was in the Alabama case. Of course I realize that in the Alabama case they were taking water from the Government dam, but they were spending a great deal of money for the purpose of securing that Mr. ADAMSON. The difference is that in the Alabama case the Government was the owner as well as the governor; it owned the property as well as governed it. In this case the people own the property and are going to spend the money, and the Government has no interest in it except to protect navigation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It grants the right to build the

Mr. ADAMSON. It can not grant the right to build the dam; it simply consents for it to be built.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. If it was not necessary for the Government to grant the permit to build the dam, I think these people would not come here asking for it.

Mr. ADAMSON. As a condition of the Government's consent it says we are going to examine your specifications and see if we can not put a lock in the dam and use it when constructed.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will.

Mr. COOPER. I am not familiar with this bill, but I see the name of James River in the title, and I am led to inquire if this is not a bill somewhat similar to a bill enacted into law and then vetoed by President Roosevelt?

Mr. ADAMSON. T Mr. COOPER. Yes. That was the Rainy River bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia will permit, the James River bill was one that passed the House and was vetoed by President Roosevelt. Afterwards an arrangement was entered into in relation to the Rainy River Dam, under which the President vetoed it, and it was passed by Congress with his consent under a sort of agreement entered into by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Stevens], representing the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that certain amendments would be made to the general dam act. Those amendments were afterwards made in the general dam law and agreed to by Congress and became a law. After that the James River bill was again passed, subject to the provisions of the newly amended general dam law, and was signed by the President.

Mr. COOPER. Which President? Mr. MANN. President Taft. The new general dam act was signed by President Taft, but it covered the provisions which President Roosevelt insisted should be in the general dam law. Mr. COOPER. Did it meet fully his objections in his veto?

Mr. MANN. It did.

Mr. COOPER. What is the amendment which is made to section 1 of the act that passed the Sixty-first Congress? want to say right here that in my judgment there should be a law or a rule of this House requiring to be printed in every bill which proposes to amend an act, first, the amendment itself, and, following this, the act as it will be when amended.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will readily see that that would make statutes very cumbersome.

Mr. COOPER. It would make them very clear.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman exactly what the changes are in this bill.

Mr. COOPER. The point is that no one upon reading this bill can tell what the amendment is. There is nothing to indicate its character. Mr. MANN.

I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. I presume the gentleman can, because he is familiar with the first act, but no casual reader can. are some States that require an absolutely specific statement of the amendment itself.

Mr. DALZELL. They do in the State of Pennsylvania.
Mr. COOPER. There are in the State of Pennsylvania, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] says, requirements that every bill to amend an act shall specify, first, the amendment, and then give in detail the act as it will be when amended.

Mr. MANN. Personally, I do not think it desirable that that should go into the statutes in that shape. In making reports on important bills I used to report the bill showing by italics, capitals, and roman letters what the changes proposed were.

Mr. COOPER. That ought to be in every report and bill.

Mr. MANN. It is a very desirable thing to do.
Mr. COOPER. Because no Member of the House picking up this bill now and reading it would have the remotest idea of how the act is to be amended.

Mr. MANN. The only amendment of any importance here, first, is the change in some of the names, and, second, a change in the place where the canal and tunnel are to be constructed.

Mr. COOPER. I should think that a change in the place where the tunnel and canal are to be constructed might be of much importance. What is the change in the place?

Mr. MANN. The old law provided that the water should be impounded in what is known as the Lower Narrows of the Big Bend of the said James River, and by canal and tunnel to divert and conduct across that narrows such portion of the waters of said river through said tunnel to the river again, while this bill provides that they shall impound thereat such portions of its waters and by canal and tunnel conduct the same across the narrows from said point of said Big Bend to said river again. The War Department has reported that it is of no material difference.

Mr. COOPER. That is not very clear to a listener-I mean the proposal to carry it by tunnel across the Big Bend and back again. Mr. MANN. When the bill was originally passed we had maps of the entire region across which they propose to conduct this water to get a fall of absolutely no materiality as far as navigation was concerned, just like the construction of a dam across a river elsewhere,

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On February 5, 1912:

H. R. 11321. An act to authorize the Twin City & Lake Superior Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Croix River between Chisago County, Minn., and Polk County, Wis.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 194, granting the temporary use of certain lands in the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort Mason (Cal.) Military Reservations to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co.

The Clerk read as follows:

Exposition Co.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., a corporation existing under the laws of California, has applied for the use of certain portions of the lands of the United States military reservations at the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort Mason, Cal.; and Whereas it appears that said International Exposition Co. desires the use of said lands for temporary use for exposition purposes, and that said portions of said military reservations that are not occupied by buildings are available for such temporary use; and

Whereas it also appears that said International Exposition Co. agrees that at the expiration of the exposition, and not later than December 31, 1916, it will vacate the said lands and deliver over the same to the United States Government for the use of the War Department:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the said Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. permission to occupy and utilize for exposition purposes, and until December 31, 1916, such portion or portions of the United States military reservations of the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort Mason, State of California, as may be designated by the Secretary of War for such purposes and subject to such conditions, provisions, restrictions, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That all improvements, alterations, and additions made necessary on said Government land by its use for exposition purposes shall, on expiration of the grant hereby made, be delivered over to the United States Government by said Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. for the use of the War Department: And provided further. That all work necessary to be done to effect the removal of all buildings or improvements on said lands not desired by the War Department shall be done by the said exposition company without cost to the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire how much expense will be involved in

Mr. KAHN. No expense whatever. The ground which is referred to in this bill and which is to be turned over to the exposition company is not used by the Government at all at the present time. At certain seasons of the year it is practically under water. For many years, as the gentleman knows by reason of his having been on the Appropriations Committee so long, efforts have been made to secure an appropriation from Congress to fill in a goodly portion of this land and make it available for Government purposes. As a matter of fact, the exposition company is going to do that very work and improve this land for the benefit of the Government if this resolution is adopted. It will not cost the Government of the United States a single cent, and the Government will not only have the improvement, but all buildings of a permanent character that may be erected on this land will be turned over for the use of the War Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What work will be required on the part of the Government as a result of the passage of this resolution that otherwise would not be required?

No work whatever. Mr. KAHN.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman is informed on this subject, is he?

Mr. KAHN. I am fully informed on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me read him a letter which I have received from the Secretary of War, giving some information about the matter. He calls my attention to two items for military posts-$160,000, barracks and quarters, seacoast defenses. $30,000-

Mr. KAHN. That does not refer to improvements on this

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just pardon me; I shall read what the Secretary says:

The military reservations at Fort Mason, the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort Miley, and the Army supply depot of San Francisco are not only contiguous to but to all intents and purposes form an integral part of the Panama-Pacific Exposition grounds, as it is planned by the exposition authorities to connect all of them with a great ocean highway to follow the shore line from Fort Mason to beyond Fort Miley. The present unfinished condition of these military reservations, due entirely to lack of funds, would mar the effect of the exposition, and it is therefore most desirable that these reservations be placed as soon as possible in a condition that will be a credit to the Government when the exposition is opened in 1915.

I therefore urgently recommend that the amounts asked for in these supplemental estimates be included in the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending for t 1913.

That letter is dated January 24, 1912.

In the estimate which has been transmitted to Congress the Secretary of War makes this statement:

These items were included in the regular annual estimates for 1913, as originally submitted by the Quartermaster General, but owing to the direction of the President that estimates should be kept as low as possible and to the fact that the imperative necessity for the early undertaking of the work contemplated was not understood at the time the regular estimates were under consideration, they were stricken from the estimates submitted to Congress.

Very respectfully,

H. L. STIMSON,

H. L. STIMSON, Secretary of War.

It is quite apparent to me—it may not be to the gentleman from California—that if this joint resolution be passed an effort will be made to obtain an appropriation of $190,000 in order to make presentable the place which the Government places at the disposal of the exposition company.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The estimates referred to do not relate to anything near the grounds affected by this resolution. The ground contemplated by the resolution is the northern limit of the Presidio of San Francisco. There are no buildings on it whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that. The gentleman should not undertake to play on my apparent ignorance of the situation and say it is not near it at all.

Mr. KAHN. Fort Mason is a mile away from this land. Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that; and, as the Secretary of War says, it affects not only Fort Mason, but the Presidio and Fort Miley. The entire scheme, in fact, is an integral part of the exposition grounds. The gentleman should not assume too much innocence on my part.

Mr. KAHN. I understood the gentleman— Mr. FITZGERALD. And the War Department is now urging an appropriation of $190,000, which was not believed to be im-peratively necessary for the conduct of the public service, and it was stricken from the estimate submitted to Congress under pressure of the Executive to reduce estimates. It is now transmitted to Congress because the work upon the buildings con-templated should be finished in order to have the place presentable and creditable to the United States in connection with the conduct of this show.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it might be easier and the gentleman would be inclined to make an appropriation for him on another part of the grounds, if the Government had consented to the use of this ground?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am coming to that proposition in a moment.

Mr. KAHN. As far as that estimate is concerned, I think it was made on the representation of Maj. Gen. Murray, who went to San Francisco recently to take command of the Western Di-Some months ago, when he arrived there, he found that vision. certain improvements at Fort Mason and at the Presidio ought to be made. They were in line with certain improvements that had been recommended even long before the site of the exposition was selected. Now, those matters are before the gentleman's committee, and I think when he hears the evidence in regard to those improvements he himself will agree they ought to be made at Fort Mason and the Presidio.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have listened to the statements with regard to those improvements for several years, and the Secretary of War says they are not necessary at this time, because it was not understood in the War Department when these estimates were made

Mr. KAHN. I suppose Gen. Murray has explained the necessity for the improvement-

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). That the exposition would be affected. So far as the recommendation of Gen. Murray is concerned, let me call the gentleman's attention to the way these things happen to fit in. This joint resolution was introduced on December 20. It was reported to the House on January 18, and on January 24 the estimate and the letter which I have read were sent here from the War Department. It was due to the fact that upon investigation it was disclosed that they decided to have these grounds as a part of the exposition grounds that it was deemed desirable to have the money for completing these improvements. At the outset of this Congress, in the effort to make somewhat of a showing on reduced estimates, these estimates were eliminated. The administration did not think that there was any great necessity for these appropriations at all, but it now finds inside of a month or two that this work ought to be done in order to make the military reservations appear in such a way as would be in accordance with the dignity of the United States. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from California that we might make some agreement by which whatever money is required to do this work will be paid by the exposition company. It is only $190,000.

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as the ground covered by this resolution is concerned, there will be some $300,000, as I understand it, expended by the exposi-tion company, and the Government will get the full benefit of that. Now, regarding the improvements at Fort Mason, those improvements are absolutely necessary, and if they be not made now they must be made at some time in the future. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from New York will see his way clear in the proper appropriation bill to provide for those

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not, I will say to the gentleman from California. We are not going to appropriate $190,000 to make this show a success, if I can prevent it.

Mr. KAHN. It is not for the purpose of making the show a

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is.

Mr. KAHN. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this: The exposition grounds are flanked on either side by a military reservation of the United States. There will be thousands of people to visit that exposition who will get their first impressions of the United States by coming through the Golden Gate. They will come by way of the Orient. They will also come from Australia. It is but proper, in my judgment, that the Government of the United States should have its own fortifications and buildings for Army purposes in proper shape when these people come there,

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would make a much better impression upon those people if they were enabled to see the method adopted by the United States Government in doing work of that

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman will find that the people of an Francisco and of the State of California have raised $20,000,000 among themselves, and have not requested any money for exposition purposes from the Government of the United States. Surely there is no other city in the Union that has ever done so much for itself as has the city of San

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman should not boast about it until the exposition is over. I have heard similar tales before, and I know what followed.

Mr. KAHN. There is no indication at present that anything in the way of financial aid will be asked of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. KAHN. With pleasure.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am thoroughly in sympathy with all the efforts of the exposition company out there at San Francisco, but I want to ask a question, merely in order that the record might be made correct, as to who would benefit from this $300,000 worth of filling, which the gentleman said would redound to the benefit of the United States. Would it not rather redound to the benefit of the James G. Fair estate from the filling in of what is known as Washerwomans Bay?

Mr. KAHN. No; the gentleman is mistaken as to that. The gentleman is mistaken as to the ground affected by this reso-The land provided for in this bill lies within the Presidio Reservation. It is away down beyond the General Hospital toward the Bay of San Francisco. In the wintertime, during the rainy season, it is almost entirely under water.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was referring to the land that the gentleman spoke of as being benefited by this suction filling that they are going to do there. That is not on Government land.

It is the Fair estate that will be benefited by that,

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Within the past two or three minutes I was told by a gentleman connected with the association that the Fair estate leased this land to the exposition management on very reasonable terms because they were to be benefited by the $300,000 worth of filling in what is known as Washerwomans Bay.

Mr. KAHN. The exposition company will fill that, it is true, but-

Mr. TOWNSEND. I simply wanted to have the record straight as to that.

Mr. KAHN. The record is straight. But they also want to fill this land on Government property-not on the Fair estate This resolution provides for the use of certain Government property within the Presidio of San Francisco. It is not private property, if the gentleman will permit me to say so. He is familiar with that section of the city, just as I am. Both the property of the Fair estate and the Government property in the Presidio will have to be filled in.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is $300,000 to be expended on each of these properties?

Mr. KAHN. I am told that the estimate is about $300,000 on the Presidio land. It may be more or it may be less. At any rate, the purpose is to fill that land.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. There are two properties?

There are two altogether.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is $300,000 to be expended on the

Mr. KAHN. I can not say as to that. Of course they propose to fill in a great deal of land that is now partially submerged. The Fair estate property that the gentleman from New Jersey refers to is private property that has been leased by the exposition company as a part of its grounds. Now, the exposition company wants also to get use of the Government's property, and the War Department has no objection to that. The exposition company will also have to fill in the Government's land. There have been estimates before Congress repeatedly urging the appropriation of large sums for this very specific work that, up to the present, has never been done. Here is a chance now to have it done without expense to the Government.

Mr. MANN. Three hundred thousand dollars did not go very far toward filling in Jackson Park when the World's Fair was held at Chicago.

Mr. KAHN. The filling that will be done here will be by the suction dredge, which puts the sand from the bottom of the bay onto the land. It is rather less expensive than the usual method of filling in land.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from California, is it determined that there is really to be an exposition held at

San Francisco? [Laughter.]
Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman helped San Francisco in Mr. MANN. I have had a good deal of doubt about it.
Mr. KAHN. There is to be one. I can be about it. that particular.

Mr. KAHN. There is to be one, I can assure the gentleman, that will be a credit to the entire Nation, and a splendid Chicago citizen is now at the head of one of the important branches of the exposition. That is Mr. Skiff, who had a good deal to do with the Chicago Exposition and also with the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis.

Mr. MANN. He is a good man. Mr. KAHN. Yes; and he has s Yes; and he has suggested some splendid plans. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish the gentle-man to know that the passage of this resolution is not to be taken as an assent on the part of this House that these appropriations that they are trying to obtain now are to be made as a result of the adoption of this resolution. If he desires these improvements made, he might make the use of the grounds conditional upon the expenditure of the amount of money desired by the exposition company.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say frankly to the gentleman that this proposition was entirely separate and distinct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the exposition company did not desire to use these grounds, the War Department would not submit its estimates for these expenses in the next year, so they are not entirely separate. They are combined and dependent.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman in all fairness and frankness that, so far as these grounds are concerned, I am satisfied that the Government will receive fully a million dollars in benefits, for the reason that every building of a permanent character that is put on these grounds will revert to the Government, and I am told that there will be quite a number of very important buildings put there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Most of the buildings erected for these expositions are a menace to a place like the military reservation at San Francisco if they are permitted to remain there long. The more quickly they are removed the better.

Mr. KAHN. Those of a temporary character will be absolutely removed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will find out that any valuable building of a permanent character will not be located on Government land.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman think that the filling in

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean we should not be led into the belief that we are going to get something of value.

Mr. KAHN. I never want to mislead the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I have been listening to the debate between the two gentlemen. It seems to me that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has gone far enough to show that whatever is done is to be done at the expense of the exposition, and the Government can not be called upon, by virtue of the passage of this bill, to make appropriations in the premises. It seems to me that the gentleman has got the exposition upon the hip to that extent. I think it could be pleaded in estoppel,

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am trying to reconcile the gentleman from California to the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. KAHN. There is a committee amendment, Mr. Chairman, The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 14 by inserting after the word "additions," at the end of line 13, the words "except buildings of a temporary character."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed. On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TOWN SITE OF MIDVALE, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4246) to authorize the sale of lands within or near the town site of Midvale, Mont., for hotel purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. We have not had the bill read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and convey to Louis W. Hill, his heirs, executors, or administrators, for hotel purposes, at not less than $25 per acre, and under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, not to exceed 160 acres of land, not heretofore sold or allotted, within or near the town site of Midvale, Mont., within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, the proceeds from the sale of said lands to be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians, and used for their benefit in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That any hotel erected on said lands shall be operated by the said Louis W. Hill, his executors, administrators, heirs, or assigns, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the conduct and operation of hotels within the "Glacier National Park": And provided also, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, add to the said town site of Midvale from the unallotted tribal lands not to exceed 40 acres of land to be disposed of for town-site purposes in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., p. 1039).

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, at his discretion, to withdraw from entry and sale not to exceed 5 acres of the lands embraced within the said town site of Midvale, or any addition thereto, for use in administrative purposes of the said Glacier National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if this bill has ever been referred to the Department of the Interior and a report had from that department?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that it has been referred to that department and has been favorably reported.

Mr. MANN. Why do we not have the report of the department printed in the report of the House committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. That was an oversight that it was not embraced in the House report. It is in the Senate report.

Mr. MANN. That oversight ought to have been discovered and the report of the Interior Department printed. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but unless committees can furnish information to the House when they ask for information from the departments I think hereafter I shall have to object to unanimous consent to the consideration of those bills, because we are entitled to that information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I know that is the best practice, but the report of the Interior Department having been included in the Senate report, and that report being before the committee, it was not printed in the House report.

Mr. MANN. It is customary in these cases to insert the Senate report as part of the House report. Members of the House ought not to be required, when they have a House report on a bill, to go over to the Senate and get the Senate report. I understand how these things happen. I do not desire to criticize the committee, but I simply call attention to the fact.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I know it was a mistake, and an oversight on the part of the person who drafted the report.

Mr. MANN. Usually the clerk of the committee makes up the report, and the clerk of the committee ought to be instructed

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There was no objection to the bill from any source. It passed the Senate and was unanimously reported by the House committee with certain amendments.

But there is nobody here that has any informa-Mr. MANN.

tion on the subject.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are able and willing to give it to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to ask about the price of land; it proposes that this shall be sold at not less than $25 an

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have an amendment to offer, that it shall be appraised. It is a desert country, and we understand that there are only two houses at this place called Midvale. Two or three years ago a town site was laid off at this point, and under the instructions of the Secretary of the Interior it was offered for sale. No sales were made, and the land has neither timber nor water nor mineral. It is on a high mesa and is undesirable. It adjoins Glacier Park, and the value of the place is due to the fact that people leave the railroad at this point in order to go and see this beautiful Glacier Park.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is the land such that it may be sometimes irrigated?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. From no known source. have sunk wells, but got no water. There is no river near there and no source from which water can be derived.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Why is it that they want 160 acres? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It was thought better for the Indians to sell a block of 160 acres, and the Secretary of the Interior can do so or he can sell only land enough for a hotel.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. They may sell, then, only an acre or two?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; but my information is that people will not now get off to go to this Glacier Park because there is nothing there but a depot and a section house, and it is impossible to do anything until some man builds a hotel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by inserting after the word "purposes" the words "at a price to be fixed by appraisement."

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the word "fixed" may be properly spelled in the amendment. It is misspelled in the bill

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Indians," strike out the comma and insert a colon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Indians," strike out all down to and including the word "Interior," in line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEAMER "ARTHUR H. HAWGOOD."

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3870) to grant authority to the Inland Steamship Co., of Indiana Harbor, Ind., to change the name of the steamer Arthur H. Hawgood to Joseph Block.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application to the owner, the Inland Steamship Co., of Indiana Harbor, Ind., to change the name of the steamer Arthur H. Hawgood, official No. 204631, to Joseph Block.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present considera-tion of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Alexander, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEAMER "W. R. WOODFORD."

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3869) to grant authority to the Inland Steamship Co., of Indiana Harbor, to change the name of the steamer W. R. Woodford to N. F. Leopold.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application by the owner, the Inland Steamship Co., of Indiana Harbor, Ind., to change the name of the steamer W. R. Woodford, official No. 205250, to N. F. Leopold.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEAMER "HENRY A. HAWGOOD."

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 3580, an act to authorize the change of name of the steamer Henry A.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Hubbard Steamship Co., of Mentor, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Henry A. Hawgood, official No. 203582.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, Members will observe that in the two bills already passed just prior to this, where the names of certain steamers are changed, that one name is taken away and another name is given. This bill provides for a change; that is, it proposes to take the present name of the vessel away, but does not give the steamer any new name. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Howland] introduced in the House a bill of like character. I propose that this steamer should have a name, and I propose to offer an amendment that it shall be named "Paul Howland." [Applause.] This is a most excellent name, a euphoneous name, a popular name

Mr. KENDALL. And the name of an excellent man.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. He is a very excellent man, and the giving of such a name to the vessel would add to the popularity of the vessel and to its receipts. And I shall at the proper time offer that as an amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Ohio is here, and if that is agreeable to the steamship company I shall have no objection. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will inquire of the gentleman how the bondholders will know the new name of the vessel? In the two previous bills which were passed the new name is placed in the bill. There are bonds out on this vessel. How will the bondholders know the new name of the vessel?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suppose they will certify the new name to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor before he will authorize the change, according to the provisions of the bill. There will be no trouble about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the period after the last word and add the words "to Paul Howland."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the honor intended to be conferred upon me by this amendment, but I understand that this is a fairly good ship, and I should hate to have its safety imperiled by compelling it to carry the name suggested in the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I am not entirely satisfied that the name would be satisfactory to the owners of the vessel, and I trust that the House, on my urgent request, will vote down the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that this is a high-class steamer, and a good one. If she were not a good steamer, I should not think of christening her "Paul Howland." It is because she is a good steamer that I think she ought to have a good name and an excellent name. The gentleman is overmodest, and I trust the House will overrule his modesty and accept the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to determine yet whether this is facetiousness or seriousness, but it occurs to me that if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Howland] has introduced a bill similar to this in behalf of a constituent of his and then goes back home and the constituent finds that he has inserted his own name into the bill, contrary to the wishes of the constituent, he will not receive that warm reception from the constituent that he hoped to receive when he introduced the bill.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. But it would not be done with the gentleman's consent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it would be impossible to make the constituent believe, if the name of the honorable gentleman was inserted in the bill, that it is not done at his suggestion or connivance. It may not be the case, but "out home" they would think it was. The gentleman from Ohio would be charged with having brought in a bill, leaving the new name of the steamer blank, and with having suggested to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] that the name of the author of the bill be inserted in the bill.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. But why does the gentleman from Illinois worry about it?

Mr. MANN. Because I am a friend of the gentleman from

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. So am I.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; and to protect him I do this. I am afraid the gentleman from New York is trying to involve him in trouble at home.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS CALUMET BIVER AT NINETY-SECOND STREET, CHICAGO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16675) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bascule bridge across the Calumet River at Ninetysecond Street, in said city.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Chicago, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bascule bridge and approaches thereto across the Calumet River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Ninety-second Street, in said city, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

CERTAIN FURNITURE, ETC., TO THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18794) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General to deliver to the governor of the State of New Mexico, for the use of the State, certain furniture and furnishings, law books, and typewriters.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the governor of the State of New Mexico, for and in behalf of said State, all the furniture and furnishings now the property of the United States and at the present in the capitol building at Santa Fe, in the State of New Mexico, and which have been purchased from time to time under the authority of an act (H. R. 18166) entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 20, 1910.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 21, strike out the words "the officials of the" and insert therein in lieu thereof, after the words "United States," the words "courts and judicial officers," so line 21 will read "present use of United States courts and official officers within the."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Floor of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN FURNITURE, ETC., TO THE STATE OF ARIZONA

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4351) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the governor of the State of Arizona, for the use of the State, certain furniture and furnishings.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the governor of the State of Arizona, upon the admission as a State into the Union of the Territory of Arizona, for and in behalf of said State, all of the furniture and furnishings now the property of the United States and at present in the capitol building at Phoenix, Ariz., and which have been purchased from time to time under the authority of an act (H. R. 18166) entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 20, 1910.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the governor of the State of Arizona, for and in behalf of said State, upon the admission as a State into the Union of the Territory of Arizona, all of the furniture and furnishings in the capitol building at Phoenix, Ariz., now the property of the United States, and which have been purchased under the authority of the several congressional acts which have had for their purposes the direction and control of the affairs of the Territory of Arizona.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2, after line 14, add as a new section as follows:

"Sec. 3. That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in so far as the property hereinafter described is, in his judgment, not needed for the present use of the officials of the United States within the State of Arizona, to deliver to the governor of the State of Arizona, for and in behalf of said State, all law books, typewriters, typewriter desks, letter presses, and other furniture and furnishings now the property of the United States, and now in possession of the judges and clerks of court in the several judicial districts of the Territory of Arizona."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the same amendment I offered to the other bill.

Mr. MANN. What is the meaning of the amendment, may I ask the gentleman? It is not printed—

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The meaning of the amendment that is printed?

No; what is the purport of the amendment Mr. MANN.

which the gentleman offered before and now offers to this bill?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It just makes this language a little clearer. The change in the phraseology was upon the suggestion of the Attorney General.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, in line 21, strike out the words "the officials of the" and insert therein in lieu thereof after the words "United States" the words "courts and judicial officers," so line 21 would read: "present use of United States courts and official officers within the."

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Flood of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TENURE OF THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress from the further consideration of House resolution 394 and to agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] moves to suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress from the further consideration of House resolution 394 and pass the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 394.

Resolved. That, in the opinion of this House, the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions.

A second was demanded by Mr. Norris, Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts, and Mr. Mann.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present. A resolution of this importance ought not to be considered unless there is a quorum of the House here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] demanded a second, as did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner].

Mr. MANN. I do not care about demanding a second as long as somebody has control of the time.

Mr. NORRIS. Neither do I.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was first on his feet. Without objection the second will be considered as ordered.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] raises the point of no quorum. It is evident that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and fifty-five gentlemen have responded to their names-a quorum.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that second be considered as ordered. Mr. SIMS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Slayden, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. NORRIS, as tellers. Those in favor of seconding the motion will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 90.

So a second was refused.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No quorum, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr.

Speaker.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 51) to provide for the forfeiture of rights of way granted to railway companies across Indian lands, with committee amendments, and another amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House adjourn. Pending that, the Chair lays before the House the following personal requests:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hughes of Georgia requests leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. Kitchin requests leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the requests will be

SUGAR IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 510).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State in regard to information collected by the department concerning sugar in foreign countries.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 293).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith three reports from the Commission on Economy and Efficiency. They relate to the following subjects:

1. The centralization of the distribution of Government publications.

The use of window envelopes in the Government service.

3. The use of a photographic process for copying printed and written documents, maps, drawings, etc.

The first report recommends that the work of distributing documents be centralized in the office of superintendent of public documents in the Government Printing Office as a substitute for the present method of distribution by each of the departments, offices, and bureaus issuing such documents. The plan does not contemplate any change in the authority which determines the persons to whom documents shall be sent, but only that the physical work of wrapping, addressing, and mail-ing the documents shall be done at one place, and that the place of manufacture.

Documents are now printed and bound at the Printing Office and conveyed to the several departments and bureaus, where they are wrapped and addressed and sent to the post office, and afterwards from the post office to the railroad station, which is near the Printing Office. One result of the proposed plan will be to eliminate this unnecessary transportation of the large number of documents annually issued by the departments. Departments will be relieved of the trouble and expense of handling, storing, and accounting for documents; a better con-trol can be exercised over the number of copies of a document to be printed at one time, or, when printed, the number to be bound from time to time; and the accumulation of undis-tributed copies of the same documents in several offices will

The centralization of the work of wrapping and addressing documents will permit the use of the most improved mechanical devices and a saving of labor that is not possible when the work is done in many offices.

I approve this recommendation of the commission and commend it to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

The report on the use of the window envelopes is transmitted for the information of the Congress.

The report relative to the use of a photographic process for copying printed and written documents, maps, drawings, etc., is transmitted also for the information of the Congress. It does not require legislation. The attention of all departments has been called to this improved method of securing copies, which heretofore have been made by hand, at a cost many times greater than is incurred by the photographic process. The report of the commission indicates that the adoption of this labor-saving device has resulted in a large direct saving in expense in the departments.

RIGHTS OF WAY ACROSS INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that gentlemen are very anxious to pass the bill which was just a moment ago before the House and that there is a unanimous report from both sides. I will withhold the motion to adjourn for the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota will make his motion again.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 51) to provide for the forfeiture of rights of way granted to railway companies across Indian lands, with the amendments of the committee and with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amended bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 51) to provide for the forfeiture of rights of way granted to railway companies across Indian lands.

A bill (H. R. 51) to provide for the forfeiture of rights of way granted to railway companies across Indian lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That each and every grant of right of way or of grounds for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side tracks, turnouts, and water stations, hereinafter referred to as station grounds, heretofore made by any railway company under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1899 (30 Stat. L., p. 990), entitled "An act to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 225), or under the act of Congress approved February 28, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 43), entitled "An act to grant the right of way through Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory to the Enid & Anadarko Railroad Co., and for other purposes," or any other act of Congress granting a right of way for railroad purposes across any Indian lands or Indian allotments, where such railroad has not been constructed, or such station grounds have not been utilized for the purposes named in said acts, and the period of five years next following the approval by the Secretary of the Interior, as required by said act of March 2, 1899, or the filing in the Department of the Interior, as required by said act of way and station grounds granted under any other act of Congress as definitely fixed and determined in the manner provided in the particular act granting the right of way and station grounds, has now expired, shall be, and hereby is, declared forfeited to the United States to the extent of any part of such located line now remaining unconstructed, or of any part of such located line now remaining unconstructed, or of any part of such located line now remaining unconstructed, or of any part of such located line now remaining unconstructed, or of any yation grounds not utilized as provided for in said acts; and the United States hereby resumes, on behalf of the tribe or nati

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is fully expressed in the report which accompanies it. Briefly, I may say it is simply to extend the law applicable to the forfeiture of railway rights of way across the public domain to the Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments. I think that expresses substantially what the bill does. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and manifestly it is a measure that ought to be enacted into

With that statement, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

House joint memorial 6.

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending before your honorable body a bill entitled "A bill providing for the erection of an American Indian memorial and museum building in the city of Washington, D. C.:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of an American Indian memorial and museum building in the city of Washington, D. C., in which to safely keep such relics of husbandry, art, literature, handiwork, warfare, and the chase as may be contributed by the Improved Order of Red Men of the United States and such other kindly disposed associations and persons. Said building shall be erected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and be under his supervision and control."

And whereas the said memorial is intended for and will keep in perpetual memory the thousands of relics of husbandry, art, literature, handiwork, warfare, and the chase of the original owners and rulers of our great country; and

Whereas these said relics of husbandry, art, literature, handiwork, warfare, etc., are largely in the hands of private persons and societies, and would be deposited in a public museum if opportunity were offered, so that all people visiting our National Capital may have the opportunity and privilege of seeing and enjoying the same: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Idaho hereby respectfully urge that the said bill be enacted into law; and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward copies of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to our Representatives in Congress.

This memorial passed the house of representative on the 31st day of January, 1912.

This memorial passed the Senate on the 31st day of January, 1912.

L. H. Sweetser,

I hereby certify that the within joint memorial 6 originated in the house of representatives during the special session of the eleventh session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

Sceretary of State.

Senate joint memorial 1.

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a bill known as the Underwood bill is now pending in Congress of the United States, which said bill provides for a reduction of the tariff on lead and zinc ores; and

Whereas the State of Idaho ranks second in the States of the Union in the matter of lerd production, with a gross output during 1911 approximating 270,000,000 pounds, and in addition thereto has a large resource of zinc ore, representing for the year 1911 a gross metal content of approximately 10,000,000 pounds speiter; and

Whereas the mining and development of these ores and metals, next to agriculture, forms the most important industrial resources of the State, employing large amounts of capital and labor, and is susceptible of continued expansion; and

Whereas said Underwood bill, if passed, would result in great detriment to the State of Idaho by reason of the fact that the great mines of this State can not successfully operate if said bill becomes a law, and by reason of the fact that such law, if passed, will prove disastrous and a ruinous blow to the mining operations in this State by resulting in the closing of practically all of its lead and zinc mines, and will prove a blow to American labor through the reduction of wage scales and the employment of cheap peon labor of Mexico and Spain to the great degradation of the American laborer and his proper standard of living, and to the great economic and social loss to the State by reason of the consequent impairment of its development and citizenship: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, That we most respectfully urge upon the Senate of the United States that the tariff schedule upon lead and zinc be not changed, but that the same be allowed to remain as it now exists.

The secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward copies of this memorial to the Senate of the United States and to in Congress.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate the 30th day of January, 1912.

L. H. SWEETSER, President of the Senate. This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives the 30th day of January, 1912.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that senate joint memorial No. 1 originated in the senate of the special session of the eleventh session of the legislature.

RECEIPTS FROM SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR IRRIGATION WORKS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bill (S. 5062) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, introduced yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Brown], seems to have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It should have been referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
The VICE PRESIDENT.

Without objection, the order changing the reference will be entered.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. ROOT. I present a large amount of literature on the arbitration treaties, being articles, addresses, newspaper comments, and so forth. I ask that the papers be printed as a document, and, owing to their bulk, it is proper that the request be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the papers will be referred to the Committee on Printing for future action.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending arbitration treaties as in open executive

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it is not my intention to-day to enter upon any elaborate analysis of the pending arbitration It is rather my object to give a general survey of the growth of arbitration and its applicability to present conditions, together with some statement of the exceptional importance which this subject has recently assumed. It is my conviction that among questions of foreign or domestic policy now pending before the Congress these treaties assume the foremost importance.

In different eras in the world's history progress has been very marked in particular lines. At one time, as in the fifteenth century, it was in the direction of the discovery or exploration of portions of the earth. At another time inventions and the great forces of nature have been utilized for the satisfaction of human wants and the improvement of conditions. In other instances there has been a great advance in knowledge or in a more general appreciation of human rights and an increased measure of personal liberty. At still other times there has been progress in popular government or in the better organization of industry and commerce.

It was the distinctive feature of the nineteeth century that progress was very plainly in evidence in all directions which make for human betterment, and this magnificent development is all the more marked in the first 11 years of the twentieh century. Popular government is gaining ground all over the world. In the last 10 years, even in remote portions of the earth where despotism had prevailed from time immemorial, the people have been asserting their right to rule. Everywhere there is prevalent a disposition to give greater equality of opportunity and to establish a higher standard of peace and

That to which I wish to call especial attention is the fact that there has been more progress in the peaceful settlement of disputes by arbitration during the last 12 or 13 years than during any entire century preceding. It perhaps is not an exaggeration to say that in practical results more has been accomplished during the period beginning with 1898, than in all the centuries preceding. Undoubtedly wars may occur, there may still be slaughter and destruction, but the movement toward mutual good will among rival nations and the promotion of greater equality of rights as between the strong and the weak is becoming irresistible. No sovereign and no nation can afford to stand in its way or stay its progress.

Many of the former occasions for war have disappeared. Save in isolated instances, wars on account of religion have There is no longer an attempt on the part of one civilized country to subdue and annex the territory of another, because a balance of power is insisted upon by the whole concert of nations. While there are still uprisings and wars for a greater degree of popular rights, greater liberty is now more generally sought by agitation and by education. There are no incursions of barbarians upon civilized peoples, such as those of the Goths, the Huns, and the Vandals in the olden time. No uncivilized people would make the attempt unless actuated by despair. The kind of aggression which seems to find the greatest degree of extenuation among civilized nations is that of wresting territory from the uncivilized or partially civilized peoples. Unfortunately, this year, 1912, is witnessing a war of that character. The excuse for the attack of more advanced nations on those still living in a condition of semibarbarity, is that, with the pressure of population upon the earth's surface a people who do not utilize its treasures and resources, who do not keep pace with the march of human progress, must yield their territory to those more advanced in civilization.

Possibly, if we were to engage in arguments on that subject, the fact would be brought to our attention that we drove the American Indian from his ancient habitation and that for similar reasons and under like conditions it is justifiable to go into the equatorial and other regions of the earth and there appropriate valuable lands and territories which have thus far been kept out of use. It is to be hoped that not by conquest but by the spread of knowledge and the better understanding of their own destinies those peoples will raise themselves out of bar-There has been of late most notable progress among less developed peoples. The case of Japan is a most remarkable illustration. Sixty years ago her people were isolated from the rest of the world; there was only a partial civilization; but that country has now brought herself into the very forefront among industrial and commercial people, and her prowess in war is universally recognized. The lover of peace must hope that not by the subjugation or conquest of these less advanced peoples, but by more pacific means civilization may be spread throughout the remotest regions of the earth.

I desire briefly to survey some of the reasons why over such widespread areas and for so many centuries war has been so prevalent. We can look back to crude conditions when, without means of communication or association, it was impossible for people to understand each other. A spirit of antagonism and repulsion existed between races and countries. Added to that there was no appreciation of the advantages of cooperation in society; there was an entire absence of any authoritative tribunal for the settlement of disputes, not only between nations, but even between individuals. Besides, for long centuries war was the easiest means of obtaining spoil, and perhaps we may even say the means of subsistence. Oftentimes the people of the plains, devoted to the pursuits of agriculture, lacked prowess and ability in war, which made them the prey of those living on the mountains or in countries less advanced in cultivation.

The triumphs of science have partly remedied this situation. Better equipment for war, the abundance of supplies and resources, and the development of staying qualities have become the requisites for successful warfare. The most striking feature of this long-continued development is that with each invention the industrial classes have assumed a greater degree of prominence. They have demanded a greater share in the government, a larger degree of individual liberty, until their influence has become exceedingly potent in the affairs of nations. Kings and sovereigns have come to realize that prosperity depends not upon mere prowess in war, but in the development of national resources and the promotion of peaceful pursuits, Thus, men have ceased to be warlike in order to become industrial; they have left their barbarity that they may secure the rewards of civilization.

Perhaps the most potent factor in all those developments which make for international good will, for the mitigation of asperities and the removal of misunderstandings, has been improved means of communication by the steamship, the railway, and the telegraph; and here, at the beginning of this twentieth century, all these great improvements are promoting a more peaceful disposition among nations. The feature, however, which is discouraging is that of an armed peace, a pre-paredness for war, as the result of which year by year improved methods of equipment for warfare require the discarding of the old and constructing anew on a more colossal scale. This factor has shown its increasing effect in the last 20 years, and now millions of men are withdrawn from peaceful employment to be numbered among armies. Compulsory service prevails in many nations, and there is an annual burden of expense resting upon the nations of Europe and the United States amounting to approximately $2,000,000,000.

It is impossible for us to exaggerate the extent to which measures to avoid increased taxation have been associated with the advance of human liberty and a greater degree of progress among the nations. Sordid though it may seem, John Hampden gave his adherence to new principles of liberty because he was unwilling to pay a few shillings of ship money. Our Revolutionary fathers refused to pay a stamp tax or a tax on tea. Among the motives which prompt human activity we must admit that the pressure upon the purse is a most important one; and as it is sometimes darkest before dawn, so we may be sure that the present enormous taxation for maintaining military establishments is sure to have its effect in stimulating the movement for arbitration and for peace.

We may also rely upon other influences which should commend themselves to us more forcefully-the growth of knowledge, so that men are now ruled rather by ideas than by the sword; the realization that all men have a common destiny, which more and more is dawning on all peoples; and the mighty influence of the Christian religion to draw men away from bloodshed into the paths of peace.

It is my desire, Mr. President, to review briefly the progress of arbitration from the beginning. There are three standpoints from which we must view this subject. First, are the arbitrations national or international? Second, do they provide for specific difficulties or establish a method for the settlement of all differences? Third, do they refer to past or future controversies? Arbitration was not unknown in the ancient world. Even Cyrus left the settlement of a dispute between Persia and Assyria to a prince of India. Pericles was commended because of his willingness to leave the contentions of Athens to arbitration. Philip of Macedon on one occasion signified his willingness to submit a dispute to impartial judges. Thucydides quotes the king of Sparta as saying: "It is wicked to proceed against him as a wrongdoer who is ready to refer the question to an arbitration."

It will be noted, however, in examining into the cases in which arbitration was tried in Greece, that it was rather inter-Hellenic than international. In his handbook upon Grecian Political Antiquities Mr. Gustave Gilbert, a German publicist, gives the following brief description of the practice of arbitration among Greek States:

When between two States there arose difficulties which could not be adjusted through friendly negotiations, then, in order to avert war, a decision was sought from an international arbitration court; and not infrequently such recourse for the settlement of disputes that might arise was stipulated for in the peace treaties between the contracting parties.

This arbitral decision the refreel to secont which projudiced the arise was supulated for in the peace treaties between the contracting parties.

This arbitral decision, the refusal to accept which prejudiced the claim of the party so refusing, and which refusal was inadmissible in law, was intrusted either to a private individual of eminent distinction, or even to the Delphian Oracle, or to one or several States. When one or several States were intrusted with the decision, the State or the respective States to the controversy laid the matter before a commission especially appointed for the purpose, or before either a court already in existence or one to be organized for that purpose. And before this court the contending States presented their case through advocates, according to whose evidence the arbitral court rendered its judgment.

The contending States sometimes guaranteed compliance with this judgment by depositing a sum of money, which was forfeited in case of noncompliance with the judgment. In general, however, compliance with the judgment depended on the good will of the States concerned, since manifest prejudice in the decision of the umpire must certainly have been unusual.

There has been recently unearthed in some old monuments an instrument of arbitration between Samos and Priene in regard to the possession of a fort named Karion and the land surrounding it.

Direct negotiations failed to adjust the controversy, and Samos and Prienè submitted it to a Rhodian commission, consisting of five judges, which visited the disputed localities, listened to the claims of either party on the spot, and finally decided the controversy in the Artemision at Ephesus.

The inscriptions setting forth the arbitration are unfortunately imperfect, but enough is preserved to show the origin and nature of the controversy, the proceedings, and the award.

"The question at issue," says Mr. Hicks, "was the ownership of Karion and its neighborhood."

The heading of the Rhodian award is happily preserved and is very explicit. After giving the names of the five arbitrators and of the delegates from Samos and Priene, respectively, and having stated the circumstances under which the award was delivered, the Rhodians proceed to affirm in brief that they hold the claim of Priene to Karion and its environs to be fully proved (lines -27). They add that they have made two copies of the award and have delivered one to the authorities at Samos and the other to the authorities at Priene (lines 27-Then there follows a recital at length of the arguments that had been employed on either side (lines 45-154). the arbitrators sum up and pronounce judgment in favor of Prienè (lines 154-157). Appended was a specification of the exact boundaries between the Samian and Prienian lands.

So it will appear, Mr. President, that at this early time, some three or four hundred years before the Christian era, means for arbitration, leaving the question to a State or city, to judges selected beforehand, or those selected by the States or cities. were in vogue in the Grecian world, although never practiced between a Hellenic and a non-Hellenic State.

There were not lacking instances of arbitration among the early peoples of Italy, sometimes under compulsion. There were similar agreements entered into in the Middle Ages among the dismembered nations and communities of the Roman world. Here the possibility of judicial adjustment rested on the prevalence of similar systems of jurisprudence and upon a degree of similarity in language and customs. There has been no epoch so remote or so lacking in civilization but that some statesman could be found who entertained views upon this subject as humane as those of this modern day.

Cromwell, while lord protector, soon after the year 1650, took a very advanced step by entering into arbitration treaties with five countries—with the Netherlands, Denmark, Portugal, France, and Sweden. All these treaties, however, related especially to the seizure of property at sea in time of war, and all referred only to past disputes. There were not lacking philanthropists and publicists, some of them even before the time of Cromwell, who were blazing the way, sometimes as idealists, sometimes with an element of the visionary, not only for the settlement of disputes by arbitration, but for an international parliament.

A plan ascribed to King Henry IV of France, though perhaps framed by some of his ministers, proposed a division of the whole of Europe among 15 Powers, these Powers to have a general council, representing the States of all Europe, which should pacify quarrels and oversee the civil, political, or religious affairs in Europe, whether internal or foreign.

Hugo Grotius advocated a system of arbitration. de St. Pierre advocated a permanent or perpetual union be-tween certain Christian sovereigns, each of whom should be contented with the territory he actually possessed, and who should be represented by deputies in a perpetual congress or Our own William Penn proposed a European diet or parliament, which was to meet yearly, or once in every two or three years at the furthest. A sovereign who refused submission should be compelled to submit his contentions to the diet. The plan for the diet and its deliberations was worked out in great detail. "To avoid quarrels for precedency"—that is, among the representatives—"the room for assemblage might be round and have several doors to come in and go out at." More recently, elaborate plans for the settlement of international disputes and for meetings in furtherance of the common interest were devised by the philosopher, Immanuel Kant, by Jeremy Bentham, and by Profs. Bluntschli, of Germany, and Seeley, of England. I am giving only a very imperfect list of those who proposed more or less elaborate plans for the peaceful settlement of disputes, coupled in many instances with propositions for an international legislative body.

From the time of Cromwell for about 140 years all movements for arbitration seem to have been suspended. In the year 1794, however, a very advanced step was taken, which may be called the classic example for modern arbitration treaties. I refer to the Jay treaty with England in 1794, which brought so much obloquy upon its author and caused so much opposition to Washington. This treaty, in three articles, provided for the settlement of boundary disputes, claims preferred by British creditors, and particularly claims based upon irregular or illegal captures or condemnations of vessels and other property. Outstanding difficulties were to be settled by means of mixed commissions. The provisions of this treaty were carried out, and led to the settlement of many perplexing questions, all of them, however, relating to past disputes.

A great impetus was given to arbitration at the close of the Napoleonic wars. It would seem that in this titanic struggle a final effort was made to obtain the mastery of Europe by force of arms; and at its close the nations, softened by calamity and exhausted by years of constant strife, concluded it was better to dwell together in amity.

From the treaty of Vienna we may date the more effective adoption of the idea of the balance of power in Europe. Since that time no nation has been justified in going to war except upon grave provocation. In some instances where territory has been annexed as the result of war, as in the case of the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine by Prussia, or Germany, in the war of 1870-71, and in the case of the annexation of Lombardy and Venice to Italy, there existed a prior claim to the territory. There have been other instances in which, although one nation had netably triumphed, it was allowed to gain no considerable territorial or other advantage. As examples of this, I may mention the war between Russia and Turkey in 1878-79 and the war of 1894-95 between Japan and China, after which three nations-Germany, France, and Russia-intervened and forbade the acquisition of territory conceded to Japan by China.

This period is rich in instances in which the most irritating questions have been settled by arbitration. Probably disputes about boundaries have furnished the basis for the largest number of arbitrations. Next come indignities to citizens, pecuniary claims, seizures at sea, unlawful harboring of privateers, or their construction or sale. The treaty of Washington, in 1871, provided for the settlement of the so-called Alabama claims and claims for depredations committed by other vessels which had been harbored in English ports or which had been fitted out therein. The result was the payment to the United States of an indemnity award of $15,500,000.

Contemporaneously with these arbitrations, which pertained either to specific difficulties or to past disputes, there was a potent movement for a larger scope in the peaceful settlement of controversies between Nations. Mr. William Jay, president of the American Peace Society, a worthy son and successor of John Jay, in the year 1842, in a pamphlet which had very wide circulation at home and abroad advocated a comprehensive plan to include every species of quarrel. The title of this pamphlet was "War and Peace, the Evils of the First, and a Plan for Preserving the Last." Propositions were made in 1840 by Richard Cobden, in the House of Commons, for the future settlement of all disputes. These propositions were not adopted. There was, however, one treaty in which our own country had part, which stands out prominently as a beacon light in the cause of arbitration. That was the treaty of Guadaloupe-Hidalgo, in 1848, on the occasion of peace with Mexico. I desire to read Article XXI because it is a very proper basis for arbitral agreements.

If unhappily any disagreement should hereafter arise between the Governments of the two Republics, whether with respect to the interpretation of any stipulation in this treaty, or with respect to any other particular concerning the political or commercial relations of the

It will be noted that the language is very broad; it includes not only commercial but political relations-

not only commercial but political relations—

The said Governments, in the name of those nations, do promise to each other that they will endeavor, in the most sincere and earnest manner, to settle the differences so arising, and to preserve the state of peace and friendship in which the two countries are now placing themselves, using for this end mutual representations and pacific negotiations. And if, by these means, they should not be enabled to come to an agreement, a resort shall not, on this account, be had to reprisals, aggression, or hostility of any kind, by the one Republic against the other, until the Government of that which deems itself aggrieved shall have maturely considered, in the spirit of peace and good neighborship, whether it would not be better that such difference should be settled by the arbitration of commissioners appointed on each side, or by that of a friendly nation. And should such course be proposed by either party, it shall be acceded to by the other, unless deemed by it altogether incompatible with the nature of the difference, or the circumstances of the case.

The only implication whatever of any exception is in the very Otherwise, it is as broad as any arbitration treaty

In the year 1883 a treaty was proposed between the United States and Switzerland which left all disputes to arbitration. This treaty was framed, but was not ratified or proclaimed. It may be said: "Switzerland is an inferior nation, which does not engage in wars with any of the nations of Europe, that this small republic is a kind of favored ward of all the nations.' Nevertheless, the proposed treaty marked one step in the right direction, as showing that the subject was under consideration.

The next step in this direction was the Olney-Pauncefote Treaty of 1897, in which the high contracting parties agreed to submit to arbitration all questions of differences between them which may fail to adjust themselves by diplomatic negotiations. There was a specific enumeration of three classes of controversies, viz, for pecuniary claims not exceeding £100,000 in amount, for those exceeding that limit, and territorial claims. It failed of ratification by the Senate by three votes. There was an elaborate provision for the selection of arbitrators and umpires, and for the degree of unanimity with which their decisions must be rendered, in some cases requiring a unanimous award.

The next arbitration treaty which provided for the future and comprehended all disputes was that between Italy and the Argentine Republic, signed at Rome on the 23d of July, 1898, whereby the high contracting parties bound themselves to submit to arbitration all disputes which might arise and which could not be adjusted by diplomacy.

Finally came the greatest step of modern times—the Hague Conference of 1899.

It is true this great gathering of 26 nations failed in that which was probably the leading motive for its convening—a limitation of armaments. But in other respects it succeeded in a degree little short of marvelous. A general provision was agreed upon for the peaceful settlement of international controversies. The right of nations to offer their good offices and mediation to combatants without giving offense was established. An agreement was made for choosing a commission of inquiry to determine the facts at issue in any international dispute, and for a report upon those facts. The importance of the declaration of this policy by 26 nations can hardly be overrated. In this connection I may state that in all controversies, whether between nations or individuals, nothing is so essential as that the real facts and conditions shall be made clear by intelligent and impartial judges. When that is done, whether it be a private dispute or a dispute between mighty nations, the desirability of amicable settlement will be made apparent.

To digress, I may say, that in some of the States of this Union conciliation boards for the voluntary adjustment of labor disputes have met with the greatest degree of success when no power belonged to them beyond that of simply ascertaining the facts.

The Hague Conference of 1898 also provided a plan for the formation of a court of international arbitration by which each of the different countries was to designate not more than four judges to serve for a term of six years, thereby creating a panel from which judges could be selected at any time. Methods of procedure were carefully and specifically defined. There were separate conventions for the amelioration of warfare on land and for the adaptation of the Red Cross to maritime warfare. It is true, as I say, that this conference failed in that which was its main object—a limitation of armaments. It also failed in securing the adoption of a proposed agreement for compulsory arbitration of certain categories of subjects. Nevertheless, it stands forth prominently as inaugurating a new era in the history of the world's peace.

The second Hague Conference, that of 1907, was attended by 44 nations. This conference revived and added to the convention of 1898, and changed its provisions somewhat, but all in the direction of greater readiness in resorting to means for the peaceful settlement of controversies and to greater perfection in the machinery of the court. It also forbade war as a means of collecting contractual debts, and made provision for the establishment of a prize court. It clearly established as a principle of international law that a naval force may not bombard undefended harbors or cities.

At both these conferences the desirability of delaying the date of arbitrating a dispute until excitement and passion have subsided was emphasized. As a result of these suggestions some of the more recent treaties have contained a provision for such an interval for deliberation. I think, if we were to study the history of wars, we should agree that if in each case a year's time had been given for deliberation the number of bloody conflicts would have been very much diminished.

In saying this, I am not ignoring the fact that irresistible causes for conflict have existed even in comparatively recent years, and that they may exist in the future; but the whole tendency is to furnish adequate means for the peaceful settlement of controversies. Nations not involved in the conflict whose interests are best served by universal peace exert a powerful influence against the beginning or continuance of war.

Eight cases have been settled under the provisions of The Hague convention. The first was the so-called Pious Fund case, relating to a controversy between citizens of the United States and Mexico. By a unanimous decision of judges an award was made in favor of the United States. An amount of about $1,450,000 in Mexican money was awarded to citizens of the United States, together with an annual stipend or annuity somewhat in excess of $40,000. Certainly a dispute about this amount of money was not a sufficient reason to disturb the peaceful relations of the countries, but it was a cause of irritation and a subject eminently suited for arbitration. When The Hague court was established a convenient means was afforded to both nations to submit this question to impartial arbitration, and it was settled, it is to be hoped, to the satisfaction of both.

But whether the judgment in that case was satisfactory or not, the advantage of peaceful settlement as opposed to war is so incalculable that the common sense of mankind will eventually realize that it is far better to submit cheerfully to a decision not wholly satisfactory rather than resort to arms. A great many litigants are not altogether satisfied when a judgment is rendered against them; but for that reason, he who goes to court would not wish to go back to the old method of trial by battle. He would not wish to destroy the organized forms of society and return to a condition in which each man was the judge in his own cause and the strongest prevailed. So, when these arbitral methods are tried among nations, the same degree of satisfaction and the same benefits are sure to result.

Again, there was submitted to this court the so-called Dogger Bank case. Russian ships had fired upon English fishermen in the North Sea, off Dogger Bank, not far from the city of Hull. This was a locality where fishing had been carried on for centuries, and the act of opening fire upon defenseless seamen appeared to be utterly inexcusable. On another occasion I expressed the fear that if an act of this sort had been perpetrated against American fishermen while fishing off the coast of this country it would have involved even this Nation in war. The incident caused great excitement. The offended nation was vastly superior in naval strength to the one that had committed the offense, which might have easily tempted it to acts of reprisal. Many of the wars in the world's history have been fought on a pretext of much less importance. Yet because of the more generous feeling that exists between nations and the greater capacity for self-control, passion subsided, and a commission was created for the settlement of the question. It was found by this commission that the Russian ships were not justified in opening fire and had committed a serious offense, but that there were some extenuating circumstances which indicated that the act had not been committed wantonly. Apologies were offered and accepted, and a suitable indemnity was agreed upon for the injury done. Thus an exceedingly aggravating incident, which might easily have led to war, was amicably settled, to the lasting honor of the nations involved.

Other arbitration treaties negotiated contemporaneously with, or subsequently to, the The Hague conferences provide for the settlement of all disputes, future as well as past. The first in this century was that between Chile and Argentina in the year 1902, in commemoration of which a bronze statue of the Prince of Peace was erected on a high point of the Andes, where the road crosses the mountains between the two countries. The terms of this treaty gave assurance that there would be 10 years absolute peace between the two countries. There was a provision that within 6 months prior to its termination, I believe on the 27th or 28th of May, 1912, either party might denounce the treaty, but otherwise it should continue in force for another 10 years. It is to be hoped that there may be no occasion for denunciation and that it will continue in force.

A treaty was also ratified between the Netherlands and Denmark in the year 1904, which provided that, for all time, all disputes, future as well as past, should be settled by arbitration. Those countries have certainly set a conspicuous example to the nations of the earth. It may be said they are among the less important nations, but it should not be forgotten that England has been compelled to lower her flag before each of them in turn, before the Danes somewhat more than a thousand years ago, and before the Netherlands less than 300 years ago. They have an exceptional prestige among the nations of the earth, notwithstanding their comparatively small size and limited population. They are an aggressive and virile people, but, nevertheless, are leading the way for the universal settlement of all difficulties by the agencies of peace.

A later treaty has been concluded between Sweden and Norway, which is somewhat similar to the treaties now pending before the Senate, though the question whether a subject is justiciable is left to the arbiters.

One of the most notable of all these recent treaties is the one in effect among five Central American States by which they agreed to the selection of a judge from each who should constitute a court to meet in Costa Rica, to which any disputes between those countries may be submitted, or a foreign nation, if it chooses so to do, may present any question between itself and any one of the five States. This treaty or convention has not been without its very beneficial results, for in two instances it has averted war between members of that Central American group.

The cause of arbitration was powerfully promoted in the years 1903 and 1904 by the treaties between Great Britain and France in a form which excluded only questions of honor and vital interest. Not only was the treaty concluded between these two leading countries, but each entered into a considerable number of similar agreements with other nations of western Europe. The United States made a similar treaty with France and one with Great Britain in the year 1908, in which the questions excepted were vital interests, independence, honor, and matters concerning third parties.

It is to the lasting credit of the United States that in 21 treaties which we have ratified, in the same general form as the treaties of 1908 with Great Britain and France, weak nations as well as strong have been included. I think it may not be a waste of time to give a list of the countries with which these treaties have been made: Austria-Hungary, Brazil, China, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Great Britain, Haiti, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland. Countries without navies and without standing armies are included in the list of those with which we have chosen to make conven-tions, as well as some of the most powerful nations on the face of the earth.

It is to be regretted that it was found necessary in each of these treaties to except questions of honor and vital interest, but they, nevertheless, marked a distinct advance and established guaranties of peace quite in advance of preceding conditions. The difficulty of giving any exact definition to the phraseology "honor and vital interests" has seriously detracted from the value of these treaties as a guaranty of international peace. The question of honor was regarded by many as involved in the Newfoundland fisheries dispute, which might have prevented the amicable settlement of that question. At the time the United States was pressing its claims for damages against the British Government as a result of the depredations of privateers which had been fitted out in English ports, so prominent a man in the English Government as Lord Russell declared that the Alabama claims could not in honor be submitted to arbitration. I state this to show the unfortunate latitude in construction which may be given to the words "honor and vital interests" and the difficulty of securing the best results from any treaty which contains terms of such

The treaty which is pending before us substitutes another rule, viz, that the subject matter shall be "justiciable," the exact language of the proposed treaty being:

By virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity.

The important advantage of such a provision is that it contemplates a gradual growth, an advance in amicable settlement of international disputes increasing in momentum year by year. It is in line with the rules for the settlement of private disputes and gives most hopeful promise that just as law has grown up within nations between individuals so a system of international law may be established which will be effective among all peoples.

In this connection, Mr. President, I may say that I should regret to see added to these treaties, either by the ratifying resolution or in the treaties themselves, an enumeration of specific exceptions such as the Monroe doctrine, immigration, or payment of State debts. It is perfectly clear that under any possible interpretation of international law at this time those would not be questions justiciable either under the principles of law or equity.
Mr. CUMMINS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?
Mr. BURTON. I will.
Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether the Senator from Ohio is willing to submit to an interruption or not.

Mr. BURTON. I said at the beginning that I did not expect to enter at any considerable length or with any elaboration on an interpretation of the specific terms of this treaty. I may do that at a later time, but I desire now to dwell upon the general progress in the amicable solution of international controversies, the conditions that have led up to the demand for arbitration, and the possibilities for it at the present time. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is quite probable at some later time I may make some remarks upon the pending treaties, and inasmuch as the Senator from Ohio has referred to a comparison between the treaty of 1908 with Great Britain, for instance, and the proposed treaty with Great Britain, I should like very much to know his opinion with respect to the effect of the words in the pending treaties, and which are not in the treaty of 1908, "by virtue of a claim of right." What is meant by limiting the controversies to be submitted to arbitration in the treaty now before us to a claim of right? What is a claim of right as applied to the relations between nations?

Mr. BURTON. I regard it as a general term. The treaty provision reads "by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other, under treaty or otherwise." That language would seem to me to include every possible justiciable question which could arise between the two countries, whether under the treaty or because of the general relations existing between

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have been constrained to reach the conclusion that Article I of the treaty now before us is much narrower in its scope and will be more limited in its application than Article I of the treaty of 1908; and that is the reason, it is because I desire to at least make no backward step in the matter, that I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to what I regard as a very significant and unnecessary change in the phraseology used in the present case as compared with a similar article in the treaty of 1908.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question? If you were to select a word comprehensive and clear, to include the greatest variety of subjects, what better word could you select or what better phraseology could you select than that used in Article I.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, looking back over my experience as a lawyer, I would certainly not select the phrase that is found Mr. CUMMINS. in the present treaty. I would not select any phrase. I prefer the language used in the treaty of 1903, which I do not recall exactly, but it is substantially this? That differences of a legal nature or differences arising under a treaty shall be submitted to arbitration, with the exception at the close of the treaty that the Senator has named. I think that when with apparent design we substitute the word "justiciable" for "legal" and I do not claim that there is any substantial difference between "legal" and "justiciable" as used in this connection—when we limit the controversies that are to be submitted to those which arise by virtue of a claim of right, we have attempted to describe a class of controversies which is somewhat inconceivable to me, and certainly must be of narrower interpretation than the language of the treaty of 1908. Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not think so. The language of the treaty of 1908 is:

Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the inter-pretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties-It seems to me that the language employed in the pending treaties is much more general in its nature.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I say just one word more there and I will not interrupt the Senator from Ohio again?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.
Mr. CUMMINS. Those who prepared the present treaties evidently considered the word "justiciable" as a synonym for "legal," and I think properly so. I do not now perceive any difference between the word "legal" and the word "justiciable." In whatever sense used they are both limitations upon the scheme of arbitration. The two treaties are alike in this respect, because neither of them will permit a controversy to be submitted unless it be either of a legal nature or of a justiciable nature. I repeat, there is no difference between those two words; but the present treaty puts another limitation upon the plan of arbitration, namely, that the claim must be "a claim of right." Now, I should like the Senator from Ohio to explain of right." Now, I should like the Senator from Ohio to explain under what circumstances "a claim of right" could arise in favor of Great Britain against the United States, unless it were in the violation or the alleged violation of a treaty?

Mr. BURTON. In the case of indignity to her citizens, in the case of the illegal detention of property of a British citizen—these are cases where there is no adequate assurance of redress in an appeal to courts. You may even go further and include subjects involving only a moral right. It is a very broad term. There is the limitation, of course, that the ques-tion must be justiclable in its nature.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is just what I wanted to get from the Senator from Ohio, namely, an expression of opinion as to whether the phrase "by virtue of a claim of right" is intended to embrace merely right-that is, to embrace any right that may be insisted upon under the civilization of the age in which we live—or whether it is confined to "a claim of right" as generally understood in the law in cases in which that phrase is used.

Mr. BURTON. I would say the expression "a claim of right" is very comprehensive. Of course this expression must be read in connection with that which follows in which the term "justiciable" is used. The questions that may possibly be at issue between the two countries and the methods of settlement are more comprehensively defined in the treaty of 1911-12 than in that of 1908. "A claim of right" would certainly include any subject arising under international law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I only suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if the treaty had said "every justiciable claim" it could not possibly be narrower than the language of the present treaty; and if the addition of the phrase "by virtue of a claim of right" has made any change whatever in the interpretation or meaning of the article, it must be a narrowing change.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so because it is so inclusive. Of course, any claim of right can be made, and then the question arises whether it is justiciable in its nature.

What I wished to set forth at the moment of interruption was this: International law, even more than domestic law, is a matter of growth. Controversies between individuals which 300 years ago would have been thought impossible of settlement in the courts are now settled there every day. New principles are becoming established in international law; and I think it desirable here to give the largest possible degree of latitude for future growth.

I do not say that the time is coming when questions relating to the Monroe doctrine or to immigration or to State debts, which I have mentioned, could be submitted to arbitration; but other questions which are now regarded as entirely outside the purview of international law, not justiciable according to principles of law and equity, may, by a natural growth, by better relations, by more thorough study or better understanding of the subject, in five or ten years from now be regarded as capable of ready decision by a court of arbitration. There should be the amplest opportunity for the development of friendly relations and the settlement of an increasing number of controversies.

Mr. President, in the interpretation that I place upon these treaties, whether an agreement for arbitration is submitted under Article I or Article III, they come to the Senate for its approval. At a future time I may say something more on the question of their language and scope of application. I must confess that I would prefer to see them ratified in the exact words in which they were transmitted to the Senate, but placing the interpretation upon them which I do, I can not object to the so-called Lodge amendment. Agreements for arbitration may be submitted in one of two ways: First, a controversy may be made up and submitted for arbitration by the executive departments of two countries, and, second, if one or the other of the executive departments does not agree that it is justiciable, it must be submitted to a commission of inquiry, and if five of them, or the whole six, decide that it is justiciable, that decision merely brings the controversy as regards its justiciability to the same position that it would have occupied if the executive departments had decided in the first place that it was justiciable.

Mr. President, I trust that these treaties may be ratified at the time fixed for a vote. It will be but part of a great world movement which has been at work with tremendous force, beginning about the year 1898-99. You can no longer regard a man who looks for eventual disarmament as a dreamer or a visionary. Those who have advocated the successive steps which have led toward an era of peace and good will can now claim that they have been altogether practical.

The advance is marked as yet by only partial success, but the strength of the movement against the evils and burdens of armed camps and possible war promises a certain triumph, in which we trust our country may have a leading part.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I intended to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of legislative business, unless some other Senator desires to speak, and I will do so presently. But as the question of the phrase "a claim of right" has been raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins], I desire to refer briefly to it. The Senator's suggestion interested me very much. It seems that that phrase "a claim of right" covers pretty much everything, but I sent for a law dictionary to see how far it was defined. I find that under "Right," it says:

Right, A well founded claim-

There seems to be no precise definition of "a claim of right" or what is meant by "a claim of right." It may be anything. It savs-

Rights are claims of moral beings upon one another-

In other words, "a claim of right," taking this definition, is a well-founded claim, and it would cover pretty much everything.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary further says:

The ideas of claim and that the claim must be well founded always constitute the idea of right.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

CROSSING POLICEMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1618) amending paragraph 6 of the act relating to the Metropolitan police force.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend paragraph 6 of the act approved February 28, 1901, entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia," amending an act entitled "An act to define the rights of purchase of the belt railway, and for other purposes," approved June 24, 1898, and relating to the posting of special policemen at street railway crossings and intersections. special policemen at street railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington, so as to read as follows:

And the special policemen aforesaid, from and after the passage of this act, shall receive as compensation for their services a sum equal to the salary received by regular members of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia (who have served the same length of time), payable in equal monthly installments, as heretofore provided. They shall be allowed 30 days' sick leave and 20 days' annual leave; and in fixing said salaries credit shall be given said special policemen for the time they have served in such capacity in the same manner as is now or may hereafter be given to regular members of said Metropolitan police force.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR,

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, is the Senate now considering bills on the calendar under Rule VIII?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that we take up the bills on the calendar under Rule VIII for consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Unobjected cases? Mr. NELSON. That means unob That means unobjected cases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. WARREN. Let that bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over. The bill (S. 2925) providing for a Confederate naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over. The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the concurrent resolution go

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that bill has been heretofore read. The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been,

Mr. SMOOT. I have not seen the Senator from Kansas, but will offer no objection to the bill if no other Senator objects. Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4314) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that calendar Nos. 141, 186, 187, and 253, being Senate bills 4314, 4623, and 4624, and House bill 17671, be passed from day to day when we reach them on the calendar until further notice, or until they are especially asked to be called up.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not have them put on the calendar under Rule IX

Mr. McCUMBER. I would prefer that they should remain under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks that whenever the calendar is taken up the pension bills referred to by him be passed over until specifically called up. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution 176, requesting the President to make certain inquiries of the Governments of Great Britain and France, touching the arbitration of justiciable controversies or disputes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2243) to correct the military record of John L. O'Mara and grant him an honorable discharge was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON OIL LANDS.

The bill (S. 3045) to provide for agricultural entries on oil lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read and the amendment reported by the committee agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether there is any legislation at present prescribing the manner in which there shall be asserted the right to oil on lands which may be settled under this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will call to the Senator's attention the provisions of the bill. He will note that on page 1

it reads:

To selection under section 4 of the act approved August 18, 1894, known as the Carey Act, and to withdrawal under the act approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, whenever such entry, selection, or withdrawal shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title, with a reservation to the United States of the oil in such lands and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

That reservation is made to the United States. I wish to explain to the Senator that the lands are all poor lands, impossible of cultivation to-day without the aid of irrigation. In some parts of Utah and Wyoming a number of applications have been made to store water. By storage in reservoirs water can be brought upon the lands and they can be cultivated. They have been withdrawn as oil lands for a number of years. There has been no development of oil, and a great many people believe there never will be oil found in many of the lands withdrawn. But the entrymen are perfectly willing to go on with the irrigation projects and cultivate the lands with the reservation provided herein, that the United States shall have the right, which we have reserved to it, of prospecting for, mining, and removing the oil.

Mr. SHIVELY. The bill is not confined to the present entrymen, however—to persons now in possession of the lands.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nobody in possession of the lands. They belong to the United States.

Mr. SHIVELY. I observe that the bill, on page 4, provides: The reserved oil deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. That answers the question I asked the Senator some time ago. But the question in my mind is whether it is wise policy to provide for the entry of these lands as agricultural lands, without at the same time providing the manner in which the oil is to be thereafter taken or removed. The entryman will take possession of the soil; he will put in his crops; he may have out a crop of wheat or corn; and he may plant his orchard. He is not on notice of any rule or regulation or statute that may be enacted by which his interests may be very much affected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all of the entrymen that have entered lands of an agricultural nature that have been withdrawn as coal lands have done so under the same provision. This is nothing more nor less than extending the right of entry to oil lands that have been withdrawn from entry, reserving certain rights to the Government of the United

The Senator will notice in the letter from the department the reason for the amendment made. It was upon the recom-mendation of the Department that this amendment was made,

The reserved oil deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law.

In other words, I understand the department to be in favor of a leasing law for the development of oil lands. If such a law were passed in the future it would apply to land entered under this bill if it becomes a law. But if such a law is not passed the lands entered under the provisions of this bill will remain as they are to-day as far as the mining of oil is concerned.

Mr. SHIVELY. Do you mean that the law governing coal lands would apply in these cases?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not in these cases. Mr. SHIVELY. These are expressly reserved for future legislation and regulation by the department.

It seems to me that when we are entering on the policy of permitting an entry of these lands on which oil may be discovered, or that are oil lands, there should be legislation fixing the manner in which the right to take the oil is to be exercised in the future. Of course, the Senator says the entrymen are perfectly willing to take the land under these conditions and all of that, but it does not seem to me that is the shape in which to leave the matter. Men who go on and enter it as agricultural land ought to be on notice in advance as to what is going to happen afterwards in the assertion of an oil right, even if it is to be asserted by the United States Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will refer to the report, he will notice that the department, in recommending it, calls specific attention to the fact that the bill is in conformity with the bill that was passed by Congress June 22, 1910, I think, providing for agricultural entries on withdrawn coal lands, but the entrymen only secured the surface right to the land and not to the coal. The word "oil" is used in this bill instead of "coal," as provided in the act of June 22, 1910, as the report will show. And, Mr. President, a great deal of agricultural lands in the Western States is tied up with these oilland withdrawals. The lands can not be used unless a bill of this nature is passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What right do you leave, under the proposed bill, to prospectors for oil?

Mr. SMOOT. The right that may be granted them under the

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then you do not leave any at all. Mr. GRONNA. I am not sure that I am opposed to this particular bill, but I do know that it is very important legislation. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if the settlers who have entered lands that have been declared or classified as oil lands are protected under this bill the same as they are under what we call the coal-land law?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the surface right that was granted to an entryman to enter on coal lands that have been withdrawn?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.
Mr. SMOOT. This is virtually the same bill, with the exception that the word "oil" is used instead of the word "coal," as the Senator will see in the report from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GRONNA. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator wishes it to go over, I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. GRONNA. I do. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator had agreed to withhold his request for a moment. I desire before it goes over, in order that the Senators may have the question under consideration, to suggest that there is no provision in the bill under which mining locations can be made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the withdrawal act, min-

bill applies only to withdrawn oil lands.
Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, tl Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is some question about that, because this bill undertakes to deal with the question completely; and there are many instances and many more will be developed where both placer and lode claims exist within the area that is included under the provisions of the bill. We do not want any uncertainty about it; and I propose to offer an amendment that will leave no doubt upon that question. The oil lands are found under lands containing placer gold and other precious metals, so that the right of the prospector should be preserved.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator to look up the withdrawal act authorizing the President to make certain withdrawals. He no doubt will remember that that act specifically provides that withdrawn lands shall at all times be opened to exploration under the mining laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that would be a question of contention in applying this law, which professes to deal with the whole subject, except by reference to a class of lands. I shall propose an amendment, on line 6 of the bill, inserting after the words "entry under" the words "the mining laws of the United States.

I do that for the reason that the oil claims are now held to be locatable under the placer land laws of the United States. oil lands in California are located as placer claims, and that has been the source of more contention in the courts and before the departments than almost any other question. So I shall ask that this bill be so specific as to exclude that class of lands. I merely offer the amendment now and it can await the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over for to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

THOMAS HARRISON.

The bill (S. 548) retiring Thomas Harrison, a clerk in the Naval Observatory, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

CERTAIN RETIRED NAVAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the bill explained. Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator present who reported the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. He is not.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that it may go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 310) relative to joint operations of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. The bill relates both to the Army and Navy. It came in from the Secretary of War, and was very properly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I never saw the bill myself nor heard of it until it appeared on the calendar. concerns a very important branch of the Navy. I have no desire to discuss the merits of the bill now. It seems to me that the bill ought to have the consideration of the Naval Committee also, and I desire to make a motion to commit it to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE. I second the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask permission to say that I do not know that I shall oppose the motion. The bill appeared, as a great many bills do, with a recommendation from the head of the department to the chairman of a committee. A similar bill was introduced in the last Congress. A large part of the report upon it was an extended review and report from the joint Army and Navy board. The bill passed the Senate and was favorably reported in the House, but failed for lack of time to reach consideration upon the calendar.

It seems from the report that this matter was under consideration for quite a lengthy time and at different times by the joint board, and that the Navy, through its Secretary and also through Admiral Dewey, who is the chairman of the joint board, concluded that the way in which the matter should be handled, where the Army and Navy and Marine Corps meet, would be as proposed by this bill, I assume, because the Army is the land force and is the force that must supply in a manner Government maneuvers.

If it goes to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I assume it will, I suggest that it ought to go back for a further consideration by the joint board of control, the board consisting of the head of the Army and the head of the Navy, and of old and tried officers, men who ought to know just a little more about conducting matters in the field, matters of supply and control, than either the Military Committee or the Naval Committee.

I should be glad to have the bill fully considered. I have myself no desire as to whether it shall pass or not pass, except that to-day if we found ourselves in a condition somewhere where the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps would be represented, to attack or repel attack, no officer of either branch would have legal or authorized command, unless by specific order of the President issued for that specific case. There would be three different forces fighting or acting, each on their own hook, with no one commander to control. Therefore I suggest that the matter ought to be in some way remedied and protected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION AT ASHLAND, WIS. The bill (S. 4455) to provide for the establishment of additional aids to navigation at Ashland, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to establish additional aids to navigation at Ashland, Wis., at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OCONTO HARBOR, WIS.

PENSIONS OF INMATES OF NAVAL HOME.

The bill (S. 4306) to provide for the disposition of pensions due inmates of the Naval Home was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

tee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension to which any inmate of the Naval Home at Philadelphia may be entitled during his residence therein shall be paid to the Secretary of the Navy, except as hereinafter provided. The money thus derived shall not become a part of the funds of the home, but shall be held by the Secretary in trust for the pensioner to whom it would otherwise have been paid, and such part of it as shall not sooner have been paid to him shall be paid to him on his discharge from the institution.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy may, from time to time, pay over to any inmate such part of his pension money as may be deemed best for his interest and consistent with the discipline and good order of the home, but such pensioner shall not be entitled to demand or have the same so long as he remains an inmate of the home. In case of the death of any pensioner any pension money due him and remaining in the hands of the Secretary shall be paid to his personal representatives if demand is made within three years; otherwise the same shall escheat to the Secretary of the Navy for the benefit of the fund from which such home is maintained.

Sec. 3. That any such inmate of the Naval Home who has a child, wife, or parent living shall be entitled, by filing with the pension agent from whom he receives his money a written direction to that effect, to have his pension or any part of it paid to such child, wife, or parent: Provided, That one-half of the pension drawn in behalf of such inmate of the Naval Home or to which he may become entitled during his residence therein shall, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, be paid by the Secretary of the Navy to such pensioner's wife, she being in necessitous circumstances and a woman of good moral character; or, if there be no wife, to the legal guardian of the minor child or children or the permanently dependent and helpless child or children of such pensioner.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill why the wife, if living and compelled to live separate and apart from the husband who is in the institution, should not receive all the pension?

Mr. PERKINS. It is the same regulation that applies to the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that it is the same regulation that applies to the Soldiers' Home, but I have always had doubt as to the reasonableness of that restriction. The pension is never a large sum; the man is being taken care of at the expense of the Government; but if he has a wife or dependent children they can only get the benefit of one-half of that pension.

Mr. ROOT. He can get all of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The proviso says one-half. Mr. LODGE. No; it gives the whole. She can have his pension or any part of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is another provision. Let us see.
I was listening only to the reading of it. If we have made a mistake in one case it is no reason why we should continue it. I want to refer to that provision. This is the proviso:

Provided, That one-half of the pension drawn in behalf of such inmate of the Naval Home or to which he may become entitled during his residence therein shall, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, be paid by the Secretary of the Navy to such pensioner's

That is the provision which caught my attention.

Mr. ROOT. That is, without his consent.
Mr. LODGE. It is without his consent.

Mr. ROOT. Let the Senator read the preceding paragraph. Mr. LODGE. That is a provision that he may keep at least half from his wife.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us pause for a moment and see that there is no mistake about it.

SEC. 3. That any such inmate of the Naval Home who has a child, wife, or parent living shall be entitled, by filing with the pension agent from whom he receives his money a written direction to that effect, to have his pension or any part of it paid to such child, wife, or recent.

Mr. LODGE. Suppose he does not file a written direction. Then it comes under the proviso to enable the Secretary to pay half of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does he get the other half?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; he gets the other half if the Secretary chooses to give it. That is the provision in regard to all of the soldiers; and, moreover, the naval pension fund, as the Senator knows, is formed largely from the money of the sailors them-

Mr. HEYBURN. I know it is. The proviso reads:

That one-half of the pension drawn in behalf of such inmate of the naval home or to which he may become entitled during his residence therein shall, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, be paid by the Secretary of the Navy to such pensioner's wife.

It seems to me that that provision is a further limitation on the right to the use of the pension by the family of the pen-sioner. It is made subject to the order of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. ROOT. I think it is a limitation upon the pensioner's power of disposition.

Mr. LODGE. It is. Mr. ROOT. The first sentence of the third section standing alone gives absolute power of disposition to the pensioner as to his family. He can direct the payment to the child, wife, or parent of the whole pension.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, where does the proviso fit in?

Mr. ROOT. The proviso saves the right of the wife so that he can not direct away from her more than one-half if the Commissioner of Pensions considers that it is unjust and inequitable to direct it away from her.

Mr. LODGE. It is for the protection of the wife.

Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose he has only collateral relatives, where is the power of the pensioner to direct the payment of any part of the pension to one of his family not a wife or child?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is in the last clause. Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose he has a father or mother. Mr. LODGE. It is covered by the clause "child, wife, or parent living."

Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose he has none of the class enumerated, has he no right to provide for the payment of that money to any other of his relatives who may be in necessitous circumstances? I know it is the existing law as applied to the soldiers' home, but I thought this a proper and appropriate occasion to suggest the wisdom or unwisdom of it.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me unwise to maintain a distinction between soldiers and sailors. Why discriminate against

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not discriminate against them, but I might look forward to the correction of what seems to be an existing evil in the law.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is a wise law. If we are going to change the law we can change both just as well as one. I think now it discriminates against the sailors.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does now, and there should be some adequate provision covering it.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that this is quite adequate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was merely impelled to make a suggestion, because I think a soldier residing in a home, whether it be a naval home or a home for ex-soldiers of the Army, should have a right to direct that his pension should be paid to any of his family outside of the immediate members, in case they need it. I think there should be a provision so that he might exercise his charitable will or disposition in disposing of his pension. It is his pension.

Mr. LODGE. He has the power to do that under section 2, because the Secretary of the Navy is given a wise discretion to pay over such part of the pension money as may be deemed best for his interest. If he pays it over to him he can make any disposition of it he pleases.

Mr. HEYBURN. The quest The question is whether we should provide guardianship for a soldier merely because of his misfor-

Mr. LODGE. It is only to be withheld for the purpose of the discipline and good order of the home, and it may be found to be a very necessary provision.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not disposed to carp at legislation merely because there is an inequity in existing law.

Mr. ROOT. I think it works very well. The old fellows who go into a home where they are supported are sometimes quite improvident. The scheme of the law is that primarily when they go into a home the pension instead of being paid is kept for them until they come out. That is the primary dis-position. Then that is modified by the fact that the Secretary of the Navy may at any time, when it is deemed for the interest of the man who goes into a home, pay over any part of the pension instead of keeping it. Then there is the further provision that he may direct the payment of all of it, without having it held until the pensioner comes out.

Mr. HEYBURN. He may direct the payment to certain per-

SOUS.

Mr. ROOT. He may direct the payment of all of it to the person to whom he is under natural obligations to support; that is, the child, wife, or parent. Then the further provision is for the protection of the wife; that in any event he can not divert more than half from her so long as the Commissioner of Pensions considers that it is right and just that she should have it.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the commissioner is invested with the power to pass upon her condition as to whether it is necessitous or not. The pensioner himself might desire to maintain his wife outside upon a little better or higher scale of living, but the commissioner must pass upon it.

Mr. ROOT. No; he can not give it all to her. Mr. HEYBURN. Under the first provision.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; and notwithstanding anything that the Commissioner of Pensions may do, the Secretary of the Navy can not take more than half of it away from her so long as the Commissioner of Pensions thinks he should not. Mr. HEYBURN. This thought occurred to me. The person then his wife might have little or no sympathy with his children, perhaps by a former marriage, and he might feel that those children needed this money. He might be disposed to devote it to their education and maintenance, despite the fact that a subsequent wife would demand that she have it. I merely point out these objections to it. I am not going to object further to the passage of the bill. I merely took occasion to point out those conditions. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

The bill (S. 2235) to provide for the naturalization of aliens who have served or shall hereafter serve for one enlistment of four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or for four years in the naval auxiliary service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "service," to insert "or who has served or may hereafter serve four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and who has received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment," so as to read:

That any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has served or may hereafter serve for one collstment of four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, and who has received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, or who has completed four years of honorable service in the naval auxiliary service, or who has served or may hereafter serve four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and who has received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, shall, etc.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to inquire as to whether we are sufficiently protecting ourselves against naturalizing persons who would not be naturalized had they not enlisted in the We have certain restrictions now under which certain nationalities may not be naturalized. I am not accurately advised as to whether or not any such persons are included within the enlistment and might come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Committee on Immigration, which in 1906 reported the naturalization law now upon the statute books, had no intention of changing the existing law in regard to soldiers and sailors. There seems to be, how-ever, some uncertainty on that point. They did not repeal spe-cifically section 2166 of the Révised Statutes, which provides that-

And also the act of July 26, 1894, which provides that-

Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has enlisted or may enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, and has served or may hereafter serve five consecutive years in the United States Navy or one enlistment in the United States Marine Corps, and has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such.

There was no intention in the naturalization law to change either of those sections in regard to the Army and Navy.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask what is the number of years given there?

Mr. LODGE. In the Army, three; in the Marine Corps, four; and in the Navy, five.

Mr. WARREN. Then what you attempt to do is to make one term of enlistment entitle an alien to citizenship? Mr. LODGE. We mean to make the naval enlistment uniform with the Marine Corps—four years.

Mr. WARREN. The same enlistment period?

Mr. LODGE. The same enlistment period, four years, which is longer than is allowed in the Army. It does not, of course, overrule the specific exclusion of the naturalization law.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the point that was troubling me. Mr. LODGE. If it had, it would have been done a great many years ago, because the law is an old one, admitting all soldiers and sailors. This is only to equalize it, and to get rid of what is an extreme injustice to the sailor and to the man in the Revenue-Cutter Service. The courts require one year's continuous residence. It is often impossible for the sailor it. his enlistment to give one year's continuous residence in order to get naturalization.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not inclined to differ with the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to that provision or that purpose, but my mind was put on inquiry as to whether or not certain restricted classes or nationalities might not enlist.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means that it admits the Chinamen to citizenship?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. That is impossible. The bill does not change the existing law. They never have been admitted under the law, and they never could be, because the other exclusion was The bill does not change the existing law, except so far as it admits the Revenue-Cutter Service, in which there are no Chinamen.

Mr. HEYBURN. The language is "any alien" without restriction or classification.

Mr. LODGE. That is the exact phrase of the law to-day.

Mr. HEYBURN. But there is a proviso in it.

Mr. LODGE. There is no proviso that I am aware of.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Mongolian races are excepted from the provisions of our naturalization law.

Mr. LODGE. Of course they are, and that is a specific exclusion. It forbids anything being done under those acts. What I want to call the Senator's attention to is that the bill does not alter the existing law in that respect at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the question.
Mr. LODGE. If there is a question, then I am at a loss to

Mr. HEYBURN. I regret that such is the case.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt it is the fault of my under-

Mr. HEYBURN. But we all must understand a measure we vote upon.

Mr. LODGE. That is important.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is quite important. It is possible that the language used in this act might remove the class of that the language used in this act might remove the class of persons who have enlisted in the service from the restrictions of the general naturalization law, because there is no exception been in the law for 70 years.

here. If a Chinaman or a Japanese were to be enlisted in the Army, then he would come in under the express terms of the bill, and it being special in its nature it is very probable that the general law would not cover it.

Mr. LODGE. He could no more come in under the express terms of this bill than he could come in under the statutes now on the statute books, which have been there for many years, and it has been held that he can not come in under those statutes.

atutes. He never has come in.
Mr. HEYBURN. There are exceptions under those statutes from the operation of its provisions.

Mr. LODGE. It does not appear, upon reading those statutes, that they are excepted from them.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think when the Senator comes to ex-

Mr. LODGE. I have examined. That is where I have the advantage of the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to call attention to fact? I have before me the general naturalization law. Mr. LODGE. Of 1906? Mr. BACON. No; dating back to 1862.

No; dating back to 1862. The revised naturalization law is the act of Mr. LODGE.

Mr. BACON. The point I want to call attention to is that we have two sections in the Revised Statutes which have been upon the statute books, one of them, it seems, since the year 1824, and the other since 1862, in which this same language is used.

Mr. LODGE. That is the general provision as to naturalization.

Mr. BACON. That is the general provision under the title of "Naturalization," in which the various provisions are added.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President— Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, I am not taking issue with him; I am simply calling attention to what I think fortifies him in his position, and that is, that this identical language has been on the statute books, if the reference on the margin is correct, ever since 1824.

Mr. LODGE. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. BACON. Then there was another statute passed in 1862.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. It is section 2166, which the marginal reference says was passed the 27th of July, 1862, which says:

Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward, who has enlisted or may enlist in the armies of the United States, either the Regular or the Volunter forces, and has been or may be hereafter honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such, etc.

That has been the language used for 50 years.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; and as the Senator sees from the reading that which is in the present naturalization act, it simply exempts him from the residence; that is all.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was the purpose of the act.

Mr. LODGE. It does not exempt him from exclusions as to race, and so forth.

BACON. The next succeeding section, section 2167, which the marginal reference says is the act of May 26, 1824, uses practically the same language. It says:

SEC. 2167. Any alien, being under the age of 21 years, who has resided in the United States three years next preceding his arriving at that age, and who has continued to reside therein to the time he may make application to be admitted a citizen thereof, may, after he arrives at the age of 21 years, and after he has resided five years within the United States, etc.

In other words, there is no exclusion of any particular race, because, I suppose, it is understood that that has reference to the other sections of the same title.

Mr. LODGE. These old acts are all embodied in the act of 1906, which was a revision and codification of the naturalization laws, which embodied the old regulations and provided some new terms of admission. One was that aliens were obliged to speak the English language before they could be naturalized. That was a new regulation, a new restriction. This act only exempts them, as they have always been exempted, from the necessity of residence and a declaration of intention. It does not exempt them from anything else, any more than do these old acts, which are reembodied here, exempt them from the other provisions about naturalization. In other words, this does not enlarge it at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. It might have been reached by simply de-claring in this legislation that the question of residence should not apply in that language. It is only the general language that

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true; but the acts prior to the last act-the act of 1862 and the act of 1834, I think it waswere enacted when the conditions of to-day did not exist and when we were not excluding any particular race from our citizenship

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, if there is the slightest danger of anything of that sort I want it guarded against just as much as does the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am sure the Senator does.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with him entirely. It had not occurred to me that there was any danger, because the giving of this right of naturalization to soldiers and sailors is of such long standing, and it seemed to me this bill simply remedied some inequalities in the existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would simply say "not otherwise dis-qualified under existing law." Then the Senator would accomplish the purpose. A person who is now disqualified from becoming a citizen ought not to be admitted merely because of his service.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. NELSON. It seems to me the only change the bill makes in the law is, first of all, to get rid of that one year's residence in respect to men in the Army; in the next place, to make residence on the ship as though it were residence on the land; in the third place, to take in the Revenue-Cutter Service, which is not now included; and, in the fourth place, to equalize the time between the Marine Corps and the Navy.

Mr. LODGE. That is the whole thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Those are all commendable provisions.
Mr. NELSON. Those are all the provisions of existing law that the bill proposes to change.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am inclined to think-and I think, perhaps, the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with methat we ought not to admit any class of citizens under this proposed relaxation that could not be otherwise admitted. If we simply amend it by inserting the words "not otherwise dis-qualified from admission as citizens" we would avoid all controversy

Mr. LODGE. Then you would put that in in the proviso in line 19?

Mr. HEYBURN. You could put it there or in line

Mr. LODGE. I think it would be better to put it in line 19. Mr. NELSON. I want to say, if the Senators will allow me, that I believe under this proposed law an applicant for citizenship must still meet the other general requirements of the naturalization laws, of not being a nihilist, an anarchist, or any of those things.

Mr. LODGE. I have not the slightest doubt of it, but I think it can do no harm to this bill to put in the words "not otherwise disqualified."

Mr. BACON. That would meet my objections, Mr. LODGE. So that it would read:

That any alien of the age of 21 years and upward not otherwise disqualified—

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator this question: If that language were inserted in this bill, what effect would it have upon the construction given to other similar sections which do not have that language inserted in them? Of course, the Senator will recognize that if all these sections were passed in the same act and this language was used in one section and omitted in the others, the court would say that it was not intended that that language should apply to the others.

Mr. LODGE. That is the danger of putting it in. Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. President, I think that would take Mr. HEYBURN. care of itself. The court when it was passing upon this measure or questions arising under it, would look to the provisions of this bill, and would not be called upon to give a general interpretation of the naturalization laws. I can see no possible embarrassment. We know how naturalization is brought about in the courts.

Mr. BACON. I would like to ask the Senator from Idaho this question: He has been recently engaged in the very laborious work of a revision of the laws, and the Senator has revised sections—if he has finished that part of the Revised Statutes—numbered 2166 and 2167 which I have just read. When the Senator revised those laws, did he find it necessary to insert those words in the section?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I regret that I am not in a position to tell the Senate what the committee has concluded in regard to it. Those sections are all ready for presentation to the Senate, but, unfortunately, the instrumentality through whom they must be presented has been crippled for the time being

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over. As the Chair understood, there was no objection to agreeing to the first amendment, and that amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] is now willing to withdraw his objection, and I think we can dispose of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his objection.

Mr. LODGE. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that this bill contains this proviso, which is not in the old laws:

Provided further, That any court which now has or may hereafter be given jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens of the United States may immediately naturalize any alien applying under and furnishing the proof prescribed by the foregoing provisions.

That is not in the old law, I am very sure.

Mr. BACON. I inquire of the Senator whether this bill proposes to be an amendment of existing law?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; this is a new act.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. And therefore, I think, if we insert in line 19 the words "not otherwise disqualified

Mr. HEYBURN. That will answer the purpose.
Mr. LODGE. Or, what is better, "otherwise qualified," I think we would perfect it, and I do not see how we would interfere with the general rule at all.

Mr. BACON. I am very frank to say that I entirely agree with the Senator in his contention throughout that the words are not necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I think so, too.
Mr. BACON. The only question in my mind was whether or not the insertion of them might not do some harm.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New York [Mr. Root] has called my attention to this new proviso, which I see introduces a new element, containing, as it does, a direction to the court. Therefore I move, Mr. President, to insert, after the word "alien," in line 19, the words "otherwise qualified."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Massachusetts will withhold his amendment for a moment, the committee amendments will be first disposed of. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 2, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert "at any time within three years from the date of such discharge or completion of honorable service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "sources," to insert "or, in the case of an alien who has served in the Revenue-Cutter Service, by competent proof from the Revenue-Cutter Service," so as to read:

Shall, at any time within three years from the date of such discharge or completion of honorable service, be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore, and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to proof of good moral character, be satisfied by competent proof from naval sources, or in the case of an alien who has served in the Revenue-Cutter Service by competent proof from the Revenue-Cutter Service, of such service

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 13, after the word "service," to insert "or the Revenue-Cutter Service," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That an honorable discharge from the Navy, Marine Corps, or the naval auxiliary service, or the Revenue-Cutter Service, or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, shall be accepted as proof of good moral character: Provided further. That any court which now has or may hereafter be given jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens of the United States may immediately naturalize any alien applying under and furnishing the proof prescribed by the foregoing provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I now offer the amendment to insert the words otherwise qualified," in line 19, on page 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 19, after the word "alien," it is proposed to insert the words "otherwise qualified."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as read: "A bill to provide for the naturalization of aliens who have served or shall hereafter serve for one enlistment of four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, or for four years in the naval auxiliary service or in the Revenue-Cutter Service."

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the report on that bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

The report submitted by Mr. Perkins February 1, 1912, is as

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2235) to provide for the naturalization of aliens who have served or shall hereafter serve for one enlistment of four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or four years in the naval auxiliary service, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass, with the following amendments:

After the word "service," in the last line of the title, add the words "or in the Revenue-Cutter Service."

After the word "service," in line 9, page 1, of the bill, insert the words "or who has served or may hereafter serve four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service and who has received therefrom an honorable discharge, or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment."

discharge, or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenistment."

After the word "shall," in line 9, page 1, insert a comma and the words "at any time within three years from the date of such discharge or completion of honorable service."

After the word "sources," in line 2 of page 2 of the bill, insert the words "or in the case of an alien who has served in the Revenue-Cutter Service by competent proof from the Revenue-Cutter Service," In line 4 of page 2 of the bill, after the word "service," insert the words "or the Revenue-Cutter Service."

The object of this bill is to facilitate the naturalization of aliens serving in the Navy, Marine Corps, the naval auxiliary service, and Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, and the proposed legislation is desired and urged by the Navy Department, as will appear from the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,

Washington May 16, 1911

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, May 16, 1911.

Intion is desired and urged by the Navy Department, as will appear from the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, May 18, 1911.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the committee's letter dated May 12, 1911, inclosing a copy of the bill (S. 2235) to provide for the naturalization of aliens who have served or shall hereafter serve for one enlistment of four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or for four years in the naval auxiliary service, and requesting the department's opinion thereon, I have the honor to invite your attention and that of the committee to the department's letters dated December 6 and 7, 1909, relative to similar bills on the same subject. In order, however, that the committee may conveniently consider the question, the contents of these communications may be recapitulated as follows:

The act to establish a bureau of immigration and naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of allens throughout the United States, approved June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 596), provides that "an alien may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States in the following manner and not otherwise," but thereinafter makes no provision for the naturalization of persons in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corp he naturalization of these spine of the contrary, it is noted that section 26 of the act, while specifically repealing sections 2165, 2167, 2168, and 2173 of the Revised Statutes, and section 39 of chapter 1012 of the Statutes at Large of the United States for the year 1903, significantly omits section 2166, Revised Statutes, and the act of July 26, 1894, which provide for the naturalization of persons in these branches of the public service.

"Sec. 2166. Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has enlisted or may enlist in the united States previous to his application, without any previous declaration of his Intention, of the provide of the provide states of the United St of one year in the State in which the application is made, must have served five years honorably in the Navy, must submit, in addition to his honorable discharge, proof of good moral character, and then wait 90 days before the papers can be issued. The present law discriminates against these enlisted men, as it requires five years' honorable service in the Navy, whereas one enlistment (which is four years) is required in the Marine Corps, and in the Army it is only necessary to have an honorable discharge from an enlistment of three years.

In this connection attention is further invited to the fact that by regulations the enlistment in the Navy of persons not citizens of the United States is forbidden, although the recalistment of honorably discharged aliens is still permitted. The enactment of the legislation herein recommended would perfect the endeavor to have only citizens serving on board our vessels of war by making possible the naturalization of practically all the aliens among the enlisted personnel.

It may be stated further that the variation in the wording of the bill with reference to the Navy and Marine Corps and to the naval auxiliary service is made necessary by reason of the fact that enlistments in the last-named service are for three years only.

With reference to the proof of good moral character, the enlisted man by reason of his duties is generally not in a position to furnish affidavits of two witnesses who can state therein that they have personally known the applicant for five years and can testify to his good moral character during that time, as is required in other cases of petitions for naturalization, and it is believed that the presentation of an honorable discharge, or an ordinary discharge containing a recommendation for reenlistment, would be better evidence, in that it would show that the commissioned officers of the Navy or Marine Corps under whom the man has been serving during four years' time considered him a man of good moral character.

In connection with a hearing on January 20, 1910, before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, concerning a similar measure, it was suggested by a member of the committee that a limit of time be set during which an enlisted man might be admitted to citizenship upon his petition and without previous declaration of intention. In answer to that suggestion it was stated that such a modification would be agreeable to this department, and a limit of three years was suggested as a length of time that would conserve both the interests of the Government and of the persons intended to be benefited by the proposed measure; it was added, however, that if the committee in its discretion believed a shorter period desirable there would be no objection to reducing it, because of the importance that some action be had in the matter. This suggested modification, should your committee deem it of importance, might be made by the insertion in the bill, on page 1, line 9, after the word "shall," of a comma and the words "at any time within three years from the date of such discharge or completion of honorable service."

In view of the foregoing considerations, those of public policy and in the interests of the naval service, the bill (S. 2235) is commended to the committee's favorable consideration.

Faithfully, yours,

G. v. L. Meyer.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, United States Senate.

The bill seems to provide all necessary safeguards and to put the men in the naval auxiliary service (where the term of enlistment is three years) on an equal basis with other branches of the service.

The same reasons apply with somewhat greater force to the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The same reasons apply with somewhat greater force to the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Section 2174, Revised Statutes, provides for the naturalization of seamen who are aliens serving on merchant ships of the United States without a residence on shore; but no provision whatever exists for the naturalization of aliens enlisted in the Revenue-Cutter Service, however long and faithful the service, except by acquiring a residence on shore in the manner provided in the act of June 29, 1906, for the naturalization of aliens generally.

The acquisition of such a residence with the continuous discharge of duty in the Revenue-Cutter Service is of course impossible.

The Treasury Department desires that all the enlisted men in the Revenue-Cutter Service be citizens of the United States. The regulations are that warrant officers shall be full citizens, petty officers must be citizens, and an alien in the service can not be reenlisted unless he has in the meanwhile legally declared his intention to become a citizen.

These men, having declared their intention, can rarely do more on account of the nature of their duties.

Enlisted men in the Navy, Marine Corps, or Revenue-Cutter Service by reason of their duties are rarely able to furnish the affidavits, etc., necessary under existing law, and to secure the presence of witnesses who have known them five years, etc., and who can testify to their moral character. It would seem that the best evidence (certainly sufficient evidence) of their moral character is found in the record of the men in the Government service, as shown by the nature of their discharge. If they have throughout four years' service so conducted themselves as to receive from their superiors "honorable discharge" or an ordinary discharge with a recommendation for reenlistment, it would seem that every reasonable measure of proof of good character had been fairly met.

Your committee, having given the bill careful consideration, recommend that it do pass as amended.

Your committee, having given the bill careful consideration, recommend that it do pass as amended.

MONUMENT ON BATTLE FIELD OF GETTYSBURG.

The bill (S. 2037) to provide for the erection of a monument on the battle field of Gettysburg to commemorate the services of the United States Signal Corps during the War of the Rebellion was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the erection on Little Round Top, on the battle field of Gettysburg, a monument to commemorate the services of the United States Signal Corps during the War of the Rebellion; for a commission, consisting of the Committee on Gettysburg Memorial of the United States Veteran Signal Corps Association and the Commissioners of the Gettysburg National Park, with full authority to select suitable design, contract for, and superintend the construction of the monument; and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act it appropriates $7,500.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public utilities commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is a very important bill, in which I feel a great interest, but it is a very long bill, and I ask that it go over for to-day, giving notice that at the earliest opportunity, at an earlier hour in the day, I shall ask for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in that connection, if I may be permitted to say so, because of another committee engagement I was not able to be present at the meeting of the committee at the time the bill was reported to the full committee by the subcommittee. I have had in mind, however, the fact that, in view of the multitudinous duties which are already imposed upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, it might be wise to have a separate commission to take special charge of the duties imposed by this bill. It is a very important matter, and it seems to me that in the early history of its operation, if enacted, the duties to be performed will occupy a very great part of the commissioners' time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Possibly the Senator from Ohio did not hear me when I asked that the bill should go over and not be considered to-day. The Senator, of course, will have an opportunity when the bill comes up to move any amendment to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ELIZABETH L. W. BAILEY.

The bill (S. 1345) for the relief of Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, administratrix of the estate of David W. Bailey, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments on page 1, line 6, after the words "estate of," to strike out "David" and insert "Davis"; in line 9, before the initial "W.," to strike out "David" and insert "Davis"; and on page 2, line 6, before the initial "W.," to strike out "David" and insert "Davis," so as to make the bill read :

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, of Washington, D. C., administratrix of the estate of Davis W. Bailey, deceased, the sum of $3,127.85, in settlement of the claim of the late Davis W. Bailey against the District of Columbia under his contract for laying asphalt pavements in said District: Provided, That the sum as aforesaid, when paid, shall be accepted as a full and final settlement both of principal and interest of the award made July 18, 1892, in favor of the said Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, administratrix of the estate of Davis W. Bailey, deceased, and filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by J. J. Johnson in the case then pending and untried in said court between said administratrix, as plaintiff, and the District of Columbia, as defendant, known and designated upon the calendar of said court as No. 24279, instituted therein for the recovery of damages by the plaintiff from the said defendant for laying asphalt pavements in said District of Columbia. And for the purpose of paying the aforesaid claim the sum of $3,127,85 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, administratrix of the estate of Davis W. Bailey, deceased."

EXTENSION OF HIGHWAYS, BARRY FARM SUBDIVISION.

The bill (S. 4854) to authorize the opening, widening, and extension of highways within and adjacent to the subdivision of the Barry farm, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to open and widen, with a width of not less than 40 feet, upon such lines as they may deem most advantageous, all the highways shown or indicated on a subdivision of the Barry farm recorded in book levy court No. 2 at folio 1, a record book in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, except a street shown on the subdivision lying west of Nichols Avenue, and extending from Sumner Road to Howard Road; also the land that may be necessary to open a street with a width of not less than 40 feet through lot No. 9 in square No. 5875 and adjacent to the northwesterly boundary of the lot; also the land that may be necessary to extend Bowen Road and Pomeroy Road, with a width of not less than 40 feet, to the northeasterly boundary of the of not less than 40 feet, to the hormeasterly boundary subdivision of the Barry farm, and to extend an unnamed street across lots Nos. 12, 13, 14, and 15 in square No. 5876, with a width of not less than 40 feet, to the southeasterly boundary of the subdivision of the Barry farm; and also the land either within or adjacent to the subdivision of the Barry farm that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem necessary to provide desirable connections between the highways provided for and Erie Street, Gainesville Street, Hartford Street, Sixteenth Street, and Seventeenth Street SE. The entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in the proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for the opening, widening, and extension of highways, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder and the costs and expenses of the necessary surveys and preparation of plans, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits. Any land owned by the District of Columbia that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem necessary for the opening, widening, or extension of the highways provided for, if designated as public highways on the plan filed as part of the petition in the proceeding provided for herein, shall become such when the court shall have finally ratified and confirmed the verdict of the jury. It also authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in such cases as they may deem desirable in the interest of economy, to permit buildings, which exist and which project beyond the highway lines to be established at the time that the petition is filed for the condemnation provided for herein, to remain until such time as the owners of the buildings desire to reconstruct or substantially alter them; but the commissioners shall designate such buildings in the petition.

It also annuls the plan for the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia so far as it affects the subdivision of the Barry farm.

It also appropriates out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceeding, the costs and penses of the necessary surveys and preparation of plans, and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits, and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator to withhold the motion for a moment

Mr. LODGE. I withhold the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3116) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," so as to include State land selections, indemnity school and educational lands. The bill was reported by me this morning from the Committee on Public Lands, and I should like to have it placed on its passage, if there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, February 6, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God and our Father teach us we beseech Thee, as individuals and as a people, the art of self-respect; for if we covet the respect of others and dare to hope for Thy clemency we must respect ourselves. We welcome every just and wholesome criticism touching our individual and our national life. But we thank Thee for the larger faith in human nature which warrants the belief that the vast majority of our people, in private and in public, are honest and sincere; that the vast majority of our homes are pure and sweet. We acknowledge our imperfections, our shortcomings, our sins, and pray most fervently for the Christ spirit that it may possess and control our life. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report-

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union,

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to gentlemen that he promised to recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE AMERICAN ECONOMIST.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a paper, called the American Economist, of February 2, 1912, and ask the Clerk to read the paragraph which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Representative Rucker of Missouri, after the Democratic House caucus on the metal schedule was over Tuesday night, declared that he would not abide by the Underwood plan to reduce the duties on metals, as he wanted an increased duty on zinc. Missouri produces much zinc.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the article just read contains one statement of fact; that is the last sentence—"Missouri produces much zinc." I am proud to say this is true. I think Missouri produces more zinc than any other State. There is nothing else in the article that is true. Every other suggestion contained in it is untrue-except the one that I attended the Democratic caucus. I did attend that caucus, participated in its deliberations, heartly agreed with the Democratic leader and all other Democrats, and indorsed the steel bill. My only objection to it was that it did not reduce the rates quite low enough.

I unhesitatingly voted for that provision which removed all the duty from lead and zinc, products of my State. I never uttered a word to any mortal man that I was dissatisfied with the action of the caucus, and this article is gratuitous and untrue.

Has any other Democrat an apology to make. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I offer no apology. I challenge an untrue report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4339. An act to authorize the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River in the State of Tennessee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, but the gentleman from Virginia makes a privileged motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Both gentlemen can not make motions unless recognized.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I had a privileged report, which was presented and was withheld until to-day; and certainly the Committee on Rules must have the right to present a privileged resolution about the procedure in this House under the rules at the proper time, and this is

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state his idea about these conflicting motions. These two motions are of equal dignity. The rule provides that the Committee on Rules shall always be permitted to report a rule. Another rule provides that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider either revenue or appropriation bills is always in order. They are on the same footing exactly, and in this instance it devolves upon the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Texas, because we will get through with that matter in a short time.

If I thought that, Mr. Speaker, I would give way. Mr. HAY.

The SPEAKER. It will not last very long. Mr. HAY. I do not know about that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 366.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, and at such place or places at it may deem necessary.

Mr. MANN. To that, Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois can not raise the question of consideration on this resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair count to ascertain if there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-three Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that there be a call of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I raised the question of consideration on the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York. The authorities are plain that the question of consideration can not be raised against a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order that the question of consideration can not be raised on a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Upon the report of the Committee on Rules the question of consideration can not be raised, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The Chair is clear the question of consideration can not be raised on a resolution of this character. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There is a written report, which I sent up to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution and the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 366.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, and at such place or places as it may deem necessary.

With the following amendment:

Provided, That the expenses incurred under this resolution shall not exceed $250.

The Clerk read the report (H. Rept. 302), as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 366) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department to sit during the sessions of the House at such place or pieces as may be deemed necessary, having considered the same, report it to the House with the following amendment:

"Provided, That the expenses incurred under this resolution shall not exceed $250, and recommend that it do pass."

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] how much time his side desires for discussion of this resolution?

Mr. DALZELL. How much times does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I should suggest 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. DALZELL. We ought to have a little more than that, I think; say 40 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have no objection to 40 minutes on a side, and, therefore, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that general debate be limited to 40 minutes to each side; that I be allowed to control the 40 minutes on this side and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] 40 minutes, and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution and amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution be limited to 40 minutes a side-

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield for a question.
Mr. MILLER. I think more likely it should be asked of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]. I beg to inquire if the minority members of the Committee on Rules favor this resolution?

Mr. DALZELL. They do not.
Mr. MILLER. And it is intended to oppose it?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.
Mr. MILLER. That is all.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to 40 minutes to a side, 40 minutes to be controlled by himself and 40 minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered. Is [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and there objection? it is so ordered.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution speaks for itself and I shall not undertake to discuss the details of the has expired.

from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER]. Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I was the author of the resolution requesting an investigation of the shoe contracts entered into by this Government with certain contractors. In a colloquy on the floor of this House I made the statement that certain men were favored, certain contractors were favored, and also made the statement that bribe money had been paid by these contractors. I was challenged by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], on the other side, to produce the evidence of my statement, and this resolution of mine as presented to the House asks that I may have an opportunity of presenting to the gentlemen of this House and the country at large the facts in my possession. It has been asserted that I am not competent to appear as a member of this committee during this investigation for the reason wholly that I am prejudiced. I have no quarrel with any single individual, but I do recognize this fact, that the people of this country have a right to know whether the officials of our Government are properly conducting the affairs of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I find by consulting the figures presented by the Secretary of War—they say, however, that figures may lie and that liars may figure—and I desire to say incidentally that I have not compiled these figures. The report from the Secretary of War is to this effect:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 5, 1911,

SIR: In response to House resolution 133, dated 19th ultimo, directing the Secretary of War "to send to the House of Representatives full information with regard to certain statements made by Hon. ROBERT E. DIFENDERFER, of Pennsylvania, in the House on April 25, 1911," etc., the said information to cover certain facts concerning contracts for Army shoes as set forth in the resolution, I beg to transmit herewith a memorandum report of the Quartermaster General, dated 2d instant, furnishing the desired information.

Very respectfuly,

On the second page of this report I discovered these facts and figures. The first question is, What proportion of the contract for Army shoes during the fiscal years 1901 to 1911, inclusive, were awarded to the firm of Herman & Co.?

I would just state incidentally that Herman & Co. are a shoe firm at Millis, Mass., very close to the city of Boston. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], in his statement during the colloquy, said that he had never heard of such a firm in Boston or closubore. Note that the statement during the colloque is a firm in Boston or closubore. a firm in Boston or elsewhere. Now it occurs that he has heard of such a firm.

The answer submitted is as follows. It is hardly necessary to read all of it. I will begin with 1903, at the time when there were 17 competitors for the manufacture of shoes for the Army and Navy:

In 1903 Herman & Co. received the contract for 33 per cent of all the shoes made for the Army; in 1904 they received 96 per cent of all the shoes made for the Army; in 1905 they received 100 per cent; in 1906 they received 100 per cent; in 1907 they received 100 per cent; in 1908 they received 64 per cent. And I presume that they would have received another 100 per cent had it not been for the fact that they entered into an agreement with another competitor that they should make the shoes in the event of the contract being divided. I also discover this fact from the report of the quartermaster, that during the period from 1906 to the present time this statement, showing charges and specifications for clothing and equipage made since 1898, shows an apparent loss to the department. But when we come to the matter of shoes, this statement dates from 1906, and is as follows, without giving each item:

The number of shoes sold by the United States Government in that time was 308,729. Now, that was for the reason that the style has changed. It does not take into account one single pair of shoes that was condemned because they were worthless or because they were shopworn. That also must be added, and that is the reason why we desire to proceed with this investigation. The loss to the Government as between the price paid and the price received under the auctioneer's hammer was $276,325.54. We find that many of these shoes cost the Government from $3.50 to $4 per pair, but when we ascertain the price that the Government received we find that these shoes sold for barely a dollar a pair, that they were sold in quantities so large that few individuals were able to purchase them, and we also find during this investigation that a combination was formed, and that these shoes sold for 95 cents and $1.02, and that the same shoes were sold back to the State Militia of Pennsylvania for $2.54.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Floop of Virginia). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFEB]

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I would like to have a few minutes

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes additional

Mr. DIFENDERFER. The purpose of this request is that we of the committee propose to appoint a subcommittee to investigate the books of the Schuylkill Arsenal in the city of Philadelphia. To bring the books here would entail a great deal of loss, not only of money but of time, and our proposition is that we spend this money—not $250, as I am absolutely convinced in my own mind that it will not take $100to investigate this matter, so far as we are concerned, in Phila-It would require our expenses there, car fare, and delphia. hotel bills, and possibly a stenographer. Our committee has so far developed a great deal of information without one single dollar of expense to the Government other than the publishing of the report. And it would cost considerably less for this committee to go to the city of Philadelphia than it would to have all their books and accounts brought here, with the witnesses that would necessarily have to be here to testify in this matter. And we thought, as a matter of economy, that the proper thing to do would be to come before this House and ask that this resolution be passed, that this money be granted. And I am going to say voluntarily that if the House is so picayunish that it does not propose to give us the money as individuals, will pay our own expenses to the city of Philadelphia and take this testimony, if you will grant us the privilege of taking it outside of the District of Columbia. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] to consume some of his time

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendment be held to be pending:

Provided, That in lieu of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the charges made by the Hon. Robert E. Diffenderfer in the House of Representatives on April 27, 1911, and before the Committee on Military Affairs on May 11, 1911: Provided also, That the Committee on Military Affairs shall, for this purpose, have the same powers as those accorded to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department by this resolution, as well as the power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and shall report its findings to the House before May 1, 1912.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in view of the agreement that has already been made I shall, of course, have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I expected an objection would be heard.

I have had a resolution to that effect lying in the Committee on Rules since June 21, 1911, and it had no attention whatever.

Now, the purpose of this resolution is to investigate certain inspections of shoes made by Army officers. In consequence of these inspections some inspectors were discharged, and John Mc-Brearty, now or formerly of Rosemont, Pa., in the district of Mr. Difenderfee, was disqualified for fraud as a bidder for Army and Navy supplies.

I shall endeavor to show you that this matter ought not to be investigated by the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, of which Mr. Difenderfer is a member, but should be investigated rather by the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. Difenderfer introduced this rule. He has been before the Committee on Rules asking that this resolution be reported, and if it is passed in its present form he will be charged with the judicial function of investigating these shoe contracts.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to interrupt the gentleman with a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman objects to this resolution, among other things, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by virtue of having introduced this resolution, will be a member of the investigating committee?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Among other things.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Among other things. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if that is not the condition obtaining with reference to all of these other investigations-that the mover of the resolution is made chairman of the committee conducting the investigation?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think when the gentleman from Colorado has heard the whole story he will agree that I am right.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I hope the gentleman will answer that specific question. If that is not the usual rule and the usual practice?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; I shall not answer that specific question. I shall endeavor to show, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. DIFENDERFER himself is the accuser in this matter; that he is directly interested in its outcome; and that he deliberately sought a place on the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department with this very circumstance in mind. shall show you that this matter has been partially investigated already by the Committee on Military Affairs, and that as long ago as last June I introduced a resolution asking for a thorough investigation by that same committee.

Now, on April 25, 1911, I made a speech in the House of Representatives on the boot and shoe trade. During the progress of that debate a colloquy occurred, and you already have had given to you on your desks a printed copy of that colloquy. Here for the first time Mr. DIFENDERFER appeared as the accuser, and he states his charges:

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Is it not a fact that Herman & Co. absolutely control, after freezing out every competitor in the United States, the manufacture of shoes for the Army and Navy of the United States?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have never heard of Herman & Co. in my life, and I am probably somewhat familiar with the boot and the Army and I am probably somewhat familiar with the boot and in my life, and I am probably somewhat familiar with the boot and shoe trade.

Mr. Diffenderfer. Why, they are the gentlemen engaged in the business in the city of Boston, Mass.

Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts. I say to the gentleman that I have never heard of such a manufacturer or dealer in my life, in Boston or elsewhere. I do not, of course, say that he does not exist, but—

Mr. Diffenderfer. I shall be at liberty, then, in the near future to show to the gentleman that they have had absolute control of the shoes manufactured in this country for the Army and Navy, and that they have frozen out competitors that I know of, who have lost out and to-day are bankrupt owing to the fact that this firm of Herman & Co. have used their influence with the Government representatives of the United States, or those in control of the Government of the United States have used their influence to freeze out competitors and have placed them on the blacklist, so to speak, and have even gone so far as to give money so that other firms may not be competitors after freezing them out.

The word "had" materially changes the meaning of this sentence. It did not appear in the original reporter's notes, but was inserted with a pen before the publication of this debate in the Congressional Record.

Mr. Difenderfer. * * * But, in connection with what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] has said, I would like to add this question: Whether it is not a fact that when specifications are issued for a certain grade of Army shoes Shrewsbury leather is indicated in the specifications?

Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts. I have not the slightest knowledge of that

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I will say to the gentleman that that is the case, and in a case like that they can certainly make their prices, because they control the Shrewsbury output of leather.

Thus you see that Mr. DIFENDERFER on April 25, 1911, first appeared as an accuser of fraud in this matter.

The sum and substance of the accusation is this: That Herman & Co. have captured all Army and Navy shoe contracts; that this has been done by the connivance of the authorities, who included in these specifications a clause requiring the use of "Shrewsbury" leather in certain kinds of Army and Navy shoes.

The second appearance of Mr. Difenderfer as an accuser was in an interview which appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer on April 30, 1911. I hold that interview in my hand. His next appearance as an accuser was before the Committee on Military Affairs on June 16, 1911. Subsequently, toward the end of June, after he had been elected to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, he again gave out an interview making the same accusations and announcing that the committee of which he is a member would give a hearing.

To revert to the chronological development of the matter.

Two days after the original accusations were made by Mr. DIFENDERFER, I introduced resolutions of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy asking for full particulars as to the truth of Mr. Diffenderfer's allegations. A little later Mr. DIFENDERFER followed suit with similar resolutions of inquiry.

His resolutions were substantially the same as my own except that he asked for information covering a longer period, which was proper, and except that he omitted all mention of "Shrewsbury" leather by name from his questions as to specifications. He covered it in a general way, however.

The Committee on Naval Affairs responded promptly, and the resolutions were passed and answered by Secretary Meyer. The Secretary's replies showed that "Shrewsbury" leather had never appeared in Navy specifications, and that the only shoe manufacturer ever disqualified by the Navy Department was one John McBrearty, of Rosemont, Pa., in the district of Mr. Diffenderfer. McBrearty, it appeared, had been disqualified for fraud on the findings of a board of officers of the United States Army. This reply of Secretary Meyer also showed that in the 11 years, from 1901 to 1911 inclusive, outside of openmarket purchases, the Navy Department had awarded contracts as follows:

To McBrearty _____
To Gimbel _____ To McCarthy _____

Total_

Now, as to the resolutions of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War. Before reporting either Mr. Diffenderfer's resolution or my own, a subcommittee on Military Affairs gave two hearings, one of them to Mr. DIFENDERFER and the other to me. On May 16 came a hearing before the full Committee on Military Affairs, and those proceedings are a matter of record. I called the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs to the fact that Members of Congress are safe from libel suits, no matter how libelous their utterances on the floor of the House may be. I clearly indicated the impropriety of permitting this immunity to be abused, and asked whether a Member of Congress should be allowed, unpunished by the House, to make libelous statements not susceptible of proof. I announced my intention of following the matter up.

Mr. DIFENDERFER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman think it would be in order, then, for him to permit me to

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Absolutely, before an ourself. [Applause on impartial committee, but not before yourself. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is why I introduced my resolution.

Capt. Hannay, a young officer of the War Department, without personal knowledge of the matter, presented the views of Humphrey, Col. Pond, Col. Pullman, and Maj. Littell, exposing the practices of John McBrearty and calling for the discharge of certain inspectors.

Mr. Difenderfer reiterated his charges and finally intimated that a fraudulent substitution of shoes was made when the Army officers submitted the exhibits for examination.

During the course of this hearing on May 16, 1911, I mentioned that I should press this matter further and that the investigation would probably come either to the Judiciary Committee or to the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. WATKINS, of Louisiana, suggested the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. This was the first intimation which I had received that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department would be given jurisdiction, except that in the Philadelphia Inquirer of April 30 had appeared an interview from Mr. Difenderfer announcing the fact that he was confident that he could establish a prime facie case before Congressman Helm's committee, which happens to be the committee in Soon came the answer of Secretary of War Stimson to the resolutions of inquiry. From this it appeared that "Shrewsleather never was required in Army specifications, but that the specifications in 1903 alone, some two years before McBrearty was disqualified, called for "Shrewsbury" leather, or its equal. The reasons for this item in the specifications of 1903 were fully explained by Capt. Hannay to the Committee on 1903 were fully explained by Capt. Hannay to the Committee on Military Affairs. It also appeared that in the 11 years covered by Mr. Diffenderfer's resolutions Herman had received 57 per cent of the contracts. It also appeared that during that same period 76 per cent of the contracts were awarded to the lowest bidder, and full explanation was given when such was not the

Meanwhile, Mr. DIFENDERFER was making efforts to get on the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, but there was no vacancy for him. It was necessary to make a vacancy. A member of the committee, Mr. Booher, was approached, not by Mr. Difenderfer, but by some one avowedly acting in his behalf. This member consented to a transfer to another committee, and on June 2, 1911, he was transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and Mr. Difenderfer was chosen in his place. When the member in question consented to the transfer he had no knowledge of Mr. Difenderfer's purpose, but afterwards Mr. Difenderfer thanked him for his courtesy and told him that a matter was to come before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department in which he was personally interested.

Not being minded without a struggle to allow Mr. DIFEN-DERFER to investigate his own allegations, on June 21, 1911, I introduced a resolution for the investigation of the whole matter by the Committee on Military Affairs.

And right here I wish to answer the gentleman from Colorado. I totally disagree with the practice prevailing in this House of allowing the introducer of a resolution to serve on the special committee of investigation which he asks for. plause.] I think it a bad practice from beginning to end. know that on a special committee on which I serve there happens to be the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Stanley], but I wish to cast no reflections upon the gentleman from Kentucky, because I wish here and now to testify to my admiration of him.

This is the resolution that I introduced on June 21, 1911:

House resolution 219.

House resolution 219.

Whereas on April 25, 1911, in the House of Representatives, the Hon. Robert E. Diffenderfer, of Pennsylvania, made certain charges to the effect that fraudulent practices exist in the War and Navy Departments relative to the contracts for Army and Navy shoes, and that certain contractors are favored by means of a blacklist excluding other competitors and by a requirement in the specifications prescribing the use of "Shrewsbury" leather; and

Whereas it appears by the evidence taken before the Committee on Military Affairs on May 16, 1911, and by a letter from the Secretary of War dated June 5, 1911, and by a letter from the Secretary of the Navy dated May 20, 1911, that no such fraudulent practices exist or have existed; that only one competitor, to wit, John McBrearty, has ever been punished by exclusion, and then only for a period of four years, in consequence of frauds; and that Shrewsbury leather has not been mentioned in the specifications except on a single date, to wit, February 27, 1903, and then only to indicate a certain standard by the words "Shrewsbury or equal": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the charges made by the Hon. Robert E. Diffenderfer and report to the House what action ought to be taken. For this purpose the committee snall have power to send for persons and appers and administer oaths, and shall have the right to report that resolu-

All the Committee on Rules has to do is to report that resolution, which has laid with them over seven months, if they want this thing investigated by an impartial committee. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Floop of Virginia). The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A few days later a Philadelphia paper appeared with a double-column article, headed as follows: "Difenderfer says United States maintains shoe-contract blacklist."

The article quotes my resolution of June 21, and comments on it in this way:

This resolution was not passed. Instead the House named a comittee on Army and Navy expenditures, consisting of seven members. r. DIFENDERFER is one of the seven, four being Democrats and three Republicans.

Next follows an interview with Mr. DIFENDERFER in this article, in which he says:

The Gardner resolution was intended to make me disclose what I new in advance of a hearing by the committee of which I am a

He then explains that the Army shoe-contract question is to be taken up by his committee, and tells this newspaper that I intimated that such a report would be made as would bring him before the bar of the House for censure.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman the name of the paper.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will ask Member to take this clipping over and show the gentleman. Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. All he wants is the name of

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will give it to him for inspection. I have not the name of the paper. The clipping was sent to me. The name was cut off.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I want to say that I never made any such statement.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman can see it in that clipping which I have sent to him. I will ask that that be returned to me, please. Does the gentleman wish to read it?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. No; I never made any such statement as the gentleman has stated the contents to be. I want to say now that I never made any such statement.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman examined this article?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Inasmuch as the gentleman stated its contents, I need not examine it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then the gentleman denies the fact that he ever made it. There is a long interview which purports to come from Mr. Diffenderfer. I will read some more of it:

I began the investigation which led to the charges made last November and have gone pretty deeply into the subject. I have startling facts in my possession, most of them in the shape of documentary evidence.

He has testified before the Committee on Military Affairs that he had anonymous letters by way of documentary evidence. He is quoted further:

There has been rank favoritism in the handling of the shoe contract.

I want to emphasize the fact that nothing can turn me from the course I have marked out. I am going to the bottom of this condition and expose the whole vile practice to the light of day. Already those who will be involved are apparently taking alarm. My secretary has been approached by a man named Cox, who offered her a bribe if she would turn over to him certain documents in the case.

Mr. Speaker, that is the lady who discovered there were Italians waiting in the corridors of the Office Building to search the gentleman's room. [Laughter.]

According to this paper he says that I have intimated that such a report would be made as would bring him before the bar of the House for censure. That is not exactly true, but it is mighty near the truth; so he need not have denied it. I did say before the Committee on Military Affairs that if he can not prove the charges I have felt that either he should be censured by the House, or, if that seems too severe for a new Member, that his remarks should be stricken from the RECORD.

A word now as to my own interest in this matter. beginning I had none, except that I dislike loose statements and loose accusations made on the floor of the House against undefended individuals. Mr. Herman is not a constituent of mine, but he is a constituent of Mr. WEEKS. So far as I know I never heard of him before Mr. DIFENDERFER mentioned his name. I never met him but once in my life, and that was last autumn, long after Mr. DIFENDERFER's accusation, at a dinner of the Boot and Shoe Club of Massachusetts.

In the Pocket Directory of Shoe Manufacturers for 1912 he is rated as a class C manufacturer, which means that his factory's capacity is from 1,000 to 5,000 pairs per day. His counsel testified before the Committee on Military Affairs that Mr. Herman's output is from 1,000 to 1,200 pairs per day. In this same Pocket Directory of Shoe Manufacturers I have counted about 40 factories in one city of my district alone—the city of Haverhill—which are rated in the same or in a higher class than Mr. Herman's establishment. It is scarcely to be class than Mr. Herman's establishment. It is scarcely to be wondered at that I never heard of him.

The gentleman before the Committee on Military Affairs asked if Herman was not rated in Dun or Bradstreet at $300,000. I looked it up. I find that the gentleman was right as far as 1911 was concerned, but at the time that this man ousted McBrearty, by the connivance of our Army officers, out of existence, according to Mr. Difference, this gigantic overpowering Herman was rated in Dun, 1903, at $125,000 to $200,000 and in Bradstreets at $75,000 to $100,000. In 1905 he remained the same in Dun, but had grown in Bradstreet to $100,000 to $150,000.

As this matter has progressed I confess that I have become eager in the chase. The wording of some of Mr. Difenderfer's interviews has distinctly irritated me, especially when he indicates a disbelief in my statement on the floor of the House that I had never heard of Mr. Herman.

Which one of my fellow Members has ever considered the pain to an Army officer, or to a faithful Government official, of having his good name loosely called in question? I recall to mind the investigation before the Rules Committee last summer of the commissioner of immigration at the port of New York, a most honorable, conscientious, high-minded official. For the first two days the newspapers were filled with the mouthings of his opponents. Think of the pain to a sensitive man. Think of the pain inflicted on his family. On the third day his accusers literally tumbled over themselves to exonerate him, explaining that it was really the immigration law which was cruel, not the commissioner. Mr. Burnett, of Alabama, and I appeared together as witnesses in the commissioner's behalf. We had served many years on the Committee on Immigration and knew his work. Personally, I implored the Rules Com-mittee to report one way or the other, not to leave the man in suspense with this smirch on his name. The chairman assured us that the matter would be promptly taken up and finally

Did the newspapers publish all this? If they did so, the testimony was so condensed or so hidden that it escaped my observation. So far as I know, the Rules Committee has taken no action. It has neither exonerated the commissioner nor has it ordered the investigation. This inaction is not justice. We ought not to be content to let this smirch remain, even if it only gives pain to one unfortunate official and to his family. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I have no patience with a policy of investigation which pursues with a blare of trumpets a matter like the "Dick to Dick" letter, and then lapses into timid silence when the accusers are dumbfounded. [Applause on the Republican side.] I hope that this proposed investigation will be conducted on different lines by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Painful as it must be to certain Army officers and to Mr. Herman and to their families, I hope that it will be pursued to the bitter end. If those parties are guilty, let them suffer the penalty. If they are innocent, let us not relapse into profound silence.

Out with our verdict one way or the other. If the facts show it say frankly to the country that our colleague is the man who deserves censure. [Applause on the Republican side.] If it appears that his charges are untrue, let the committee show by its report and by its recommendations that the privi-leges of the House of Representatives are not to be abused with impunity and are not to be permitted to serve as licenses for libelous tongues. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether that statement is true or false, that to-day Mr. Herman is quoted in Bradstreet and Dun as worth $300,000?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In my speech I just said so. Mr. DIFENDERFER. Then it is very true that he has grown in wealth considerably since 1903, has he not?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Like all shoemakers. Mr. DIFENDERFER. I desire to say this in respect to the proposition-

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. POU. I have charge of the time, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Chair did not recognize the gentleman from North Carolina when the gentleman from Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. POU. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Three minutes.

Mr. POU. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has seen proper to bring in the name of John McBrearty, a former contractor of this Government, a man who made more than a million and a half pairs of shoes for the Government, and but 11 pairs in all the time he furnished those shoes were returned as imperfect; and when the Argentine Government wanted a man to furnish shoes they asked the Quartermaster's Department to recommend a man, and they recommended John McBrearty, a man they afterwards blacklisted. Now, I want to be placed in the position where I can show why these things occurred. It is not for John McBrearty alone, but I want to show to the people of this country that their interests must be guarded and that no man can stand upon the floor and threaten the liberties of a colleague. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have no personal interest in John McBrearty. John McBrearty is a constituent, true enough, but he is a Republican, who, no doubt, voted against me. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Difenderfer] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]? Mr. DIFENDERFER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that Mr. John McBrearty went around your district stating things to the discredit of the Hon. Irving P. Wanger?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Not to my knowledge. He never said a word that I know. Is that the animus in this thing? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Is that the sting?
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Is it the investigation of the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; it is the investigation of Robert E. Difenderfer.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I appeal to the Members of this House whether I had the right or not to bring in that resolution and ask its consideration on the floor of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts? Mr. DIFENDERFER. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Can you any less well present your facts before the Committee on Military Affairs than you can to your own committee?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Well, that is a question. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I do not want to impugn any committee, and I do not say that the Committee on Military Affairs would not go into the investigation. But this is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, where it was placed by this House on June 6, 1911. Now, the gentleman's proposition is to take it out of the hands of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and place it with another committee, when the House has already granted the privilege to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Difenderfer] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield from my own time one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Diffenderfer] to answer the question.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] desire to take the one minute of time? If not, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] is

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the committee to which this matter has been referred, I want to give to this House the complete assurance that the committee shall under no circumstances be controlled by any personal matter existing between the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Massachusetts has somewhat indirectly reflected upon the committee to which, under the regular orders of this House, this investigation has been referred. This committee has jurisdiction to investigate this charge. Disavowing any participation in any feeling that may have arisen between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman will proceed, not with any brass band or pyrotechnic or noisy display, in the investigation of this matter. And I submit to this House, whether during all the time that the committee has been investigating matters relating to the War Department, if a single fact has been developed here to show that it has in the least proceeded along lines that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has insinuated it is the intention of the committee to follow: intention of the committee to follow.

I submit to the gentleman from Massachusetts the statement made before the committee by the Chief of Staff to the effect that the work this committee has done in its investigations in the War Department has been beneficial and that he welcomes it as improving the service and resulting in economy in the War Department. Not a single thing has been done, so far as my knowledge goes, that has not met the fullest approbation and approval of the department. I could instance here on this floor matters that this committee has had in charge, a score of them, and out of that number virtually all that this committee has dealt with has resulted in economy to the Government. And when you come to consider the military bill you will see the result of the work of this committee bearing fruit and giving evidence of its good faith and its work in the investigation of this department. I want to say that this committee will feel no concern in this investigation as to the personal matters that have arisen beween the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFFENDERFER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. I understand from the gentleman from Massachusetts that Mr. Herman is not a constituent of his. With this assurance to the House that this investigation shall proceed with the utmost fairness, I wish to say, further, if in the course of the investigation anything to the discredit of the constituent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. McBrearty, be developed the House will have the full benefit and knowledge of it. The issue here is simply this: The committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, will it be cheaper for the committee or a subcommittee to go where the proof is to be had or to require all the witnesses, books, and papers to be brought here? It would seem apparent and obvious that there are matters that require investigation. Certainly, such investigation can do no barm. It calls for a paltry sum of $250, a mere bagatelle, mere pin money. The proposition presented to this House solely for consideration is not what exists between the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but are there, in fact, matters in vogue in the War Department that require investigation, and are certain favorites being benefited. or are they not? Are certain favors being granted, or are they

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. HELM. With pleasure.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If in these charges that have been made a considerable spirit has developed pro and con upon the subject, does the gentleman consider that there is any impropriety in the maker of the charges sitting in judgment as one member of the committee upon their thorough investigation and trying conclusions therefrom?

Mr. HELM. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. For my part, and speaking solely for myself, these committees on expenditures in the several departments are in a measure inquisitorial in their scope. The nearest approach to a comparison that I can find is that they act in the capacity somewhat of a grand jury. The mere fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania happens to be in possession of facts, which by peculiar conditions have been brought immediately to his knowledge, of abuses—if they are abuses, and I am not prepared to say that they are abuses; but his contention is that he is in possession of certain facts that certain conditions do exist the foot I say that he is in possession of certain facts that certain conditions do exist—the fact, I say, that he is in possession of this information, to my way of thinking, does not disqualify him from developing, as a member of the committee, those facts to their fullest extent before the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield to me?
The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?
Mr. HELM. One moment. As I understand, this resolution Mr. HELM. One moment. As I understand, this resolution was originally referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, after a short, unsatisfactory, and limited investigation, it was by that committee referred back to the House and was by the House referred to this committee which has jurisdiction.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken as to that. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HELM. In just a moment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I want to correct the mistaken.

Mr. HELM. The fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may or may not have sought membership on this committee is not a matter that this committee could take any knowledge of, and I disavow any knowledge of his having sought any posttion on the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The question I would like to ask the gentleman is whether that fact would not have some bearing on the action or proceedings of the committee if that gentleman sat as a member of that committee?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HELM, With pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT. The practical thing before this House now is simply the question where this committee shall sit. If the committee has jurisdiction of this subject matter, they can send to Philadelphia and bring the witnesses and books here, and this resolution does not add to or detract from the power already possessed by the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Mr. HELM. That, to my way of thinking, is a very apt statement of the issue. It simply resolves itself into a proposition as to whether it would be more economical to send to Philadelphia and have these witnesses brought here, or that a limited number of this committee should go there and ascertain what are the facts.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit one more question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. HELM. With great pleasure
Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman from Kentucky has cited as a supposed analogy the work of a grand jury. Does the gentleman consider that a citizen who was the complaining witness, who would be the complaining witness before a grand jury concerning matters of a criminal nature to be inquired into, would not thereby be disqualified under the rules and practice in any court?

Mr. HELM. In the jurisdiction in which I have practiced law I have invariably found—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has sayingd.

has expired.

Mr. HELM. I ask for one minute longer.

Mr. POU. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HELM. In the jurisdiction in which I have practiced the court invariably instructs the members of the grand jury that they should disclose to the grand jury all information within their knowledge touching any matter that comes before it within the jurisdiction of the grand jury.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That fact being disclosed would, under the laws of most of the States, disqualify a complaining witness from being one of the prosecutors before the grand jury sitting in judgment upon the case, would it not?

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman kindly repeat his question? Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is a little involved. I say, if a grand jury were investigating certain matters, if a matter were up for consideration before the judge, before empaneling of the grand jury, it would be an objection to his member-ship in the grand jury that he was a complaining witness in the matter to be investigated, would it not?

Mr. HELM. In the jurisdictions in which I have practiced I have never yet found that the possession of knowledge by a grand juror of an act for investigation disqualified him for service as a grand juror.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again The gentleman from Pennsylvania has six minutes left and the gentleman from Texas fourteen.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. GARDNER]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett], who says that the whole question is to decide the place at which the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department shall sit, whether he thinks that these charges ought to be investigated by a committee of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. Difenderfer] is a member?
Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, I decline to be catechised by the gentleman along that line. what was the practical question before the House. Let me say to the gentleman this, which the gentleman knows is true: If this committee has jurisdiction of the matter now, under the rules of the House, then that committee, with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Difenderfer] on it, may to-day or tomorrow or at any time send to Philadelphia, summon those witnesses, with their books and papers, and hear this case; and if they have jurisdiction they might do that even if a resolution were passed authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. What would be the objection to passing my resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to make the investigation?

Mr. GARRETT. Under the regular rules of the House, as I understand it, this committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think if everything was smooth sailing that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department would be asking for this right to go to Philadelphia and get that which they can get from Philadelphia under a subpœna duces tecum?

Mr. GARRETT. I understand the only purpose on earth in asking for it is as a matter of economy and as a matter of convenience.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] a question. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] assure the House that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] will not be on the subcommittee which investigates this matter?

Mr. HELM. I will answer that question by saying we will take the matter up. I do not control this committee. no brief or authority to say what the committee shall do. is a matter to be taken up before the committee, and if the committee decides that Mr. Diffenderfer shall go, he will go. I am not going to say to this House that I am the master or the dictator or the controller of this committee. It is a matter that is solely in the province of the committee to determine and the subcommittees of his committee, does he not?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman appoints

Mr. HELM. I may or I may not. The subcommittees may be appointed by the chairman, and sometimes are elected by

Mr. DIFENDERFER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts rield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will in a few minutes. The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I decline to yield until I have completed my statement.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I desired to ask my question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts declines

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] that if he will assure the House that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Difen-DERFER] will not be on the subcommittee, and if he will assure the House that he will use his best effort to that purpose, and that he will use his best effort to see that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department reports to the House its findings on this question, and reports its judgment on the question whether or not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Difenderfee] was justified in his charges, then I will withdraw my opposition to the resolution.

Mr. HELM. I will say to the gentleman that my course in this matter shall be governed as it has in the past. I shall give no pledge, and I do not feel called upon to give any pledge. I am responsible to the majority, who have commissioned me as the chairman of this committee, and I feel that responsibility to its utmost, and I shall take these matters into full consideration and protect and guard the interests which have been entrusted to me and the committee. Further than that I do not feel called upon to make any pledge or promise to anyone, or to do anything other than discharge my duties as I see them honestly and fairly, and as justly as my ability will permit me to do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DIFENDERFER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. The gentleman has made certain charges in his remarks before this House, many of which I consider untrue. He has built up a straw man and has been knocking it down from the time he started until he finished.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is this a question?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. This is the question: Whether the gentleman himself has not gone to the chairman of our committee and solicited him to appoint a man whom he desired on that subcommittee?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I never spoke to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] on the subject in my life.

Did I?

Mr. HELM. The gentleman has not. [Applause on the Republican side.] But in full justice and full fairness I do desire to say that a minority member did come to me and request, or suggest, that the gentleman from Massachusetts had said that if there was a subcommittee appointed he should be on the subcommittee.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That was Mr. HINDS. and that was the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], of the Committee on Rules. Is not that correct?

Mr. HARDWICK. I said that Mr. HINDS was on the committee, and one of the most capable men I ever saw in the House for investigations.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And absolutely competent to take care of our side of the case?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly; I did.
The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to Members that the rule requires that if a Member wishes to interrupt a Member who has the floor he must first address the Chair and get permission. The rule is a very sensible one, tends to prevent confusion, and is in the interest of orderly procedure.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the only question involved here is whether or not this committee, the jurisdiction of which has already been fixed by the rules and within whose jurisdiction this matter comes, shall be allowed to sit outside of the District of Columbia. Neither its power, its jurisdiction, nor its personnel is properly or fairly involved in this proposition.

Now, the further proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] that because a man has expressed on this floor, whether he sits on that side of the aisle or on this, his belief or disbelief in certain things—that for that reason the gentleman from Massachusetts can put him in the attitude of a defendant before the bar of this House and this country, is absurd, unwarranted, and impudent. No less a word ex-

The gentleman from Massachusetts also has said that because the gentleman from Pennsylvania said certain things he had abused his privilege as a Member of this House. I deny it. That is no way to make an argument on this floor. The gentleman has characterized the gentleman from Pennsylvania as a man with a libelous tongue. The criticism was unworthy of the gentleman from Massachusetts and does him little credit in this [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 10 minutes. Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I only want to allude to one or two charges brought by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner]. I do not think there is any reason for anybody to lose his temper about this matter. I think it is to be regretted that any personalities have been indulged in, but the logic of the gentleman from Massachusetts can hardly be sustained. He attacks the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because it appears from the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that one McBrearty lives in Mr. Difenderfer's district in Pennsylvania and at some time or other has been adjudged guilty of fraud. Surely the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not responsible for the fact that McBrearty, a Republican, lives in his district, or that he may have been found guilty of fraud. Certainly no criticism should be heaped upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania because of that fact.

The second charge which has been brought by the gentleman from Massachusetts is against the Committee on Rules. throws up his hands in horror because the Committee on Rules has not made a report respecting the condition of the immigration office in New York City, yet in the very next breath he acquits the Committee on Rules by himself making the statement that on the last day of the investigation accusers fell over themselves in order to vindicate gentlemen who had been I submit that there was no occasion for the Committee on Rules to take any action in this matter.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I read from the chairman's statement at the end of the hearings when I had asked that one thing or another should be decided.

I hope the gentleman will make his question brief. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The chairman of the committee said that we had spent almost three days in the consideration of this resolution, and so forth, and then he said:

I wish to say that the Committee on Rules, as soon as practicable, ill take up the resolution and will make final disposition of the me. The hearing is now concluded.

Mr. POU. The resolution was finally disposed of without ordering any investigation, and the gentleman from Massachusetts himself has proven that there was no necessity for the investigation by alleging on the floor that on the following day the accusers of the New York official fell over each other in order to vindicate him.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. POU. Is not what I have said a fact?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think that that implies on the part of the chairman, in con-nection with the questions that have been asked him, that he would report the resolution either favorably or adversely instead of letting it sleep?

Mr. POU. There was no necessity for any action on the resolution after the very men who had come before the committee had fallen over themselves to vindicate the party under fire.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think that that ought to have been brought out to the country and to the newspapers and to this House?

Mr. POU. The failure to act was equivalent to an adverse report. The resolution has been acted upon finally, and I submit to the gentleman there was no occasion to make a report upon it, when he himself says that the gentleman who was on trial before the committee was vindicated by the very men who brought charges against him and that they fell over one another in doing so.

Mr. Speaker, it would appear from the charges brought by the gentleman from Massachusetts that this whole matter is to be tried by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER]. There are other gentlemen who are on the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. There are seven gentlemen on this committee. I read on the Republican side, Asher

C. HINDS, PETER M. SPEER, STANTON WARBURTON. The committee is composed of four Democrats and three Republicans. There has been no sufficient reason shown why this investigation should not be concluded by these gentlemen. They already have jurisdiction. It is not proposed to enlarge their jurisdiction. It is not proposed to confer upon them any powers they have not now, except that they be permitted to sit outside of the city of Washington, and the sum of $250 must limit their This limitation is in the interest of economy. So I respectfully submit that this resolution is in line with the precedents of this House, whatever may be the gentleman's opinion, or whatever may be mine. I have very firm convictions as to the proper procedure in matters of this character. but the gentleman from Massachusetts knows, and we all know, that it has been the custom from time immemorial to put upon the committee usually as chairman the man who has been most active in bringing about the investigation. So in this case the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Diffender-FER] says he believes he has evidence which will show wrongdoing, and all that he asks is that his colleagues on this committee, with the assistance he will give them, shall have opportunity to look into this matter. If the gentleman is wrong, then he will fall down before his colleagues on this committee. Let the gentleman from Massachusetts have no fear upon that point. There are no more competent men in this House than the names which appear on the Democratic side of this committee and the Republican side as well. [Applause on the Democratic

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman himself be in favor of permitting seven judges to try a case, with one of the judges a man who is being tried?

Mr. POU. Why, that is not the question in this case. I want to say to the gentleman that as a matter of course I would not be in favor of having any judge who was partial, who had expressed an opinion, try any case; but does not the gentleman know that it has been the custom from time immemorial to put upon the committee the man who has been most active in bringing charges? Has not that been the custom?

Mr. MANN. It never has been the custom anywhere. It has been the custom to put on the committee as chairman the man who proposed a resolution for the appointment of the committee when the man himself was not proposing the charges, but only proposing an investigation of the charges. The gentleman can find no case, since I have been a Member of this House, where a man preferring charges was put upon a committee to investigate those charges.

Mr. POU. There have been no charges preferred here, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has suggested that certain things existed that ought to be investigated. That is as far as he has gone.

Mr. MANN. I heard the gentleman's statement before the

Mr. POU. I know that gentlemen upon that side have sought to put the gentleman from Pennsylvania in that position, but they can not properly do so upon the statement that he has made here, to wit, that he believed certain things exist that ought to be investigated. He himself has expressed no opinion, as far as I understand, as a member of this com-

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the original statement on the floor at the time, and he asserted the fact.

Mr. POU. I read it. Bossibly he went further than I have stated, but I submit that he has not disqualified himself to act on this committee, that the investigation asked here is in line with the precedents, notwithstanding the statements of gentlemen on the opposite side of this Chamber; and I say in conclusion that no sufficient reason is shown why the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not qualified to serve as a member of this committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to this resolution.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amended House resolution.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist upon that motion?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 168, nays 105, answered "present" 12, not voting 107, as follows:

ing to his name?

Mr. FARR. I was in the lobby listening, and was coming into the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. On motion of Mr. Pou, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

TENTS FOR CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the resolution (H. J. Res. 184) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Macon, Ga., in May, 1912, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. BARTLETT. · I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended to read as follows: "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents and cots for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Macon, Ga., in May, 1912."

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from further consideration of H. R. 16689, a bill legalizing certain conveyance heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railway Co., and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations vas discharged from the consideration of Document No. 305, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimates of an appropriation required by the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, for the Coast Artillery Reserves of the Organized Militian and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hav] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18956, making appropriation for the support of the Army.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 18956, making appropriation for the Army. The Clerk will report

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

VREELAND] is recognized.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, through the courtesy of the House I have been given an hour and a half in which to discuss the banking and currency legislation recently proposed by the National Monetary Commission.

Three and a half years ago Congress appointed a National Monetary Commission for the purpose of investigating the monetary systems of our country and of the other great nations of the earth, with directions to report back to Congress such changes as may be needed in our banking and currency system. In pursuance of that command the Monetary Commission has reported a bill in detail, which it recommends should be placed on the statute books. That commission was composed of 9 Members of the House and 9 Members of the Senate. There are 16 remaining Members at the conclusion of three and one-half years of investigation. The report of the commission and the recommendations are signed by every man on that commission. They have made a unanimous report. That means, Mr. Chairman, that in the opinion of all the members of the Monetary Commission the bill which they propose and recommend is for the advantage of all parts of this great country, because the 16 members signing the report represent not only both of the great political parties, but they represent every section of our country.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is not the work any one man. It is not the work of any ten men nor of any of any one man. hundred men. It is the result of the discussion and study that has gone on among thousands of people competent to discuss the subject during the past three years. It is the composite opinion of all those who have taken part in the discussion.

Mr. Chairman, this plan has been approved by practically all of the bankers of the United States. It has been approved by practically all of the political economists and professors of political economy in the colleges of the United States. That is, we have both the practical men who conduct the business, and the theoretical men who study principles and experiences, agreed in the main upon the principles which we embody in this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, those who approve of this legislation and those who disapprove of it alike agree that our banking and currency system is antiquated and dangerous. While nearly every other great nation, during the last 50 years, has revolutionized its banking and currency system, the United States still retains the system adopted in 1863, while in the throes of civil war.

There is another thing which intelligent people generally agree upon, and that is that this is the most important legislation that is pending before the American people for settlement. The President of the United States during the past summer declared it as his opinion that it is more important than the tariff, more important than conservation, more important than the question of trusts, and more important than any political currency system of the country rests every other great business. When the banking and currency system breaks down, as it has often done, every other business in the country necessarily breaks down with it. It is the most important, because once in about every 10 years during the past half century this great country has been visited by devastating money panics, sweeping over the land, leaving enormous losses and widespread suffering in their wake.

I need not describe panics. We are only too familiar with them. The American people have come to consider them as a sort of dispensation of Providence, as they do earthquakes and cyclones, which are unavoidable. We are all familiar with them. Something starts to frighten the people in some part of the country; credit may already be strained too much by lack of a system that will restrain business from going too fast through rising rates of interest, and a panic starts in New York or Chicago or some other great center; and then the closing of banks, the falling away of confidence, the suspension of cash payments, the breaking down of domestic exchange, followed by shutting down of factories, railroads in receivers' hands, business men unable to carry on their business; finally, hundreds of thousands and sometimes millions of men thrown out of employment.

This is a familiar story to us all, and yet we can not guard against them. No banker can be so conservative and conduct his business upon such lines that he may be sure that he is protected. He may keep the best bonds the country affords in his vaults; they are useless in time of panic. He may keep great quantities of cash in the vaults of his corresponding banks; he is unable to get them after panic sets in. Suppose he keeps every dollar of reserve in his own safe. What good will that do if lack of confidence affects the community in which he lives? What does it matter whether he has 10 per cent or 20 per cent of cash in his safe to pay off 100 per cent of deposits if his depositors are alarmed and panicstricken? It means that it will only take a day or two longer to pay it out.

The bankers of our country have no way to protect themselves, because there is no place where their sound assets can be turned into either cash or credit. It is this fact more than any other which makes our banking and currency system so likely to break down and which makes it so dangerous to the business of the whole country.

PANICS ARE PREVENTABLE.

Mr. Chairman, I stand here to say that, in the opinion of all intelligent men who have studied the question, both here and abroad, these money panics are entirely due to a defective banking and currency system and to nothing else. so, is it not almost a crime for the Congress of the United States to wait a moment longer than necessary before putting upon the statute books a system which will safely carry the business of this great country? I believe these panics have caused greater losses and suffering to the people of the United States than all the wars in which we have been engaged, barring alone the loss of life and limb.

NO MONEY PANICS ABROAD,

What right have I to say that these money panics are due to a defective banking and currency system? I say it, Mr. Chairman, because when we turn to every other great nation on the face of the earth, our competitors for the trade and commerce of the world, with their longer experience and, as I believe, with the sounder principles upon which their banking and currency systems rest, we find that no one of them has had a money panic for more than 50 years.

Am I not justified, then, in saying than when we, the greatest and richest in our resources of all the nations of earth, when we alone have these disastrous and devastating money panics on an average once every 10 years, am I not right in saying it is due to a defective banking and currency system?

We have had money panics in 1873, 1884, 1893, and 1907. We have had semipanics at the commencement of the crop-moving season in many other years, when credit was strained almost to the breaking point, ruinous rates of interest prevailed, and it only needed an incident like the closing of some great bank or business house to start a panic throughout the country.

It remained for the panic of 1907 to convince the American people that panics are due to a bad banking and currency system. There was no possible excuse for it, except the breaking down of our system. It came in the midst of peace and plenty. It came when there was nothing within the country or without to alarm our people. At no time in our history had business of legislation that has been presented.

Why is it the most important question presented to the American people? It is because, Mr. Chairman, upon the banking and ries were running more than full time, wage earners were all employed at high wages. It came like a bolt out of a clear sky to most of our people.

Gentlemen may say that the panic occurred because adventurous business men got possession of some of the great banks of New York City. But so long as the world lasts speculative business men will obtain important positions in the business world. Why should the whole country suffer therefrom? Why should it not be limited to the institutions which permit these men to get control of them?

It may be said that credit was strained almost to the breaking point, and it was the knowledge of this condition which permitted panic to spread so rapidly, and that the business of the country had grown too fast for its capital. This, quite likely, is true, but that is one of the prime defects in our system which we wish to cure. We should have a banking and currency system which gives warning, through rising rates of interest, that we are going too fast. The American people are quite likely to go too fast. They are optimistic and energetic. Under any proper banking and currency system the business people and the bankers of the country would receive notice of too great business expansion through rising rates of interest, instead of going ahead at full speed until they run into a smash up like an express train running off the track.

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that we are the only great country in the world that has money panics. I want you to understand clearly what I mean. Of course, I do not mean that we can escape business depressions arising from natural causes. If we should have a failure, or a partial failure, of crops in the United States, it would mean a depression in business which would affect the whole country. would have less money to spend and could, therefore, buy less of the necessities and luxuries of life. If there was an alarm of war, or actual war, it would, of course, depress many

The point I wish to make clear is that business depressions in our country too often run into money panics. There are runs upon solvent banks in all parts of the country. Finally there is the disgrace of suspension of cash payments throughout the country and the breaking down of domestic exchange. The banks are among the first to become frightened, because they know from experience the weakness of our system. Ten thousand bankers all at once endeavor to draw their money from the money centers where it is deposited. They commence calling loans. They refuse credit to solvent parties. They do the very things which bring on the panic which they fear, They do it, prompted by the instinct of self-preservation. Our system compels every bank to try to protect itself, regardless of the interests of the country, of other banks, or even of its own customers.

The great countries abroad have failure of crops much more often than do we. They have wars and rumors of wars more often than do we. But their business depressions are not followed by runs upon banks, the suspension of cash payments, and the breaking down of their credit systems. It is the money panic in the United States and the loss of confidence resulting therefrom from which it takes the country so long to recover.

NOT LEGISLATION FOR BANKERS.

Mr. Chairman, I want to impress upon the House that this legislation is not a bankers' proposition. It is far beyond that. It is much wider than that. It is a bankers' proposition only in the sense that remedial legislation must be applied to the banking and currency system. I go further than that. I maintain that among all the great businesses of our country the bankers themselves are least concerned and interested in this reform from the standpoint of losses incurred during panic. The bankers are best able to take care of themselves.

The banker often can see the storm coming afar off. That is The bank is a close organization. his business. can quickly take in sail. . He can stop loaning. He can call in his loans, especially those that are out of town. He can even suspend payment behind the walls of a clearing house and refuse to pay his depositors the money which belongs to them, and he escapes insolvency proceedings for so doing, because people know he has no place to procure either cash or credit in time of general panic. The most that happens to all except an insignificant percentage of our banks in time of panic is that their earnings are decreased.

It is different with business men and manufacturers. failure to obtain cash or credit by them may mean the stopping of their factories or of their business. It may, and frequently does, mean their financial ruin. The manufacturer may have to purchase his raw material, carry along his pay rolls, and make up his finished stock for six months or a year before he puts it upon the market. He must depend absolutely upon having a market for it six months or a year away.

Mr. Chairman, suppose that every 10 years the railroads of this country should stop running, or partially stop running, leaving the products of the farm to rot in the field and threatening the cities with starvation. It is evident that legislation would have to be applied to the railroads, but the railroads would not be more interested than all the rest of our people. Not only that, but in regulating railroads as we have we continue to leave the conduct of the railroad business in the hands of railroad men, merely protecting the general public against oppressive charges and providing by statute that all of the people shall receive equitable treatment under like circumstances.

So, in providing for the reform of our banking and currency system, we need to consider bankers only to the extent of proiding that they shall not be able to make undue profits, and that we shall not give to them privileges except those which are to be exercised for the benefit of all the people.

When we remember the losses to farmers during and after panics we can readily see that they are more interested than bankers. When we remember the hundreds of thousands and sometimes millions of wage earners who are thrown out of employment by panics, and that they have no opportunity to foresee or to protect themselves if they could; that when they lose a day's work it is gone forever, we can understand their vital interest in banking and currency reform.

While bankers dread panic as sailors dread shipwreck, yet it has happened in the past that an exceedingly small percentage of our banks failed to pay their usual dividends. Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. Certainly.
Mr. PALMER. The gentleman has said that bankers were not interested in this matter. I ask this for information: Is it not true, as alleged, that the bankers of the country have raised an enormous fund for the purpose of educating public opinion in this matter?

Mr. VREELAND. I do not understand so. I understand that the National Citizens' League, with branches in many of the States, composed entirely of business and professional men of high standing, have asked for contributions for the purpose of circulating literature and have formed an organization in the different States in favor of banking and currency reform.

Mr. PALMER. Is it not true that, by the committee or some other organization, various banks in the cities of the country have been assessed a certain figure and have donated large sums for this purpose?

Mr. VREELAND. I understand that anyone can become a member of the National Citizens' League by paying $1, and will then receive the literature published by them. Without will then receive the literature published by them. knowing much about it, I have also understood that contributions have been asked in various cities, one-half to be made by business men generally and one-half by bankers. I do not know to what extent the banks are responding. My information is that the banks of New York have declined to pay. I do not know to what extent they have responded elsewhere.

Mr. PALMER. What I am trying to find out is whether or not the banks of the country are not behind this proposition.

Mr. VREELAND. I hope so; they ought to be. We have been trying for years to get the banks behind some proposition. It took the panic of 1907 to convince the bankers as well as other people that we had a system antiquated and dangerous and liable to inflict enormous losses upon the country at any

Mr. PALMER. My information is received from a Philadelphia banker, that the banks all over the country had been as-sessed, that the city of Philadelphia had been assessed in the sum of $50,000, and that the banks had actually contributed that amount, and that a large fund, running into several million dollars, had been contributed, intended to educate public opinion

Mr. VREELAND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct, but I am afraid the story has been greatly exaggerated. I have understood that the league has been very insufficiently supplied with money to carry on this purpose. I hope the bankers will be willing to contribute with the other business interests of the country in trying to educate the people along scientific lines of banking and currency reform. Certainly the country needs it badly enough. In the great countries beyond the sea legislatures make economic laws, guided by the advice of experts. In our country legislatures are guided by the voice of public opinion, and we all understand that in so great and complicated a matter as a banking and that in so great and complicated a matter as a banking and currency system for a Nation like ours a tremendous amount of organized and systematic effort must be made in order to get an intelligent public opinion in favor of such legislation.

In endeavoring to procure such legislation the bankers should take the lead, because it is their business or profession. They ought to feel the disgrace of suspending payment, of putting themselves in shape where they may be proceeded against for insolvency under the law of the land, because they are obliged to inflict enormous losses upon their customers through their inability to perform their proper functions as banks.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. Certainly.
Mr. PRINCE. Do I understand that in this free banking system in the United States the banks are political organizations?
Mr. VREELAND. No; I understand just the contrary. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the national banks are not political organizations. They are owned by men of all political parties and they do not take part in politics. I think we have a statute on the books forbidding national banks to make contributions for political purposes.

PRESENT BANKING AND CURRENCY SYSTEM.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is our present system? In order to correct it we must first find out what is the matter with it. Why does it shut up every 8 or 10 years, while the country sits down and waits for confidence to come back to the people? I can not go into this deeply. I can only touch on two or three of the principal defects of our system. I refer gentlement to the report of the Monetary Commission for a fuller enumeration of the details of the trouble.

A few days ago Andrew Carnegie told a special committee of this House that he thought our system was the worst in the world. In some respects he is right. It is a system which compels panic. It is inefficient and costly during normal times. But in some respects, I believe, it is the best system in the world to meet the needs of the people of the United States. We have 25,000 or 26,000 banks of all kinds-7,200 national banks and over 18,000 State institutions. We have a free banking system in both State and Nation; that is, we do not have to go to a legislative body and obtain a charter before starting a bank. We simply apply for a charter under conditions which the law lays down. Our banks are local and home owned. The people of any city or town can get together; they can associate their capital; they can start a bank in that city or town, which exists primarily for the benefit of that community. as their officers men in whom the community has confidence. We have more individual banking units than all the rest of the world put together. This has been one of the great reasons for the upbuilding of this country. We have nearly 40 per cent of the banking resources of the world. We have more gold than any other two great countries in the world.

In contrast to our system, all the other great countries have branch banking. Their systems consist of a few great banks, located largely in some financial center, covering the country with their branches. Canada has 20 banks, not one of them owned west of the longitude of Buffalo. England has 40 or 50 great joint-stock banks, all but two of them in London. France has only three great commercial banks besides the Bank of France, covering the country with their branches. Much may be said in favor of branch banking from an economic standpoint, but our people would never accept it. Under branch banking in 20 years a few great banks in a few of our great cities would own the banking system of the country. Our people are satisfied with our system of home-owned banks. We do not desire to change it in that respect.

But the great trouble with our system is that with our 25,000 banking units there is nothing to bind them together. With 40 per cent of the banking resources of the world, we are unable to unite the strength of our resources in time of need. The trouble with our system is that it falls apart in time of severe stress and strain. There is no cohesion in our system. We have no system under which our banks can cooperate in warding off panic and disaster. We have no keystone to our bank-Our system is all right when the sun shines and skies are clear, but when trouble looms up on the horizon it is unable to protect itself or its customers. Every bank com-The instinct of selfmences looking after its own interests. preservation impels every individual banker to try to protect himself regardless of anyone else, even his customers.

The keynote of banking reform is cooperation among the banks, so that their united resources may be used to ward off distrust and lack of confidence among the people. Give them the power of cooperation under a law which tells them exactly when and how they may cooperate.

LEADERSHIP UNDER THE LAW.

In order to enable 25,000 banks, scattered over a continent, to cooperate for the general good we must have leadership leadership under the regulation of law, leadership under the searchlight of publicity.

Let me give you an example of what I mean. In 1892 one of the great banks of the world, the Baring Bros., of London, was in financial trouble, and the news spread about London that this great bank, whose business reached into every civilized country, was about to close its doors. But they have leadership under the law in Great Britain. The Bank of England came to the assistance of Baring Bros.; they borrowed fifteen millions of gold from the Bank of France; they gathered around them the great joint-stock banks of London; they made a plan for taking over and assuming the liabilities of Baring Bros., and a great panic was averted. The great bank was saved and is doing business to-day.

In 1907, during our money panic in the United States, we lacked leadership under the law, leadership that would be recognized and responsible to the people, and in the midst of that crisis in the city of New York, where the panic raged, Mr. Morgan, a great financier and business man, was called by common consent to assume the leadership and endeavor to stay the It was said to the American people that in order to stay the panic, in order to relieve one of the great banks of and prevent its failure, it was necessary that the United States Steel Co. should absorb one of its great rivals. I am not here to say that it was necessary or that it was not necessary, because I have no knowledge upon the subject, but I do say that in the course of the action said to be necessary to stay the panic it was a great misfortune that this competitor of the United States Steel Co. was absorbed by that institution, because millions of our countrymen have been led to believe the statement, made by prominent men, that that panic and the distress of the people were made the excuse for absorbing the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. by the United States Steel Co.

We should have leadership that the people know is disinterested, that is disassociated from money making, that is responsible under the law for the performance of its duties. When the Bank of England or the Bank of France raises its rate of discount, it gives notice of conditions in business which all the people can heed and accept.

LACK OF ELASTICITY.

Nearly every man who takes up the study of banking and currency legislation in this country starts out with the idea that elasticity in our cash is the main proposition. That results from our experience with money panics. But under a scientific system we never should reach the point of having a money panic. In fact, the better banking and currency system a country has the less of actual cash they use and the more they use different forms of credit representing cash.

Elasticity of cash is important in our country, but elasticity of credit is of vastly greater importance. Ninety-five per cent of our business transactions are done with instruments other than currency. The banking part of our problem is vastly more important than the currency part of it, and yet they are closely bound together.

Elasticity of currency is important in a country which produces eight and a half billion dollars' worth of crops annually. It is stated that we need from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty millions of actual cash to move our crops, and that we do not need cash to that amount during the winter and spring. Everyone knows that there is no classification tem. First, we have a shortage of money, and then we have a redundancy, and one is about as bad as the other.

Where should we get this extension of cash needed to move our crops? We should get it from the expansion of our banknote issues, with gold and short-time commercial paper as a basis. That is where every other great nation gets it, but, unfortunately, the expansion of our bank-note issues in this country bears no relation whatever to the needs of business. We all know that our bank-note issues are increased or decreased solely as a matter of profit to the national banks, that profit depending largely upon the price of Government bonds.

What is our money made up of in this country? And I use the word "money" in its broadest sense. First, we have gold about one thousand seven hundred millions. But gold is not a money which we can import and export to supply elasticity to our system and to move our crops. It is rather the basis of bank-note circulation to supply our needs. Next we have silver-about $740,000,000. That amount is fixed and unchangeable. We have greenbacks and Treasury notes amounting to about $350,000,000. That is absolutely fixed. Then it is evident that if we have elasticity in our currency it must come and should come from our bank-note circulation safely anchored to gold. Our bank-note circulation should increase when business increases and decrease in the same way.

Suppose the First National Bank of Washington is considering the question of issuing $100,000 of additional bank notes, will the officers say to the directors of the bank that the cropmoving season is coming on and the country is going to need more money for the purpose of moving the crops, and therefore the bank should buy more bonds and put out $100,000 more of circulation against them? Do they say that? Not at all. They are not charged with the responsibility of moving the crops. They are running their private business for the benefit of their stockholders. What do they say? They say, "At the present price of Government bonds will it be profitable to this bank to buy $100,000 worth of bonds and issue bank-note circulation against them? Will it pay the bank? If it does, we will do it. If not, we will not do it."

The mere statement shows that this is a vicious system, one that depends not upon the business of the country, but absolutely upon the profits of the banks which have the right to issue these bank notes. We never can have elasticity so long as we have a system resting upon bonds.

Our bank-note circulation should rest upon gold and upon the consumable products of the country—products of the farm and of the factory on their way to market—and when they have been marketed and paid for the bank notes have performed their function and go out of existence until needed again.

EXAMPLE OF JAPAN.

Mr. Chairman, there is no other nation in the world that bases its bank-note circulation upon bonds. The Japanese, because of their great admiration and liking for the United States, adopted our national-bank system along about 1882. But the Japanese are a shrewd and practical people, and they soon saw it was a poor system, unsuited to the needs of business. They appointed a royal commission, and as a result of their report they abolished our banking system and adopted the system which every other great country on earth uses except our own.

Let me give you some examples of the movement of our banknote circulation in years gone by. You remember that after the resumption of specie payments in 1879 the United States started out on a magnificent career of expanding business. From 1881 to 1893 business advanced by leaps and bounds, increasing more than 100 per cent in many lines. That was the time when our bank-note issue should have expanded, securely anchored to gold, to meet the rising needs of business. Did our bank-note issues increase? Far from it. did happen? You will find that it actually decreased during those years nearly $300,000,000. What an eccentric system this is. In 1893 we had a money panic, followed by a period of hard times. The banks were stuffed with money for which there was no need; they did not know what to do with it. During the period from 1893 to 1897, when business was prostrate and the country was full of idle money, this eccentric system of ours increased our bank-note circulation nearly $100,000,000.

We must divorce our bank-note circulation from United States bonds or any other kind of bonds. Its volume must depend upon the needs of the country, resting upon and safeguarded by from 33½ per cent to 50 per cent of actual gold, and the balance of commercial paper made by individuals and corporations of undoubted credit and guaranteed by solvent banks

RESERVES OF BANKS AGAINST DEPOSITS.

The United States has no reserve system worthy of the name. As a method of safeguarding our bank deposits in time of stress it is a total failure. Our reserve system has proved to be the greatest defect in our monetary system, permitting and even inviting money panics. Instead of providing for our safety, our present system of reserves is a standing menace to the banks and to the country. As I have before stated, no bank in the country is able to protect itself against its deposit liabilities unless it locks up its money in its safe, and then it would not be a bank, but a safety deposit storage vault.

What is our reserve system? We have more than 15 billions of deposits in the banks of the United States, largely payable For the purpose of supplying depositors with cash when called for, the national banks are required by law to keep reserves of from 15 per cent to 25 per cent of their deposits on hand, and cash reserves of from 6 per cent to 25 per cent actual cash in their vaults. The laws of various States differ, and, on the whole, State institutions keep somewhat less reserves than the national banks. I suppose we have in cash altogether in all of our banks something like 9 per cent or 10 per cent-let us say nearly a billion and a half dollars, that the banks carry as reserves against this enormous deposit liability. A billion and a half dollars is an enormous A billion and a half dollars in reserves, sum of money. properly placed where it could be used in unlimited quantities wherever and whenever actually needed, would be much more than sufficient to meet any emergency that could possibly Turn again to the experience of the other great countries of the world. There is no one of them where the law requires that any cash reserve at all shall be kept in the banks. Go to England, Austria, France, Germany-any great country abroad—not one of them by law requires a bank to keep a dollar of reserve on hand. What do they do with their cash reserves—which, of course, any good banker would maintain, whether the law requires it or not? Aside from mere till money—the actual cash needed from day to day—they keep their money in what they call their central bank. They make a reservoir of their reserves. They put them literally into one mass, where they can be used here, there, anywhere, whereever needed and in any amount. We are the only country in the world where the law requires the banks to keep great cash reserves in their vaults, and we are the only country in the world where the system breaks down every time the strain becomes severe enough. What do practical, intelligent icans want any more than the mere statement of that fact to convince them that our reserve system is a delusion and a snare? The effect of our reserve system is almost to compel panic. Warned by previous experience, every banker in the United States to-day has his eye on every point of the financial horizon, trying to scan the future and trying to protect himself.

Suppose to-morrow there should be danger of war, due, perhaps, to some racial disturbance on the Pacific coast. Then it is likely that 10,000 bankers from here to the Pacific coast would all at once and in the same mail draw on New York and Chicago for their funds there. Every one of them, regardless of the interests of the country as a whole and driven by the instinct of self-preservation—every one of them would try to get hold of every dollar that he could and put it in his vaults, not because he would need it, but because he fears that he may need it; and when the time comes that he actually does need it he may not be able to get a dollar from any place on earth.

The great banks in the centers can not meet such enormous demands for cash any more than a single bank could pay if a large proportion of its depositors appeared unexpectedly and demanded their money. No system can stand such a strain as that.

We have less than three and a half billion dollars of money of all kinds in the United States with which to pay deposits of $16,000,000,000, besides the billions of dollars of debts of other kinds, and yet we have more money of all kinds and more money per capita than any other nation. It would be impossible to devise a system under which we could suddenly brush aside the 95 per cent of credit instruments used in the place of cash in doing our business and attempt to go upon a basis where cash only could be used. Under the systems abroad, no matter what the trouble may be, no banker would draw from the central reservoir for funds until he actually needed them, resting secure in the certainty that in case of need a solvent bank with liquid assets could obtain all the funds needed. For 50 years or more this system has worked in the countries abroad and they have been free from money panics.

Our reserves are scattered around in 25,000 piles throughout the country, differing in size, of course, but every bank in the country having a portion of them. Let me illustrate the weakness of our system. Suppose we should become engaged in war with Great Britain—an almost unthinkable supposition, and I use it merely for the purpose of argument—and suppose that under the cover of its great fleet Great Britain should land 200,000 regulars in Canada for the invasion of the United

The United States, with its 90,000,000 people, would issue a call for a million volunteers to add to its Regular Army of less than 100,000 men. But suppose that instead of concentrating our strength in the best position for defense or attack, presumably upon or near the border, each one of our 48 States should say, "We will put our quota of troops on our State border, and when the British Army approaches our State line we will fight them and endeavor to beat them back." And so New York would put its quota of 100,000 men on her northern border, and South Carolina would put her quota upon her border, and Texas and California and Colorado and Georgia would put their quota each upon the frontier of the State, and so we would have our 1,000,000 volunteers divided into 48 groups scattered across a continent. What sort of defense would we be able to make? The British would advance and overcome the troops of New York because they would outnumber them and the troops of no other State would come to their support. And then they would march on and destroy the next quota, and the next, and the next, and in the end our Army of a million men, strong enough to take the invaders by the nape of the neck and throw them into the sea, would be overcome and destroyed through lack of cooperation and concentration of their strength. You say that would be an idiotic proposition. It is, and yet I say to you, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness that that is the system which prevails to-day as to the reserves of the banks of the United States against their enormous deposit liabilities. That has been their history in every panic which we have had history in every panic which we have had.

Whenever panic has broken out in any part of the country, instead of being able to mass our reserves and stop the panic before it has a chance to spread, we not only do not go to its relief, but actually try to draw away every dollar that we can from the city so attacked by lack of confidence and mistrust. Our reserve system compels panic whenever any clouds are in the finantical sky. It compels every banker to turn his hand against his neighbor and to fight for self-preservation.

When the United States Treasury has been full to overflowing, as in some years gone by, that has helped us out; and many a year we have been saved from a money panic by money from the United States Treasury deposited with the banks at the commencement of the crop-moving season. To-day the Treasury is not in condition to meet these demands; and the Treasury ought never to be in condition where it is so overflowing that it can take money and deposit it with favored banks throughout the United States. We ought never to depend upon conditions which may happen to exist in the National Treasury to supply us with money to avert panic.

NEW YORK ACTS AS CENTRAL BANK.

To-day the banks of New York City act as a central bank for the country, and five or six of the great banks of New York hold three-fourths of the reserves of banks deposited in that city. Under existing conditions the banks of New York are charged with the responsibility of maintaining credit and of maintaining cash payment in the United States. New York holds the ultimate reserves of the country. The surplus money of banks may be deposited in San Francisco or New Orleans or St. Louis or Chicago, but ultimately those not needed at home find their way to the banks of New York. This is true because New York has the only real call market in the United Stafes. It is a real call market 9 years out of 10, but in the tenth year they often call in vain.

The banks of New York City are not equipped by law to perform the duties of holding the reserves of the banks of the United States, nor of maintaining the credit of the country. I say this with every assurance, because it does not depend upon my statement. It is a matter of history; whenever in the past great financial strain and stress have been put upon them they have broken down under the burden and have been obliged to suspend cash payments and take refuge behind the walls of the clearing house, and that means the suspension of cash payment practically throughout the United States.

They are not fitted to perform the duties of a central bank, and it is a legislative impossibility to give them powers which and it is a legislative impossibility to give them powers which would enable them to perform this great function. The banks of New York are great money-making machines. That is what they are organized for—to make as much money for their stockholders as possible. The president of a great New York bank is successful if he can pile up great deposits and earn great dividends for his stockholders. Expenses in New York are large and competition is keen, and a New York banker can not afford to keep more than 25 per cent of his deposits on hand in cash, which the law requires. Indeed, it rarely happens that all of the New York banks have on hand the requisite 25 per cent. I will guarantee that, year in and year out, you will rarely find that they will average 1 per cent above the 25 per cent they are obliged to keep on hand in cash in their vaults. In 1909, at the commencement of the crop-moving season, the

In 1909, at the commencement of the crop-moving season, the three central reserve cities—New York, Chicago, and St. Louis—had 25.4 per cent reserves on hand. That is, they had fourtenths of 1 per cent above the legal requirement at the commencement of the crop-moving season. If a sudden call had come upon them for $50,000,000 in money, it probably would have meant suspension of cash payment and the issuance of clearing-house certificates.

I have no criticism to make against the banks of New York. They are great institutions, admittedly well managed from the money-making standpoint. They have doubtless performed their duties in caring for the ultimate reserves of the country as well as they could under existing law. But I insist and experience has shown that they are not equipped and we can not equip them by law for safely carrying the reserves of the United States. They can not afford to carry great reserves of from 40 to 60 per cent when business is good, in order to release them when business is bad. We can not equip them by law with the power of additional note issue based on gold and commercial paper. It is a legislative impossibility.

For these reasons, under our present system we are constantly

For these reasons, under our present system we are constantly exposed to having our system break down, as it has so many times in the past. Every time it breaks down it is more likely to break down in the future.

The lesson from all this is that we must have an institution to hold our reserves which is not a money-making institution. The idea of profit must be eliminated from its management. We must have an institution which can carry 45, 50, or 60 per cent of reserves. We must have an institution which we can endow for the benefit of the whole business of the country with the function of issuing bank notes in any amount needed, provided they are based upon from 33\frac{1}{3} to 50 per cent or even a greater percentage of gold and the balance upon commercial paper indorsed by solvent banks.

Let me give you an example: During the panic of 1907 our banks, at great expense, imported over $100,000,000 of gold from abroad. That is a small sum compared with $15,000,000,000 of deposits, but it helped a great deal in working upon the imaginations of the people and helping to restore confidence. When that $100,000,000 of gold reached our shores it was not worth a penny more to pay off the debts of the banks than greenbacks or national-bank notes. But suppose that $100,000,000 in gold had gone to Germany. Immediately, with that $100,000,000 in gold as a basis for one-third and the remaining two-thirds commercial paper indorsed by banks, the great German Reichsbank would have been able to create $300,000,000 in cash or credit for the relief of that country. Even upon a basis of 40 per cent gold the National Reserve Association, which we are proposing to create, would have been able to turn that $100,000,000 of gold into $250,000,000 to pay the debts of the country. That is the reason the banks of New York City are not equipped with the proper function to enable them to perform the duties of carrying the ultimate reserves of our banks.

CONFIDENCE IN BANKING.

Any banking and currency system in the world worthy of the name rests upon confidence. I do not mean blind confidence, but I mean intelligent confidence which is familiar with every detail of the system and knows that it will stand up in time of need.

I have shown that we have less than three and a half billions of money of all kinds against sixteen billions of deposits, and yet we have more than sufficient money to meet the necessary wants of the people. It is only when a multitude of people demand a great amount of money against their deposits for which they have no need that our system breaks down.

We must inspire confidence in the individual depositor and in the banker that we have a system which will furnish them money in any amount whenever they actually need it. Then they will not break down our system by demanding money in great quantities for which they have no need, but only fear that if they wait they may not be able to secure it when they do actually need it.

The trouble with our present system is that the bankers themselves have no confidence in it. The bankers themselves are the great hoarders. The bankers themselves constitute the greatest menace to our system. I do not blame them for it; it is the fault of the system. It is because we have no system of cooperation through which our bankers can mass together their mighty resources for common defense.

We have all heard of the old lady who goes to the bank window in time of financial excitement and says to the teller, "If they have her money all safe she don't want it, but if they have not got it she wants it right off."

Mr. Chairman, that illustrates the principle upon which the whole banking fabric in every country in the world resis. The bankers in the United States or elsewhere are just like the old lady. If they know they can get their money in New York or Chicago or New Orleans, then they do not want it; they go on about their business and keep the wheels of business turning. But instill in their minds the slightest fear that they can not get jt and they all commence trying to get it home.

EXAMPLES OF CONFIDENCE.

Mr. Chairman, I want to give you two or three instances of what confidence in a banking system means, confidence on the part of the banks and of the people.

part of the banks and of the people.

A subcommittee of the National Monetary Commission visited France during our investigation. We went into a great bank there called the Credit Lyonnaise. It was then, I believe, the greatest bank in the world. It had something like 14,000 employees on its pay roll at its head office and at its branches. It had $75,000,000 or $80,000,000 of capital and surplus and over $300,000,000 of deposits. It covers France with a network of branches; the governor of this great institution was very affable and considerate in giving us all information desired. I asked him: "How much cash do you carry in your vaults and in the Bank of France against these great deposits?" He called in his bookkeeper, and told us that on that morning they had in actual cash in their vaults and in the Bank of France about 5½ per cent of their deposits, the greater portion of it in the vaults of the Bank of France. I said to him: "Do you ever have runs upon banks in France, and do your people ever become excited about money matters?" He answered: "We have not had a run in a good many years; but the French people are the most excitable people on the face of the earth in relation to money matters. No other people compare with them in that respect." We said to him: "With the most excitable people on earth, how do you feel safe in carrying this small reserve of 5½ per cent against these great deposits of $300,000,000?" The governor said: "Gentlemen, to-morrow morning, in case of need of cash, we can take out of our vaults $20,000,000 worth of such paper as the Bank of France accepts, as decreed by the great Napoleon more than a century ago; that is, paper having upon it three solvent names. We can take twenty millions of that paper, we can take one hundred and fifty millions of that paper from our vaults over to the Bank of France and bring back the notes of the Bank of France, good as gold from one end of this country to the other. If I could not do that I could not sleep nights; if I could not do that I would not be governor of this institution."

That illustrates the confidence of a great French banker in their system and of the French people in their system—that it will supply them money in any amount whenever legitimately needed. The result is that France has not had a money panic in a century. Perhaps our bankers and our people are braver than they are, or else we have become accustomed to the disgrace of a great country suspending cash payments because our bankers and our people seem to be able to sleep nights, although they know we have no place on earth to turn our credits into cash in time of need.

Mr. FORNES. In France they hold in their vaults 1½ per cent and about 4 per cent in the Government bank, or call it 6 per cent in all. In our central reserve cities they must keep 25 per cent in cash. Then 19 per cent more of their money than ours is in use, or, in other words, the public has the benefit of using that money by borrowing it from the bank. In this country we are at a disadvantage, then, of 19 per cent in keeping idle money on hand according to our system. Is that not true?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I have been trying to illustrate the point, that with the enormous cash reserves we carry, the extravagant and needlessly great reserves, which are a loss to the people of the country and to the business of the country, in spite of that we are unable to prevent our credit system from breaking down and precipitating the country into panic whenever a great strain comes upon it.

Mr. ADAIR. Our national-bank system requires a reserve of only 15 per cent. Is that not true?

Mr. VREELAND. That applies to what we call country banks. The three central reserve cities—New York, Chicago, and St. Louis—must at all times have 25 per cent of their deposits in cash in their vaults. The reserve cities must keep 25 per cent reserve, but may keep one-half of it in deposits with central reserve cities. The country banks must keep 15 per cent reserve, but may keep 9 per cent with reserve cities.

Mr. Chairman, let me give you another example of what confidence in a banking system means. I have already referred to the fact that during the panic of 1907 this great country of ours, with its enormous banking and commercial resources, was obliged to turn to a little island across the sea for help, and we commenced importing gold from England to relieve our great When we commenced to import gold the Bank of necessities. England had in its vaults altogether about $165,000,000 in gold. That was all they had. What did it stand for? What was it? It stood first for the accounts of corporations and individuals which keep their accounts with the Bank of England. It stood next for the gold against which the bank notes of England are circulated among the people. Besides this, it stood for the reserves of all the great joint stock banks of England, because the banks there keep only till money in their own vaults and keep the great bulk of their reserves with the Bank of England. -Driven by our necessities, we commenced to draw upon that gold. We drew away $5,000,000 a week, $10,000,000 a week, $15,000,000 a week, until we had drawn from the vaults of the Bank of England more than $100,000,000 in gold. What did they do? What happened over there? They had $165,000,000 in gold, and we had drawn away more than $100,000,000 of it. Could there be a greater example of the confidence of the peo-ple and of the bankers in their system of banking and currency? Nothing happened. Did the holders of their bank notes, seeing the gold against which they were issued disappear, rush in and demand payment? Not at all. Did the business people demand payment of their accounts? Not at all. Did the people and the bankers of England become alarmed when they saw the gold reserves against their deposits disappear in a yellow stream across the Atlantic? Did they rush in and try to draw out the reserves? Not at all.

The great bank simply commenced to raise the rate of interest—raise the discount rate—3 per cent, 3½ per cent, 4, 5, 6, 7 per cent, 7½ per cent, I think, and they drew gold from 23 different countries of the world to take the place of that which we had drawn away from them; and at the very moment when we were drawing away from this little hoard of the Bank of England we had in the Treasury alone of our great country more than a billion dollars in shining gold, more than England and France together possessed. It has been truly called the greatest and most useless hoard of gold in the world.

Under any modern and scientific use of that great golden treasure the United States could sustain itself against any possible financial contingency which could arise.

Let me give you one more, and a more recent, example of what a modern banking and currency system can do under great We all remember that last fall for many months war was supposed to be imminent between France and Germany. We know that we would not have been surprised any morning to read that troops were already on their way toward the borders. Germany is a country not to be compared with the United States in accumulated wealth or strength of banking capital and resources. At that time when war seemed imminent Germany owed to France and England, mostly to France, about one hundred and fifty millions of money, payable on demand, and payment of this money was demanded, relentlessly and remorse-lessly. "Nearly $150,000,000 demand money was called within six days, and, Mr. Chairman, within six days, with their modern banking system, that great country paid more than $145,000,000 to Paris and London, and the bank-note issue of Reichsbank during those six days increased $154,000,000. their modern system they paid this great demand made upon them and war supposed to be imminent with every day that

What would have happened to us, gentlemen, in like circumstances? How would we meet a sudden demand for $150,000,000 or $100,000,000 or $50,000,000, if such a demand were made upon us, with the danger of war lurking in the background? When President Cleveland sent his famous Venezuela message to Congress a panic ensued on the stock exchange and it required a great effort to prevent it spreading over the country, because of the mere possibility that war might grow out of it.

Other examples could be given. They show the confidence of the people of those countries and of the bankers of those countries in their banking system. They show why those countries have ceased to have money panics. They illustrate how the liquid assets of the solvent banks can be turned into cash or credit to meet any demands made upon them. The knowledge of the banks and of the people that they can always get money or credit at some rate of interest prevents them from asking it until they actually need it in the ordinary course of business; and the weekly rates of discount published by the central banks abroad are great business barometers which all may read and believe, knowing that they are not based on selfish or moneymaking interests.

I will not stop to talk longer about the defects of our system. There are many others, and they are important. There is a lack of a discount market and any form of standardized commercial paper. There is our antiquated and expensive subtreasury system. There is the lack of power of our banks to finance the cotton and the wheat which we send abroad. The coffee which we purchase from Brazil is financed through London or German banks. The report of the Monetary Commission enumerates a large number of these existing faults in our system. The country is generally agreed upon that point.

system. The country is generally agreed upon that point.

Then, how shall we correct it? The National Monetary Commission has proceeded upon the theory that we will disturb as little as possible the business of the existing banks, that the work shall be one of evolution and not of revolution.

VALUE OF EXPERIENCE.

Mr. Chairman, there is no field of human endeavor in which experience is of so much value as in the financial field. Here it is especially true that an ounce of experience is worth a good many pounds of theory. Why should we not turn to the experience of the world? The great countries across the sea have had hundreds of years of experience in trying out financial theories. Suppose the steel mills of Europe were able to make steel of much better quality than the mills of our country. If that were true, every greyhound that crosses the sea would be crowded with experts going over to learn the secrets of their manufacture. Why should we not profit by their financial experience? When we learn that the great countries of Europe have not had a money panic in from 50 to 100 years why should we not endeavor to understand the principles upon which their systems rest and profit by them?

Is it not a remarkable fact, Mr. Chairman, that all of the other great independent countries of the earth, as a result of their longer experience, have adopted practically the same system of banking and currency? I mean by that the principles upon which their systems rest are the same, although their methods of applying those principles may widely differ.

ONLY TWO SYSTEMS OF BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Sometimes we hear people talk as if there were a great variety of banking and currency systems in the world, and that we have only to pick out the best.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in all the history of this world since civilization commenced there have been but two systems of currency found that have stood the test of experience and are in existence to-day. Of course, I mean outside the United States, where, as has been well said, we have a series of banks but no banking system.

One is the system which prevails in Canada and Scotland, and the other is the system which prevails in every other great civilized nation on earth except the United States. Under the system prevailing in Canada and Scotland they have a comparatively small number of large banks—Canada has 29, Scotland 8—which are given the right to issue bank-note circulation against their assets and the right to establish an unlimited against their assets and the right to establish an unlimited number of branches throughout the country. Each one of these large banks endeavors to put out all of its notes possible, on ac-count of the profit there is in it for them. In order to keep out as many of its own notes as possible, it sends in the notes of all other banks for redemption, the same as we, in our banks, re-turn checks to the banks upon which they are drawn. This competition between the banks trying to put out their own notes and to retire the notes of the other banks prevents their volume of bank notes from becoming either redundant or deficient. The banks collectively can keep out whatever volume of bank notes the business of the country requires. The Scotch-Canadian system rests upon the element of profit to the banks and can only be used successfully under the branch-bank system.

In every other civilized country they use the central system; that is, their bank-note issue is centralized in one institution, under Government regulation, and the element of profit is largely taken out of it, where the business of the country automatically decides how much currency is needed in business.

Business indicates its need by presenting its commercial paper and asking in exchange for it bank notes or credit.

We can not adopt the Scotch-Canadian system. Why? We can not adopt it because it is based upon branch banking, and because our present system of individual banks, owned in each community, is too firmly established in the regard of our people to admit of change. An attempt to establish that system with us would simply mean a great inflation of the currency and little more elasticity than we have at the present time, provided the notes issued were considered as good as our present bond-secured notes by the bankers and by the people. Under our system of banking it would fail in its redemption features. What interest would 18,000 State banks have in selecting out and sorting and doing up into bundles and shipping away by express for redemption bank notes issued under the Canadian system by our thousands of individual banks, provided our banks had entire confidence that the notes were good? We can not adopt the Scotch-Canadian system unless we adopt branch banking with it, and even if we could it would afford no relief to 18,000 State banks.

Then, as a result of the examination of the experience of all then, as a result of the examination of the experience of an history, we find ourselves reduced by a process of elimination to the other method, of having notes issued by one central authority under regulation of law. Commencing with England in 1844, every other great independent country in the world has taken away from individual banks the right of note issue and given it to a central institution under government regulation. France took the same action in 1848, Belgium in 1850, the Netherlands in 1860, Spain in 1874, Germany in 1875, Austria in 1878, the Balkan States in 1877, Russia in 1879, Japan in 1882, Portugal in 1891, Norway and Sweden in 1897, and Switzerland in 1907; and, Mr. Chairman, in considering these historical facts, we must remember this: Most of these countries have banking systems consisting of a few large, well-managed banks, great joint stock banks like those of England, Germany, and Austria, that are able to employ the best talent that can be had and pay large salaries to men of the greatest ability in financial affairs. Under these circumstances the issue of asset currency by individual banks would be infinitely safer than in the United States, where we have 25,000 large and small banks scattered over a continent,

As a result, then, of the experience of the whole world, extending over a great many years, tested in countries doing a great volume of business, meeting the different conditions in different countries, we find two great financial principles which every independent country on earth except ours has adopted.

First. The centralization of bank-note issue in one institution under government regulation and control, such bank notes resting upon gold and commercial paper indorsed by banks, and automatically increasing and decreasing according to the needs of business.

Second. The mobilization in part of the cash reserves of banks against their deposits in one institution, such institution carrying large reserves and having the right, under regulation of law, to expand its note issue and credit liability based upon gold and commercial paper.

At the commencement of the panic of 1907 in New York City. the Secretary of the Treasury fortunately had about $30,000,000 which he could deposit in banks, largely in the city of New York. Had it not been for this cash, immediately available, aided by the work of some of the great bankers of New York City, this country would have had such a financial smash up as never before happened in history.

I have said that the banks of this country carry nearly a billion and a half dollars in cash reserves. Suppose when the Knickerbocker Trust Co. closed its doors, or when the surging mass of excited depositors was clamoring for its money, we had been able to take one hundred millions or two hundred millions of this great cash reserve and throw it into that panic-stricken city; it would have put out the panic like throwing a bucket of water on a match. It never would have passed outside the city limits. I am not sure but that even the knowledge that such a great cash reserve existed, and which could be used, would have been sufficient to stay the panic without actually using a dollar of it.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to venture to say that I do not believe that any intelligent man can take up the study of banking and currency, study it thoroughly, examine the experience of our own and of the other great countries of earth, and arrive at any other conclusion than that we must have a mobilization of our reserves and centralization of our note issues under some form of organization.

NOT A CENTRAL BANK.

Mr. Chairman, what do we learn from all of these experiences which I have cited in the countries beyond the sea? Do I mean that we must set up a central bank here fashioned after the central banks abroad? Do I mean that we should bring to life the central bank of Andrew Jackson's time? Do I mean that we should set up here a bank like the Bank of France or the Reichsbank of Germany? I mean none of those things. The lesson that we should learn from experience is that we should adopt these financial principles, which have stood the test of experience for a century among great populations, in carrying on great business. We should adopt these principles and build around them the machinery to adapt them to American conditions.

Mr. Chairman, principles know no State lines; they know This great body of ours can pass a thousand no National lines. resolutions and not change a single law of health, nor can it change one single law of economics. We are proposing to take principles that have been found safe and practicable and adapt them to the different conditions and needs which we have here in the United States. The Bank of France or of Germany would not be suitable for this country. They are perfectly adapted to the countries where they are. People over there are accustomed to being governed both financially and politically from one center.

The people of England and the people of France are perfectly content that there shall be a financial concentration of banking content that there shall be a inhancial concentration of banking capital and a concentration of management in London and Paris. We are not accustomed to that here, and it would not suit the genius of our people. Many of our people believe that there is already too great a concentration of financial power in one or two great centers. We believe that the control of our banking resources should to a greater extent be decentralized. Our country covers a continent. Some of our States are larger than England or France. Different parts of the country are uncountry developed. For all of these reasons no central book. equally developed. For all of these reasons no central bank which ever has existed or which is in existence to-day would be suitable for the needs of the United States.

NATIONAL RESERVE ASSOCIATION AN AMERICAN INSTITUTION.

What we want is an American institution. We want to adopt financial principles tested by experience, and upon them erect an institution adapted to the needs of the United States. And I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is the belief of thousands of our countrymen, who have reached that opinion after disinterested study, regardless of the party to which they belong or the section of the country in which they live, that the plan proposed by the National Monetary Commission would create an American institution which is not only economically sound, but one in which all sections of the country would have their proper and equal say as to the management of our finan-

We have built up an institution, using the framework of our country as its model, building from the bottom up, the town, the count, the State, and the Nation. The individual local bank corresponds to the town, the local association of banks which we create corresponds to the county, the 15 branches or districts into which we would divide the country correspond to the States, and the National Reserve Association at Washington corresponds to the National Government.

NATIONAL RESERVE ASSOCIATION.

I must hurry along, and I want to go over briefly the main features of the National Reserve Association which we are proposing to establish. I can only stop to give you a general idea of it without going too much into detail.

Mr. ADAIR. Before the gentleman takes up that feature of the question I would like to ask him how many panics we have had during the last 50 years which he believes to have been money panics, or which he places in the class of money panics. Does the gentleman believe that more than one panic could properly be termed a money panic—that of 1907?

Mr. VREELAND. What I want to impress upon the minds of everyone is that in our country, no matter what the cause of a business or industrial depression may be, no matter what the scare is produced by, it frequently ends in a money panic. The panic of 1873 is said to have been caused by excessive railroad building-tying up too much of our available capital in railroads—and because we were getting down from the inflated values of war times toward a gold basis. This would naturally result in depressed business and what we call "hard Houses like Jay Cook & Co., whose credit was too much extended, would have to fail; but why should the failure of Jay Cook & Co. produce runs all over the country upon banks which were not concerned in railroad building and which were solvent and safe? That, as I have endeavored to show, was the fault of our defective banking and currency system.

It is the same with the panic of 1893. Republicans generally would say that the industrial panic was caused by the election of Mr. Cleveland in 1892 with both branches of Congress, which meant changing our tariff system to one of tariff for revenue only. Others would say it was caused by the silver-purchasing Anyone would concede that a change from one tariff system to a lower one would mean a slackening of business throughout the country until it could be found what the results of that change would be. Merchants would buy less goods, factories would run on shorter time, and people would economize until they could find out the effect of the change. That would mean for a time a depression in business-less goods manufactured and bought and sold.

With a sound banking system it should mean nothing more than that. But with us this state of depression was rapidly followed by runs upon solvent banks throughout the United States, the closing of hundreds of banks which could not immediately respond with cash, general suspension of cash payment throughout the country and the issuance of clearing-house certificates, and an absolute destruction of confidence in the minds of business men and of the people. This is what I mean by a money panic. This is where we differ from all of the other great countries. I am not claiming that we can prevent business depressions when reasons for them exist, but a sound banking and currency system will greatly mitigate their severity and will absolutely prevent the money panics which, too frequently, follow our business depressions. I speak confidently because this has been the effect in every other great LOCATION.

It is proposed that the National Reserve Association shall e located at Washington. This is to avoid a Kilkenny fight be located at Washington. between New York and Chicago. If that should get started we would never be able to proceed any further with the proposition. [Laughter.] In as much as the country is divided into 15 districts, and a branch is located in some city in each district where the business for that district is actually done, it matters little where the head office is located.

CAPITAL.

Its capital shall be 10 per cent of the capital of national and State banks which are eligible for membership in the association. Its capital must be $100,000,000, paid in when it commences business, and within a year it ought to be $150,000,000. We provide that banks shall subscribe 20 per cent of the capital, but the purpose of the second 10 per cent is really to provide a double liability, the same as with national banks.

The second 10 per cent is to be called only to meet obligations of the association.

The stock held by each subscribing bank shall equal 10 per cent of its own capital, with, as I have stated, a double liability. That is, a bank having a capital of $100,000 would take $10,000 stock of the reserve association.

MEMBERSHIP.

Both National and State banks may have membership in this organization. It is proposed that stockholders of the institution shall be banks only; that it shall be a bank of banks; that it shall be the keystone of our banking arch. No bank may join with a smaller capital than $25,000. Its stock is nontransferable by statute. It can not be sold. If a bank goes out of business it can turn its stock in to the reserve association and receive its book value. It can not be voted by proxy. A principal officer of every bank must vote its stock or it must go

BUSINESS.

We confine its business to the banks which are its stockholders, to the Government of the United States, and to the purchase of foreign exchange. The principal business of the association will be the purchase of short-time commercial paper maturing within 28 days, made by solvent parties and indorsed by banks which are is stockholders. It can discount paper having a longer time to run when indorsed by the local association to which the bank offering it belongs. It is permitted to purchase no stocks or bonds, except bonds of the United States, and of the several States maturing within one year; nor may it loan money upon the stocks or bonds of railroads or other corporations. For the first time in our history commercial business, commercial paper representing the consumable products of the country-the cotton, the corn, the wheat, the cattle, the products of the factory—will take precedence over the stock exchanges in the power to borrow the surplus reserves of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the gentleman why the time of these notes was fixed at 28 days?

Mr. VREELAND. That is a banking question about which I am unable to stop and go into detail. It is evident that the assets of this great institution must be kept as nearly liquid as possible. It is evident that they want no notes which represent investments of a permanent character; they should represent the products of the farm and of the factory on their way to market. The bankers have thoroughly discussed this proposition at great length and have agreed that the acceptance of notes maturing within 28 days, together with the provision for discounting notes of longer time through the local associations will be ample for the purposes of banks as well as being a great check upon the undue inflation of credits.

Mr. PRINCE. Is it not based upon the experience of the banks abroad?

Mr. VREELAND. It is. Twenty-eight days is somewhat longer than the average time that paper runs which is discounted by the Bank of England or the Bank of France or the Bank of Germany.

Mr. FORNES. Is 28 days the limit, or does it permit an extension of the loaning time?

Mr. VREELAND. That is for the board of directors of each district to determine. I should say as a matter of practice that banks would send in other paper to replace that maturing in case of need.

Mr. FORNES. Is it intended by this system to loan upon commercial paper at a fixed rate of interest?

Mr. VREELAND. It is proposed that the reserve association shall loan at a rate which shall be published weekly with its statement of condition. That statement will be the great business barometer, not only for the banks but for all the people of the United States, showing the condition and tendencies of business. If its weekly statement should show that the reserves of the reserve association were steadily diminishing, if there were indications of overexpansion or of overspeculation, they would advance the rate, and the reason for it would be apparent to everybody in their weekly statement of condition.

Mr. FORNES. Is this system the same as that of England or France?

Mr. VREELAND. All of the State banks abroad issue weekly statements and publish their discount rate.

Mr. MADDEN. If this system is adopted, does it contemplate taking all the banks in the United States, State and National? Is it obligatory on the part of the banks to become members of the association?

Mr. VREELAND. There is nothing obligatory in this system touching the banks. The banks do not join unless they choose. Mr. MADDEN. What effect would it have on a bank not in the association if it chose to remain outside?

Mr. VREELAND. That would be a question of judgment with the bank itself. My opinion is that a bank which was a stockholder in the association would have an advantage over banks which were not members, because the depositors of that bank would know without fail, in any emergency which could arise, their bank could turn to the reserve association and receive advances upon its commercial paper. This would give it an advantage, in my opinion, over a bank which could not avail itself of that privilege.

If any considerable part of the banking Mr. MADDEN. capital of the United States thought it proper to remain outside the reserve association would that mean that we would have two banking systems or would it remain one?

Mr. VREELAND. If we enact this proposed legislation we provide the banks of the United States with a sound and safe banking system, which will free them from the danger of money panics and will enable them at all times to extend credit to solvent customers at some rate of discount. We are taking away nothing that we have at present. We do not oblige the banks to join it. We merely authorize the banks to put in a reasonable amount of capital and create another institution, under limitation of law, for the safety of themselves and the benefit of the people. If they refuse to put in the capital and avail themselves of the means of safety which we provide, I should then say that the next time they suspend payment and refuse the money due their depositors public opinion would compel the Comptroller of the Currency to say to them that they must fulfill their obligations or shut up their doors.

Mr. BULKLEY. Will it not be possible for banks, under the proposed reserve association, to borrow of the reserve association on stocks of the stock exchange or investment securities under the provisions of section 28?

Mr. VREELAND. I have already alluded to that. In no case can a bank borrow of the reserve association on corporation stocks or bonds. Under section 28 the direct obligation of a bank, if indorsed and guaranteed by the local association, may be accepted by the reserve association. In that case the local association is required to take of such bank ample security for its indorsement and guaranty. The security taken might consist of any assets of the bank satisfactory to the officers of the

Mr. BULKLEY. Some of those assets might be investment

Mr. VREELAND. Yes. Mr. BORLAND. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time, but I desire to inquire as to the right of new banks to enter into this reserve association.

Mr. VREELAND. New banks or any banks, old or new, have the right to join the reserve association at any time, provided such bank comes up to the standard fixed.

Mr. LITTLETON. I desire to ask the gentleman one question for information. Do I understand the gentleman to say you could not borrow upon bonds or stocks if you want to do so, but rather upon commercial paper? Does that mean that you can not borrow from any member of the association upon stocks or bonds?

Mr. VREELAND. It means that you can do anything with stocks and bonds which you can do now. But it also means that, so far as the reserve association is concerned, it can only purchase from banks short-time commercial paper.

NO INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.

The reserve association shall pay no interest on deposits. DIVIDENDS.

The dividends which the reserve association may pay are limited to 5 per cent, and the balance of its earnings are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. This is a vital part of this plan. We do not intend to create a money-making We must make the dividends which it may pay to institution. its stockholders so small that they will be earned automatically without effort on the part of its management. We do not wish the control of this institution to be influenced in the slightest degree by desire or power of its directors to increase its divi-We want the management of this great organization to be guided entirely by the welfare and the needs of the business of the United States.

I have stated that we must let the bankers run the banking business of the country. We can not turn it over to the butcher or the baker, but we should provide by law that the banker may make no undue profits and receive no privileges detrimental to the public welfare in the creation of the reserve association. The rate of interest which we provide would be considered by everyone, I think, as a small return upon bank capital. It should also be noted that the national banks are losing the profit upon bank circulation, which at the present time probably amounts in the aggregate to $10,000,000 a year.

This will go to the reserve association and with its other profits above 5 per cent into the United States Treasury.

Mr. BULKLEY. Will the gentleman state to whom the 20 per cent, which it is proposed to accumulate, would go upon the dissolution of the association. If it will go to the banks, then it would be 20 per cent profit in addition to the 5 per cent.

Mr. VREELAND. It would be an additional profit, rather a limited kind. A bank could only realize upon that if it should go into liquidation and turn in its stock to the reserve association. It is rather a safety fund for the benefit of the association than a profit to the banks.

Mr. BULKLEY. Will the gentleman say whether that will prevent the reserve association toward the end of the 50-year period calling the other 10 per cent as payment on the capital stock and adding a 20 per cent surplus to that?

Mr. VREELAND. The additional 10 per cent of stock can not be called except to meet obligations. That, at the very least, would mean that the reserve association would have dissipated its surplus and impaired its capital. Nothing less than this would justify a call for the additional 10 per cent of stock.

RATE OF DISCOUNT.

We provide that the rate of discount of the National Reserve Association shall be uniform throughout the United States. This provision will be of enormous benefit to the South and West, where great development will take place in the years to come, and where capital at reasonable rates of interest is greatly needed. The effect of this provision undoubtedly will be lower rates of interest in the undeveloped portions of the country and more uniform rates in all parts of the country.

While farmers and business men will receive the benefits of lower discount rates, it does not mean that the earnings of the banks need to decrease. Our commission found last fall that the banks of Denver were carrying from 40 per cent to 50 per cent cash reserves. That means that millions of dollars were lying idle which might be used in the development of that section of the country. With a branch of the reserve associa-tion at Denver, where a bank could instantly obtain cash or credit in case of need, the banks would be able to loan a much larger percentage of their deposits at lower rates of interest than now obtained without decreasing their net earnings.

Under the workings of the reserve association, I am confident that it will be found in a few years that the reserves of national banks will be needlessly large and may be safely reduced. Under our present system they are not large enough and can not be made large enough to insure safety.

Mr. ADAIR. Does this plan fix any given amount of deposit which a stockholding bank in the reserve association must carry with the reserve association?

Mr. VREELAND. It does not; no, sir.

NOTE ISSUE.

It is proposed that national banks may turn over to the reserve association the 2 per cent United States bonds, amounting to about $740,000,000, against which the bank notes of national banks are now issued. Let us assume that all of these bonds are sold to the reserve association at not less than par. The reserve association would then issue its own notes in place of the present national-bank notes against these bonds. There would be behind these notes the same security which they have at the present time, besides much additional security.

It goes without saying that no one can bring forward any proposition which will receive the slightest consideration from the people, unless the safety of the bank notes proposed to be issued shall be absolutely beyond question. That is the one and only virtue of our present bank-note circulation-it is good from one end of the country to the other. Any note which we put in its place must be equally good.

Those who remember the "wildcat" and "red dog" State bank circulation before the war appreciate a bank-note circulation good without discount in any part of the country, and even abroad. But they have not always been entirely good as compared with gold. During nearly one-third of the life of our national-bank system national-bank notes have been below par. From 1863, when they were first issued, until the resumption of specie payment in 1879, they were below par as compared with gold. During the Civil War they were worth less than 50 cents on the dollar as compared with gold.

Those who think this element of safety in our bank-note circulation should cover a multitude of shortcomings should study the bank-note circulation of other countries. They will find that where the bank notes are secured by gold and commercial paper they are equally as good as ours, and yet they are entirely elastic to meet the varying needs of business. The notes issued by the Bank of France have been good for more than 100 years. They have been good in war and good in peace. Our notes were far below par, as compared with gold, at the close of the Civil War, when the future of the country was assured. The notes of the Bank of France were not to exceed 4 per cent below par when Prussian armies were marching through the streets of Paris, the Government in the hands of the Commune, and its future uncertain.

The notes issued by the reserve association will have much more security behind them than the Government bonds which are behind our present note issue, although we consider that We provide that the reserve association must at all times keep at least 50 per cent of gold or legal tender against all demand liabilities, deposits as well as bank-note circulation. If it falls below that we provide for a tax until it is restored. We permit the reserve association, however, to subtract onehalf the Government bonds owned by it from its demand lia-The effect of that would be that it would have 50 bilities. per cent or more of gold against all demand liabilities, bank notes and deposits, except the bank notes issued against the Government bonds. These notes would be secured by Government bonds of equal amount and 25 per cent of gold in addition. The security of the note issue under this plan is unquestioned by bankers here or abroad.

ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT.

The supreme test of the reserve association in the minds of people generally will be its plan of management and control. Is it possible for a few able and ambitious financiers to get control of it, or is its organization such that it will be managed equitably for people from all parts of the United States? This is the crux of the whole proposition. The people will be content to let experts pass upon the banking questions, but they will want to be sure that it can not fall under the control of some great financial interest to be used for its own benefit.

Mr. FORNES. Just one more question before going into that. I understood the gentleman to say, in answer to a previous question, that the reserve association can only buy commercial paper. Suppose in time of financial stringency an institution like a savings bank, which has no commercial paper, should offer its investments, say railroad bonds or municipal stock, will it be able to obtain currency?

Mr. VREELAND. Mutual savings banks in the East have no capital stock, and would not, therefore, be able to become stockholders in the reserve association.

Mr. FORNES. Could they get any relief?

VREELAND. They would get relief, but not directly. Mutual savings banks do not have commercial customers to take care of. They simply invest, according to law, deposits that are made with them. They usually have no trouble except in time of general panic. I think they easily take care of themselves at other times.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we provide that the United States shall be divided into 15 districts. We provide that these districts shall be formed around cities which are existing commercial centers. You understand that the business of this institution is to be done at these branches in each one of the 15 districts. No money is loaned at the main office in Washington. All the money that is loaned is loaned through one of these branches and under the direction and control of the directors of each district or branch. The main office at Washington merely exercises a general supervisory and advisory power—as, for example, to indicate the rate of discount each week, based upon the condition of the reserve association.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask my colleague if the plan proposed by the National Monetary Commission is not the same plan presented by ex-Representative Fowler, of New Jersey?

Mr. VREELAND. I should say that it is far different. The plan presented by Mr. Fowler was to give the right of issuing asset currency to the 7,000 national banks of the United States.

Mr. GLASS. Did he not propose, just as you propose, to divide the country into districts and create a national reserve bank here in Washington?

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Fowler divided the country into some number of zones, but I do not understand that he created a bank at all. I refer to the bill known as the Fowler bill, reported by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Sixtleth Congress. If Mr. Fowler introduced a later bill, I do not remember ever to have read it.

Mr. GLASS. I think in a later bill you will find that he created a reserve bank at Washington.

Mr. VREELAND. We have named in the law the number of these branches to be placed in the different geographical divisions of the country. We have provided that one branch shall be located in the New England States, which shall constitute one district. We have provided that the Eastern States, comprising New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, shall have two cities designated as branches. We have provided that the States of the South, counting Maryland as a Southern State, shall have four branches and four districts. We have provided that the States of the Middle West shall be constituted into four districts with four branches. We have provided that the Pacific Coast States and the Western States together shall make four districts and have four branches.

We have been criticized, by some of the New York papers particularly, for dividing the country in the way we have. These papers seem to assume that the banking capital and resources of the different sections of the country should have been used as a basis for making these districts. I noticed recently in the Wall Street Journal—by the way, a very excellent and con-servative paper and a frequent critic of Wall Street—an article severely criticizing the Monetary Commission upon its division of the country into districts. I will read briefly from their Heretofore the Monetary Commission has adhered rather closely to sound propositions having to do with the main purpose of its arduous task, and it has consistently refrained from doing things that would appeal to this or that party or faction in politics. Accordingly, it is the more surprising to see that body make a sheer change of front and appeal to the foes of capital for support. Who could have suggested a more drastic or commercially lawless proceeding than that the New York banks—call it "Wall Street" if you like—which possess fully 30 per cent of the banking capital of the United States, shall be shorn of their fair representation in the central association, which at most is less than one-third of the total banking capital, so that their natural and regular share of control or voice will be less than 10 per cent? In other words, a dollar of New York capital would count for but 30 cents, while a dollar of southern capital would count for but 30 cents, while a dollar of southern capital would count for but 30 cents, while a dollar of surthern capital would count for $2.30 or thereabouts. That this scheme of hamstringing New York capital is a concession to popular prejudice is virtually openly avowed in the explanation that is offered to the effect that by providing for such a method of organization it is expected to safeguard the proposed institution "against Wall Street control."

I want to say that the writer of that article evidently misapprehended the theory upon which these districts are formed. according to the idea of the National Monetary Commission. Our action was not an appeal to the foes of capital, nor was the division of the country into districts the result of any compromises among members of the commission. No one speaking for the commission has ever indicated that banking capital or banking resources should be the basis upon which the country should be divided into districts. These districts, formed around natural commercial centers, are made for the convenience of carrying on the business and commerce of the United States. The population, the terrritory covered, the natural lines of trade and commerce, probability of future growth-all of these things are to be taken into consideration as well as the banking capital and banking resources. It was our desire that there should be no bank in the United States more than 24 hours by mail from the nearest branch. The members of the commission were unanimous in fixing these districts and the number of branches in each geographical division.

Let me point out these districts and the cities where branches would probably be located. Of course, this is only my individual opinion and in some cases might change after a study of the situation. Let me say at this point that the plan provides for a commission, consisting of three Cabinet officers and the Comptroller of the Currency, to lay out these districts and locate the

We provide one branch for New England, and it would be located at Boston. There would be, I suppose, no dispute over that. What necessity would there be for another branch in New England? Boston is within 10 or 12 hours of every bank in New England. Then there is New York, 240 miles from Boston; Philadelphia, 90 miles from New York; and Baltimore, which would probably be selected, 95 miles from Philadelphia. What need would there be for having more branches in this part of the country? Certainly the needs of business would not require it. The plan directs that there shall be four in the Southern States, including Maryland; Baltimore would probably be selected; New Orleans, quite likely; and some city in Texas; the fourth branch would seem to fall to the Middle Atlantic section, perhaps Atlanta. Four branches would be needed in this large and growing portion of the United States. We provide that the great Middle West shall have four branches. Chicago would pass without challenge, and Minneapolis-St. Paul There might be some chance for difference of opinion between St. Louis and Kansas City. My personal opinion would be that St. Louis would be entitled to be selected and that Kansas City would be the center of the next district created, because we give to the directors of the reserve association the power to create new districts when needed by the development of the country. Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, and Buffalo might be considered for the fourth branch, with the chances favoring Cincinnati on account of its central location and the fact that it already has a subtreasury. In the West and Pacific States Denver would doubtless pass without question. Portland or Seattle should be designated—probably San Francisco—and Los Angeles or Salt Lake City; or it might be decided upon study by the commission that one of the branches should go to the rapidly growing section around Oklahoma or to the territory of which Omaha is the center.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Did the New York banking interests make any objection to this distribution plan?

Mr. VREELAND. There was no chance for objection to the

Mr. VREELAND. There was no chance for objection to the plan by anybody, because it was adopted in the closing days of our sitting and not given to the public.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to ask a question for information. While there might be a nominal distribution of control by means of your district plan, it would not alter the real control, which would be where the money is; that is, in New York; so that New York would exercise just as much actual control in this apparent distribution as though it was centered there in the plan itself.

Mr. VREELAND. I should venture to disagree with the gentleman on that proposition. Of course, New York City is a great financial center. It was not made so by law any more than New Orleans was made a cotton center by law. Every country has its financial center. In making a banking and currency law we can not take away from New York the advantage of the billions of dollars of banking capital which are owned in New York and, therefore, controlled there. Its influence we can not take away nor do we seek to take it away; but we seek to take away from the great banks of New York City the responsibility of maintaining credit and cash payment. We seek to transfer this great power to an institution under strict regulation and limitation by law and with every part of the country having an equitable voice in its management. I maintain that under this plan we disassociate the commercial business of the country from the stock exchanges. I maintain that under this plan the bank reserves of the country will be no longer dependent upon the fluctuations of the stock market.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that any dozen gentlemen who will take a map of the United States and locate the cities where these branches of the reserve association should be placed for the convenience of the business of the United States will agree upon probably 13 out of the 15 cities. To locate them strictly according to the distribution of banking capital and resources of the country would mean a huddle of branches located in cities in the eastern part of the United States, within an hour or two by rail from each other, while the branches in the West and South would be so few and far between as to make it extremely inconvenient for the business and banks of those sections of the country.

Our theory of creating the National Reserve Association, with the limitations of law with which we have hedged it about, is that there is no advantage in having the control of it to any section of the country nor to any financial interest. I am a business man and a country banker in the State of New York. Now, in New York State there are 30 per cent of the banking resources of the country. As we have arranged the districts, New York has 8 per cent of representation in the board of directors of this institution. I have no objection to make to that, because, in my belief and in my judgment, it would make no difference if all of its directors were selected from the district of which Minneapolis-St. Paul would be the branch, provided the men selected were men of ability and integrity and high standing in the business life of that district. I maintain that the character and integrity and ability of the men chosen as directors to manage this great institution, as the law directs that it shall be managed, are of vastly more importance than the sections of the country in which they may happen to live.

the sections of the country in which they may happen to live. I shall endeavor to show that the control of the reserve association by selfish financial interests would be useless and profitless under the restrictions which we have placed in the statute. Under this plan New England, with 12 per cent of the banking resources, would have 8 per cent representation in the association; the Eastern States, with 41 per cent of the resources, would have 15 per cent representation; the Middle Western States, with 24 per cent of resources, would have 31 per cent of representation; the Southern States, with 11 per cent of the resources, would have 23 per cent of representation; and the Western and Pacific States, with 12 per cent of resources, would have 23 per cent of representation.

As I have said, the placing of branches in the different geographical sections of the country was made entirely with a view to convenience and efficiency in doing the business of the country, around natural existing centers, and the representation of different geographical sections according to banking capital and resources is merely incidental to such a division.

Mr. FORNES. I am much interested in the distribution of power in the system, and I may say that I favor it, and that I introduced in 1907 a bill for a bank having the same fundamental principles as in this one. After the thorough investigations made by the Monetary Commission, it has simply strengthened in my mind the system of banking I advocated in 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 30 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us turn our attention to the building up of this reserve association. We do not commence at the top and build down, but we commence at the bottom in every locality and build up.

Mr. TILSON. Before the gentleman passes along from the districts, I would like to ask if the districts are fixed by hard and fast geographical lines, or if a bank in a certain community can go to its natural business center?

Mr. VREELAND. There are no geographical lines in forming these districts. The idea of the commission is that these districts will be built around branches which are natural, existing business centers. For example, if a portion of the State of Connecticut or all of the State of Connecticut is now doing business with New York and prefers to continue doing its business there, it would probably be put into the district of which New York is the branch. This refers, of course, only to the business which they do with the reserve association. The banks of Connecticut probably do business with both Boston and New York, and would continue to do so. But so far as their business with the reserve association is concerned, I should expect existing lines of business and the preferences of communities to be followed.

As I have stated, it is built up like our Government. The local bank is the unit with which we commence to build. The local bank corresponds to the township; the local association, which is a group of local banks, corresponds to the county; these groups of local associations united into the district correspond to the States, and the reserve association, consisting of the 15 united districts, corresponds to the National Government.

Let me refer for a moment to a local bank, one of the 25,000 or 26,000 banking units scattered throughout the country. I want to say that, in my opinion, nothing is more representative of the community than a local bank situated therein. Ninetynine per cent of the ownership of these banks is in the communities where they exist. Their stockholders and directors and officers live there. All their interests are there; their deposits come from the communities where they are located; they loan their money there so far as they are able to; there is no outside interest of any description which compares for a moment in importance with their local interests.

The idea sometimes expressed that local banks are controlled in the conduct of their business by larger banks in distant cities is entirely unfounded. Local banks keep deposits in financial centers for the convenience of their customers. They also keep a portion of their reserves in financial centers. There is keen competition among the banks of the financial centers to obtain the accounts and deposits of local banks. Whatever obligation there is rests with the banks in the financial centers toward the local banks which are its customers and depositors. Of course, I am not describing the great banks in a city like New York, which draw their deposits and business from all over the United States, but the business of the hundred banks even in New York City is largely local and only a few of the great banks there draw as much as half of their deposits from outside the city.

We are building, then, upon institutions which are rooted in the soil of every town, village, and city throughout the United States. No outside interest of any description can compare in importance to them with their local interests. In every town and city of the country they are competing sharply with each other. It would be destruction to a local bank to desert or betray the interest of the people where it is located.

These local banking units in every district in the United States will control in the framing of this institution. Let us take a concrete example, if you please. The State of New York would probably form one of the 15 districts, with New York City as its branch. New York State has over 800 banks eligible for membership. Let us assume that New York State would be divided into 10 local associations. That would average 80 banks in each association. These local associations would be formed around some natural business center. Let us take the local association formed in western New York, where my home is, and of which Buffalo is the largest city. These local associations have important duties to perform, but I can only stop to speak of them in connection with building up the institution. Each local association has its own officers and board of directors.

Let us assume that this local association decides in its bylaws to have 10 directors. Our plan provides that three-fifths of these directors shall be elected by the banks voting as units; that would be 6 out of the 10. Two-fifths, or 4, of the directors are elected by the banks voting according to stock. Of the 80 banks in this local association, probably three-quarters are outside the city of Buffalo. In electing a majority of the directors, then, the banks voting as units control; that is, a bank having $25,000 capital in a village has the same vote as a bank with $1,000,000 capital in a city.

Each one of the 10 local associations in the State would elect its officers and board of directors in the same way.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. If it is a good idea to elect 6 of the directors by the unit vote, would it not be a good idea to elect 10 in the same way?

Mr. VREELAND. Ordinarily in the formation of corporations the directors are elected entirely by the stock. This institution is created for special purposes, and we concede it to be a happy solution to provide that the directors shall be elected in part by stock and in part by banking units. The same idea prevails in our Government, where the States, regardless of size, have an equal vote in the Senate, but are represented ac-Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. COOPER. What is to prevent the large stockholders of Mr. COOPER. What is to prevent the large stockholders of the large banks from owning all of these 25,000 little banks?

Mr. VREELAND. In the first place, I think they would find it difficult to buy up the local banks. They would have to pay a good deal more than they are worth; next we have a very stringent provision in the law providing that banks which own 40 per cent or more of stock in another bank have only one vote.

Mr. COOPER. I know it will prevent banks, but what will prevent the individual, the bank stockholder?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman has in mind the chain of banks?

Mr. COOPER.

Mr. COOPER. Yes. Mr. VREELAND. We provide in the law that whenever 40 per cent or more of the stock of two or more banks is owned by any individual, trustee, or any form of holding company, that it shall count as one unit and have but one vote, so that 100 banks under such circumstances would be entitled to one

Mr. Chairman, I have shown how the 10 local associations in New York would be formed and how their boards of directors would be elected. Then each of the 10 local boards elects a voting proxy or representative. These voting proxies elect the board of directors of the district or branch comprising the whole State. Let us suppose that the branch has 12 directors, It could have a larger number if it desired. One-half of these directors, or six, would be elected by these voting proxies or representatives from each branch, voting as units; one-third, or four, directors would be elected by the same proxies voting according to the stock owned in each local association; one-sixth, or two, of the directors would be business men, not bankers. That makes up the 12 directors of the district. A deputy manager of the district or branch is added to the board ex officio. He is appointed by the governor of the National Reserve Association, and his selection must be approved by the board of directors of the district and he must be a resident thereof.

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that this board of directors in each directors in each directors.

tors in each district does the actual business of the reserve association. All discounts made for local banks in each district are passed upon by this board. They are the ones to whom complaint would first be made if some bank did not receive the "equitable treatment" which the proposed law requires that every bank shall receive. The banks in the New Orleans district would have nothing to do with Washington, but would do their business in New Orleans, passed upon by a board of directors elected in their own section of the country, familiar with their needs and familiar with the character and reputation of every bank. Here we have local self-government in the highest degree conducive to safety.

Let us now elect the 46 directors of the National Reserve Association. The board of directors of each of the 15 districts elects a voting proxy or representative. These voting proxies elect 15 directors, 1 from each district, who is a banker; they then elect 15 directors who are not bankers and shall have no connection with banks during their term of office, representing the agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests of the country. Not more than 1 of these can come from one district. The same voting proxies then elect 9 additional directors, each voting proxy voting according to the total amount of stock held in the district which he represents. Not more than 1 of these can come from one district. We then provide for 7 directors ex officio, consisting of the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce and Labor, the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency, the governor and two deputy governors. This comprises the 46 directors of the association.

The governor is appointed by the President of the United States from a list of names furnished by the national board of directors. The two deputy governors are elected by the national board of directors.

It was considered proper that the United States should be represented to this degree on the board of directors, not only because we are creating it a fiscal agent of the Government, and the Government will be, perhaps, the largest single depositor in the association, but because the United States should have representatives upon its board to see that the laws controlling it are faithfully carried into effect.

Mr. Chairman, can any man fairly say that this institution, so built up, will not fairly represent all the business interests of all parts of the United States? Probably 15,000 banks, located in every part of the country, would own the stock of the National Reserve Association. Outside of two or three financial centers these banks are local institutions, owned and managed in all the cities and towns of the country. Their interests are identical with those of the communities in which they exist. This institution has been organized, so far as human ingenuity can provide, along lines which make it secure against either political control or the control of any financial interest. We have made its earnings so small as to be automatic, and no effort on the part of the management can increase the profits of its stockholders. It is an institution in which the success of those who manage it must depend upon serving the business interests of all of the people of the United States.

We may fairly assume that the very best men obtainable would be selected as directors in the various boards of this institution, just as men of high standing are selected as officers in the clearing houses of the country.

A position as governor or director of the National Reserve Association will carry with it great honor and great responsibility. It is natural for all men to desire to achieve success in the eyes of their countrymen. They can only achieve success as officers of this institution by conducting its affairs for the benefit of all the people of the country.

When a subcommittee of the National Monetary Commission was abroad we interviewed the governor of the Bank of France, one of the most able and eminent financiers in Europe.

asked him:

What do you consider the province of the Bank of France, and what do you consider your duty as its governor?

He replied:

Gentlemen, the Bank of France was created by the great Napoleon more than 100 years ago to serve all of the business interests of France. It has existed under Emperor, under King, and under Republic; it continued to fulfill its mission when Prussian armies were marching in the streets of Paris. It has been the leader not only of the banking, but of all of the great business interests of this country. It has never been controlled by politics nor by the great financial interests of France. My duty is to continue the business of the bank as it has existed for more than a century. I could not achieve success by pilling up great deposits, because the Bank of France is becoming less and less a competitor of other banks. I could not achieve success by earning great dividends, because these would largely go to the Government. When I lay down the reins of the management of this great institution my administration will be known as successful if I have conducted it for the best interests of all the people of France.

Mr. Chairman, it is an institution which will be conducted along such lines which we are planning to build for the United States, and we believe that we have placed such provisions and limitations in the law that it will not lie in the power of any man or set of men in charge of it to deflect from it.

You understand, Mr. Chairman, that I am not seeking to-day to discuss fully the banking details of this plan. It would take too much time. I am trying rather to give the House a general view of banking and currency conditions and to present in a general way the remedy we are proposing. There are many general way the remedy we are proposing. There are many interesting banking details which I can not discuss at present for lack of time. I wish, however, to present, in a concrete way, the power of this institution to relieve business conditions and to inspire confidence in the minds of the bankers and of the people.

I present herewith a statement of the probable condition of the National Reserve Association, say two years after it has commenced business. This is not my statement, which would be of little value, but a statement made by Mr. James B. Forgan, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, in my opinion one of the greatest bankers in the United States, presented to the convention of the American Bankers' Association at New

Mr. Forgan assumes that it would have-
Capital paid in in gold or legal tender	$150,000,000

Net demand liabilities	1, 225, 000, 000 750, 000, 000
Suppose, now, to avert a crisis $250,000,000 more	e loans should

Suppose, now, to avert a crisis $250,000,000 more loans should be needed. The reserve association could rediscount paper for banks and give therefor its notes or credit in any of its branches and still have 50.84 per cent gold or legal-tender money against all demand liabilities. Or it could loan $500,-000,000 in the same way and still have 43.47 per cent gold or legal-tender money actually in its vaults. This would not by any means exhaust its power of note or credit expansion to meet any possible crisis.

These figures are such as to inspire confidence in the minds of the bankers and of the people, and when we once acquire confidence neither the banks nor the people will demand money until they actually need it, and our money panics will be at an end.

Let us see now if the security behind this bank-note circulation would also inspire confidence. You will remember that the note liability is made a first lien against all of the assets of the association. Suppose this $500,000,000 in loans were put out entirely in the bank notes of the reserve association. It has already issued $700,000,000 against 2 per cent Government bonds, and its bank-note liability, we will say, would be $1,200,000,000. There would be in the vaults of the association to secure these notes—

Gold	$750,000,000
United States bonds	700, 000, 000
Capital	150, 000, 000
Commercial paper indorsed by banks	775, 000, 000
Add to this (double liability stockholding banks)	150, 000, 000

Total to secure outstanding notes _____ 2, 525, 000, 000

These figures show that bank notes of the reserve association, even when it is greatly expanded, have vastly greater security behind them than the present bank-note circulation, against which not the slightest suspicion arises even in time of panic

Let us use the statement of assets and liabilities given above, showing loans and investments on the part of the reserve association to the amount of only $275,000,000, to indicate what the earning capacity of the association will be. You will notice in this statement that the reserve association has a cash reserve of 61.22 per cent. Again, I am using Mr. Forgan's statement:

INCOME.

3 per cent on Government bonds	$21,000,000
31 per cent on loans and investments	9,625,000
Total income	30, 625, 000

I consider that Mr. Forgan's figures are very conservative. The items of expense are considerably larger than I would make them, and at the end of five years I should anticipate much larger earnings for the association; but these figures are sufficiently accurate to show a large income going to the Government

We are giving to this association great powers of expansion, but in a Nation of 90,000,000 people, with enormous deposits and an enormous volume of business, the institution which is to maintain our credit must have great power. We have also hedged it about with limitations of law unknown in the countries of Europe. We have limited its dividends so that there can be no temptation to expand its business for the sake of profits. We provide that it must keep a gold reserve of 50 per cent of its demand liabilities, less one-half its Government bonds, and if its reserve falls below 50 per cent we provide a tax upon the deficiency. We may be sure that its management will be of the highest order of ability, and they can only achieve success by managing it along safe and conservative lines.

ALDRICH-VREELAND EMERGENCY BILL.

I suppose I ought to refer for a moment to the so-called Aldrich-Vreeland emergency bill, which was passed by Congress in 1908 and which expires by limitation in a little over two years. There was a good deal of opposition to this bill when it passed because its purpose was not understood. But those who advocated the emergency bill also advocated the appointment of a commission to make a comprehensive study of the whole subject, and that has now been done.

I think the country would be reluctant to see this law expire with nothing to take its place. It is a rather crude and awkward provision of law, because the system to which we attach it is crude and awkward; but I believe the fact that $500,000,000, in case of a great impending crisis, could immediately be brought into circulation would prevent the fear of a money famine. The mere fact that it is on the books and can be used gives a measure of confidence along this line.

I have likened this law to a town or village which has a large number of frame buildings and where, on that account, fire is likely to break out at any time and destroy the town and the trustees think it wise to buy a fire engine to put out the fire when it starts and before it becomes a conflagration. That is what we did in passing the emergency law. We know from experience that we have a very inflammable condition in the United States, and I thought we needed a fire engine so that we could pour out some of that $500,000,000 to stop the fire before it got beyond control. It is necessary to have such a law so long as we have frame buildings, but that is not the proper remedy. The proper remedy is to remove the frame buildings and build up a fireproof structure, so that a fire will not gain headway.

I want to quote what I said about the emergency law when it was before Congress:

In my judgment the greatest benefit of this bill will lie in the fact that it is on the statute books of the United States and can be used if necessary. In my judgment the fact that a great fund of $500,000,000 can be called out in less than a week's time in case of impending crisis—the very fact that it can be done does away with the probability that we will ever be obliged to use it.

CENTRAL BANK OF JACKSON'S TIME.

Mr. Chairman, some people say that this is a central bank or a central bank in disguise. Every enemy of this proposed association calls it a central bank. Why do they do that? Because they wish to appeal to the prejudice which still remains in the minds of the American people growing out of the United States central bank which Andrew Jackson strangled. And unless its charter could have been radically changed when renewed, perhaps it ought to have been strangled.

But this proposed reserve association is no more like the central bank of Jackson's time than black is like white. United States bank of Andrew Jackson's day was simply a great private monopoly. It would be prosecuted to-day under the Sherman Antitrust Act. It was the enemy and competitor of every independent bank in the United States from the time it It established branches in all of the principal cities of the country and competed with the other banks for business. It had a monopoly of note issue, and there was no limit upon the amount of notes which it could put out, nor was there any limit upon the dividends which it could pay to its stockholders. It had the prestige of having the United States as a stock-There was little control over it by the Government of the United States. It was run solely as a money-making institution for the benefit of its stockholders. A renewal of its charter was refused because it was a contest between a great military hero, supported by the State banks on one side, and a monopolistic money corporation upon the other.

Nobody would propose such a bank to-day, and yet, Mr. Chairman, in 1840, four years after a renewal of its charter was refused, the people of the United States elected a President upon a platform which called for another Bank of the United States. Do you know that Congress twice passed bills to inaugurate such a bank, and that both were vetoed by President Tyler under the influence of the State banks, showing that with all its crudeness and monopoly from the standpoint of to-day it had given the people the best banking facilities they had had up to that time?

ANTIMONOPOLY.

Sometimes gentlemen who have not studied this plan say that they fear we are creating a monopoly. Why, Mr. Chairman, we are acting upon just the opposite principle. We are proposing a preventive of monopoly. We are proposing an institution which has no incentive to monopolize. You can not have a monopoly where dividends are limited to 5 per cent. We are decentralizing the power which exists in our banking system at present and distributing it throughout the United States.

Suppose that the Standard Oil Co. had been chartered by the National Government and its dividends to stockholders limited to 5 per cent, or even 10 per cent, the balance of their earnings to go to the Treasury of the United States. Do you suppose that the Standard Oil Co. would ever have grown to be a monopoly? Monopolies exist for the purpose of earning larger dividends for those who own them, and when we limit their dividends to a nominal sum we take away every incentive to reach out and absorb and monopolize business.

POLITICAL CONTROL.

Some good people are afraid that if we establish the National Reserve Association it will get into politics. I suppose they mean by this that it will become the subject of attack by one political party and of defense by another political party. Why do they fear this? Because 75 years ago, in Jackson's time, a central bank existed and a political contest arose over the renewal of its charter.

I have no fear of political contention over an institution established along the lines of the reserve association. But if it were possible to again set up to-day the central bank-of Andrew Jackson's time it would as surely become the subject of bitter political contention as it did then. The difference is that one was a huge monopoly, competing with and antagonizing a large and important element in our population; the other is a cooperative association with limited earnings, powers carefully limited by law, its control decentralized, democratic in principle and operation, created to benefit all of the people of the country.

Upon some questions there is bound to be political agitation which is taken up by political parties—for example, the tariff. There are irreconcilable differences between groups of people in the United States upon the question of the tariff, based upon personal and sectional interests. The importers, an influential body of business men, would desire to have no tariff, or one so low that they could bring in foreign products without hindrance, thereby increasing their business and their profits. On the other hand, the manufacturers would desire to have a tariff so high that all foreign products would be shut out, so that their business and profits would increase. These differences can not be reconciled, but both the importer and the manufacturer would agree that we ought to have the best banking and currency system that we can devise.

and currency system that we can devise.

The trusts are a political question. They are attacked by their independent competitors and by the consumers of their products, who believe, whether right or wrong, that prices are being increased by monopoly.

But there would be neither competitors nor consumers to attack the reserve association, and it is generally agreed that the effect of the association would be toward lower and more uniform interest rates throughout the United States.

Under our banking system the State and National banks are not in politics. That was not true in Jackson's time. Then banks came into existence as a matter of political favor. In those days charters for banks were issued by legislative bodies, and in New York State in Jackson's time men who went to Albany to ask for a charter for a bank did not get it unless they were in accord with the political party then in control. Bank charters were given as a matter of patronage.

All that is changed. The stockholders of banks belong to all political parties, a Probably there are few banks in the United States in which every stockholder belongs to the same political party.

The Comptroller of the Currency at Washington has control over 7,200 national banks. He has only to point the finger of suspicion at almost any national bank in the United States in order to impair its standing in the community and perhaps start a run upon it by its depositors. Yet even in the heat of a presidential campaign no one has ever heard it charged that any Comptroller of the Currency has ever attempted to use his great powers for political purposes. The reason is that banks are owned by men of all political faiths. The managers of them are careful to keep them free from political entanglements.

The officers and directors of the reserve association will be selected on account of their standing as bankers or business men, just as officers of clearing houses are selected.

It is my belief that if the reserve association should be in existence for two years it would become so intrenched in the favor of the people that no political interest would dare attack it, because the people will see lower and more uniform rates of interest; they will be relieved of the fear of money panies; they will see the earnings of the association, beyond a modest dividend, flowing into the Treasury of the United States; they will see the commercial business of the country separated from the stock exchanges; they will see the power, so largely centralized at present, decentralized and placed in 15 commercial centers of the country.

Financial operations and financial control are little understood by people generally and therefore they are suspicious of them. We are setting up a financial control which will be open to the light of publicity, all of its operations understood and published to the world, and its officers and managers responsible to the law.

FINANCIAL CONTROL.

Some critics say that the Standard Oil group or the Morgan group or both of them will get control of this institution. Mr. Chairman, the American people have prided themselves upon their ability to originate and conduct great enterprises. They have prided themselves upon their inventive genius and their new and modern methods of doing business. In our monetary system alone we are behind every other great country. Must we admit that we are not able to originate a banking and currency system, embodying the principles tested by experience, which shall be safe from ambitious financial interests? If so, then we will have to go along and suffer under our present system.

But I am not willing to admit that the American people, with their energy, inventiveness, and originality, are not smart enough to write upon the statute books, in terms which all may read and understand, the provisions and regulations of an institution which shall be safe from this danger.

I want to ask those gentlemen who fear that the Standard Oil group or the Morgan group will control, Who is in control of the financial field at present? Who has not noted the amalgamation of banks in New York and Chicago which is constantly taking place? Every few months some colossal bank emerges from the unification of two or more banks in those great cities. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is not left for us to decide whether we will have centralization in the financial field or not. We have it to-day. We will have it in increasing degree as the years go by. The only question is, What kind of centralization shall we have? At present we have centralization of power and management and a decentralization of reserves and bank-note issues.

What we are proposing in its place is a decentralization of power and management and a centralization of a portion of our reserves and of our bank-note circulation under strict regulation of law.

We have to-day centralization in one or two of the great cities of the country, existing for private and for selfish interests, with no limitation of the profits which may be levied upon the business of the country. We would substitute for it cooperation for the general welfare, with limited earnings, in the full light of publicity.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I wanted to ask if there is any way for a bank to get out of the organization when it is once in?

Mr. VREELAND. We make no provision for their getting out unless the bank should go into liquidation. We think an institution charged with such great responsibilities as this one should be made as stable as possible, and that it would not be stable if banks could withdraw at pleasure.

I believe that any man who will study and understand the provisions of this plan will admit that the Monetary Commission has placed it beyond possibility of selfish financial control. We have provided that there shall be no sale of stock and no voting proxies upon stock. We have given to the tens of thousands of country banks, whose interests are identical with the communities in which they are located, the power to elect the directors in the local associations in the 15 districts and finally in the national board. We have given to the board of directors in each one of the 15 branches control over its own affairs except as to rate of discount. We have provided against one bank holding the stock of another. We have provided that so-called chains of banks under one control shall have but one vote. have declared in the law that every bank shall have equitable treatment. We have made the earnings so low as not to be attractive to large interests. There could be no speculation in its stock, because it could not be sold.

No great financial interest would dare to attempt to secure control of it in view of the experiences of the last few years. Any act by any director of any district board or of the national board which indicated that he was acting for selfish or per-sonal interests would excite criticism, and he would fail of reelection as a director and retire in disgrace.

But while these restrictions make it certain that no great financial interest could control the reserve association or any of its branches, and would never dare even try to do so, the limitation of the powers of the reserve association make it certain that no special interests would desire to obtain control if it were within their power. How would it benefit them? What could they do with it? Does anyone suppose that the Morgan group or the Standard Oil group desire to borrow money upon commercial paper which has 28 days or less to run, and which must be indorsed by a bank and upon which they would have to pay the same rate of discount as every other bank in the United States?

But some one says that great financial interests in New York bought the Equitable Life Insurance Society, paying $2,500,000 for 51,000 shares of its stock, which carried control of the election of the directors of that institution. But, Mr. Chairman, that was a very different proposition, at least before the change in the law of the State of New York limiting investments of life insurance companies. The Equitable Life Insurance Co., at the time of its purchase, had assets of $500,000,000; it had an annual income of $75,000,000 or $100,000,000. Its enormous assets and its enormous income could be invested in the stocks and bonds of railroads, in the stocks of banks and trust companies, and, I think, in the stocks and bonds of industrial corporations. It would be a tremendous implement of power in the hands of men who deal in great financial affairs.

But under the law the reserve association could not purchase railroad stocks or bonds, or bonds of any description except bonds of the United States and of the several States maturing within a year, and of some foreign countries. It can not even loan its money upon stocks and bonds, and its rate of discount is uniform throughout the United States. So there is no parallel between the two cases.

It is only proper to state that in the case of the Equitable Life Insurance Co. no advantage has ever been taken of the control so purchased. Voting trustees were selected from among men of the very highest standing in the country, and that great and beneficent society has always been and is to-day managed entirely by committees representing its policy holders.

It is evident, then, that no great financial interest could afford to invest any capital or spend any time in trying to get control of the reserve association for the purpose of using its funds to gain control of railroads and industrial corporations, or of banks and trust companies, through the ownership of stocks and bonds. The reserve association can be used for none of these purposes. Its money can only be used to purchase commercial paper indorsed by a bank and at a uniform discount

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 15 minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to believe that under the limitations of the proposed law outside control would be impossible. But assuming, as the gentleman does, that the control is there, then I think the gentleman's statement is too broad, that no advantage would result from such control.

Mr. VREELAND. Perhaps I should modify it by saying that no advantage could come through such control which would be at all commensurate with the tremendous and continued efforts necessary to obtain it. Individual banks could not be discriminated against, because we put the clear direction in the statute that all banks shall have equitable treatment. The bank would have the right of appeal to the court. I am sure that the gentleman from Kentucky, with his acute and analytical mind, will agree with this position when he comes to make a thorough study of it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I would like to know if under this system there is a larger measure of protection to the depositors than under the present system?

Mr. VREELAND. We think very much more. We think, in the first place, that no solvent bank ever need close its doors with this association in existence. We think the protection to depositors of all banks is greatly enlarged, because these local associations, groups of local banks, will become thoroughly familiar with each other, and watching and scrutinizing the condition of each other, because they may be called upon to guarantee for each other. We think that in itself would be conducive to much greater safety than we have under the existing system. When Congress takes up this bill for review it may, perhaps, find, as the gentleman suggests, where additional features can be added for the safety of depositors.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I assume from the gentleman's statement that this reserve association is, to a certain extent, the fiscal agent of the Government as well.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will not assume that it is possible for any set of men to get control of the board of directors; but, in any event, would they not control the destiny of this Government from a monetary standpoint in case the Congress Would it not be in the power of this reserve declared war? declared war? Would it not be in the power of this reserve association to determine whether the Government should raise money to carry on this war, and would this not be a dangerous power to place in their hands?

Mr. VREELAND. If any such power existed, it would be a dangerous power; but nothing of the kind does exist. On the contrary, it would be of the very greatest assistance to the Government in case of sudden war. It takes time to issue and sell bonds, and if we had no large surplus in the Treasury the reserve association would be in position to immediately advance to the Government, say, $50,000,000, probably taking therefor obligations of the Government maturing within a year. It would, then, free of cost, act for the Government in selling its bonds, instead of paying a commission to large New York banking houses which have usually handled Government issues. the past, in the wars which we have had, bankers have usually been as patriotic as any other class of citizens in assisting the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I have already consumed more than two hours and I do not wish to ask further time. It is too great a subject to discuss in one speech. I must leave unanswered in the minds of gentlemen many questions-important questions in the details of the bill.

KEEP IT OUT OF POLITICS.

I desire to add but one thought further, and that is, if we ever get a banking and currency system worthy of our country and of its people, it must be kept out of discussion along political lines.

It must not be made a football for partisan and political ad-

I have said that not even this great body can change wellsettled principles, established and settled by the experience of mankind. This great body, representing 90,000,000 of people, should take up this question with a patriotic determination to place upon the statute books the best and most scientific banking and currency system possible to devise.

We do not present this as a perfect bill. The further study by Congress and by the country may give us light for further improvement. For three and a half years this question has been kept out of politics. It has been discussed by the commission, by State associations of bankers, by currency committees appointed by boards of trade in all of the leading cities of the country, by political economists and financial writers solely upon its merits from a scientific and economic standpoint.

Let us hope that the Congress of the United States will keep the discussion on this high plane. I would much rather see this legislation go upon the statute books with the control of the Government divided between the political parties.

I sincerely hope that it will not require the losses and suffering of another great money panic to induce Congress to act.

Our present banking and currency system is like the old confederacy which existed after the close of the Revolutionary War—weak and flabby, without consistency or power, because there was no cohesion, because the States were unable to use their great resources and power as a unit. You will remember that it took all of the influence and power of Washington and Jefferson, of Madison and Hamilton, to induce the people to lay aside that weak and flabby confederacy and adopt the Constitution of the United States, under which we have grown so great and powerful.

The adoption of the Constitution was the greatest event in our history; it created, we hope for all time, a Nation.

So it will be an epoch in our commercial history when we place upon the statute books a banking and currency system commensurate with the greatness and power and resources of our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

McCall] is recognized.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, the House is to be congratulated upon the self-restraint that it showed yesterday in expressing its opinion upon a third term. If I may extract the wisdom from an observation made by my friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], the unanimity with which a congregation of statesmen will side-step a stick of political dynamite is certainly remarkable. [Laughter.] But in view of the self-control which the House showed yesterday and its reserve in expressing an opinion, I think I am safe in concluding that in some observations which I shall now proceed to make upon a third term I shall be in no danger of being interrupted by a riot. [Laughter.]

I am sorry to detain the House at so late an hour, but the attendance in committee is full, and my remarks will be brief. I have the further excuse that I believe I am going to deliver a good speech [laughter], because much of it is composed of quotations from very eminent authorities.

If the presidential term possessed an interest that was only academic it would never have received the attention that has been bestowed upon it at all periods of our history. In a republic the tenure of the chief magistrate presents an intensely practical question. It bears a vital relation to the stability of that kind of government. It is at the very point where the opposing forces most fiercely clash that determine whether a republic is to be perpetual or is to merge into some dynastic form. A limited tenure for the head of the State may fairly be called the most important bound to republican institu-The tremendous influence of the executive power centralized in the hands of one strong, unscrupulous man may easily be adequate in critical times to remove all limitation upon his tenure and to change the essential character of the Government. It is hardly necessary to cite instances. Under the consulship of Cæsar, the annual election to the leadership of the Roman Republic became an idle form, and this farce was performed each year for centuries under Augustus, Nero, and the other Emperors. Napoleon was first consul for a fixed time, then for life, and then Emperor. And if you ask for an instance nearer our own country and time, you have only to turn to the neighboring Republic of Mexico, where autocracy paved the way for revolution and only a bloody war terminated the rule of a President. The reality of the issue is shown by the manner in which it has engaged the earnest attention not alone of political theorists but of practical statesmen. It is my chief purpose in addressing the House to-day to trace the attitude of our Presidents, who have been called upon to meet this question practically and whose utterances upon it must have an authoritative force with the American people.

In the framing of the Constitution the presidential tenure was one of the foremost among the problems that received the thoughtful consideration of the convention. The majority of the States voted that the President should have a term of seven years and be ineligible for reelection, and this limitation to a single term remained in the Constitution until almost the close of the proceedings of the convention. There was then subof the proceedings of the convention. There was then substituted for it a provision for a much shorter term, with nothing said about reelection. Washington thoroughly understood the problems involved in making the Constitution. He understood them better, perhaps, than any other man who par-ticipated in the convention over which he presided. Reflecting the opinion that had found so strong an expression in the con-vention, he determined near the end of his first term not to accept a reelection, which, if he should consent to accept it, would come to him by acclamation. He charged Madison with the duty of preparing a draft of an address announcing his Madison based this draft upon a letter from Washington and upon a conversation with him. There occurs in the paper prepared by Madison the following significant which undoubtedly reflected with correctness the opinion of Washington:

May I be allowed further to add as a consideration far more important that an early example of rotation in an office of so high and delicate a nature may equally accord with the republican spirit of our Constitution and the ideas of liberty and safety entertained by the

But Washington became the object of pressure upon every side and from men representing all shades of opinion to accept another election. The National Government had not yet been fully delivered into the world. The Constitution had not been completely set in motion. There seemed to be danger that without the one man at the head who could command practically undivided support the Government might not be kept going. Washington yielded very reluctantly to the pressure that was brought to bear upon him. But at the end of his second term and with the certainty of a third unanimous election before him, he refused to accept another election, and established the line which has ever since been regarded as the Rubicon over which no President might cross. For nearly a century and a quarter, whatever other changes may have taken place in our Constitution or in public opinion, whatever enlarged views the people may have come to entertain regarding the National Government, the precedent of Washington in fixing the limit at two terms, ratified as it has been by his successors, has acquired the force of a constitutional limita-tion and by prescription it has to-day the validity of posi-

The power of the Presidency, great in Washington's time, is very much greater to-day. The development of the country has resulted in giving an importance to some of the national powers which they did not possess in Washington's day. have increased in population thirtyfold and in wealth probably a hundredfold, and there has naturally come about a centralization of power in the hands of one man such as was never before witnessed. And yet, even with the power which the President had in the administration of Washington, it appeared to that great patriot to be in the interest of the preservation of liberty that a precedent should be created upon the presidential tenure. The House of Representatives in reply to Washington's address made this striking declaration:

We can not be unmindful that your moderation and magnanimity twice displayed by retiring from your exalted stations afforded examples no less rare and instructive to mankind than valuable to a republic. * * For our country's sake, for the sake of republican liberty, it is our earnest wish that your example may be the guide of your successors, and thus after being the ornament and safeguard of the present age become the patrimony of our descendants.

Mr. Jefferson followed the example of Washington. Many times he put upon record his approval of the limitation. On January 6, 1805, he wrote to his friend Taylor:

Gen. Washington set the example of voluntary retirement after eight ears. I shall follow it. And a few more precedents will oppose the bstacle of habit to anyone after a while who shall endeavor to extend

Again, on June 7, 1807, he wrote to Mr. Weaver:

If some period be not fixed, either by the Constitution or by practice, the services of the First Magistrate, his office, though nominally ective, will, in fact, be for life, and that will soon degenerate into an inheritance.

In a letter to the legislature of Vermont, December 10, 1807, replying to an address asking him to accept another election,

If some termination to the services of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution or supplied by practice, his office, nominally for years, will, in fact, become for life, and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance. Believing that a representative government, responsible at short periods of election, is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind. I feel it a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle, and I should unwillingly be the person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first example of prolongation beyond the second term of office.

A similar reply was made to the many other States which also had asked him to continue in the Presidency.

Jefferson's example, following that of Washington, removed the question of the third term from the politics of that time. There was a universal acquiescence in the practice established by those two illustrious men. Madison and Monroe each served two terms, and, so effective were the examples of Washington and Jefferson, a third term does not appear even to have been discussed, although Monroe was elected to his second term by Andrew Jackson did not believe in even a unanimous vote. one reelection, and much less could he have believed in two.

Having in every one of his eight annual messages urged upon Congress the necessity of amending the Constitution so as to limit the tenure to a single term, it was to be expected that he should not consider the acceptance of a third term.

During Grant's second term there was an agitation to secure his election for a third time. It is very improbable that Grant was in any way a party to this movement, which was pressed by politicians who had attached themselves to him and were attempting to utilize the fame of the great Union general, very likely for their party's benefit, but incidentally for their own. The southern question for the moment assumed such shape that the movement received lukewarm opposition and even mild support in that section of the Union. The Louisville Courier-Journal, having the same brilliant editor then that it has today, declared that-

There are thousands of citizens, sick and weary of partisan injustice and corruption, who will—very mistakenly, but nevertheless very sincerely—see in a proposed relief from wool-pulling fanatics on the one hand and rag-picking financiers on the other a short cut out of a current dilemma through the agency of a third term.

The subject was generally discussed in the newspapers and became one of the most notable of the issues of that day. It was dealt with in State conventions. Perhaps the most striking utterance is the following, which is found in the Kansas Republican platform of 1874:

The unwritten law enacted by the example of the Father of his Country in declining a reelection to a third term is as controlling as though it was incorporated in the National Constitution, and ought never to be violated.

After more than a year of discussion the question was brought up in Congress, and on December 15, 1875, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 233 to 18, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the presidential office after their second term has become, by universal consent, a part of our republican system of Government and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions.

Whether or not the decisive vote for this resolution put an end to the controversy, Grant was not pressed as a candidate before the succeeding Republican convention. Four years afterwards, however, he was put forward with a very powerful support, and after one of the most remarkable political struggles in our history he was defeated in the convention of his party.

On June 10, 1901, President McKinley, who had entered upon his second term on the 4th of March preceding, put himself unequivocally on record, as follows:

unequivocally on record, as follows:

I regret that the suggestion of a third term has been made. I doubt whether I am called upon to give it notice; but there are questions of the greatest importance before the administration and the country, and their just consideration should not be prejudiced in the public mind by even the suspicion of the thought of a third term. In view, therefore, of the reiteration of the suggestion of it I will say now, once for all, expressing a long-settled conviction, that I not only am not and will not be a candidate for a third term, but would not accept a nomination for it if it were tendered me. My only ambition is to serve through the second term to the acceptance of my countrymen, whose generous confidence I so deeply appreciate, and then with them to do my duty in the ranks of private citizenship.

The first utterance to the country made by President Roose-The first utterance to the country made by President Roosevelt after the presidential election of 1904 was a declaration against a third term. When we consider its thoroughly explicit character and the circumstances under which it was made it will compare in point of patriotism or in any other high quality with that of any of his predecessors. He had received the greatest popular majority ever given a candidate for the Presidency. It was the first election as President that he had ever received. The question might have been raised whether the precedents literally applied. But he disregarded the technicality; he sent the "second elective term" quibble glimmering and made the following explicit declaration of his glimmering and made the following explicit declaration of his intention:

On the 4th of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and these three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.

And again, in December, 1907, he declared: I have not changed and shall not change that decision thus an-

Thus the record of the precedents is clear. For a century and a quarter the bound prescribed by Washington has been severely respected. No man has served in the Presidency more than two terms. In only a single instance did anyone permit himself to be a candidate for a third term, and he was defeated even in the convention of the party of which he had been the idol. The longer the usage the more binding becomes its char-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly. Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not differentiate between a third term where the term is succes-

Mr. McCALL. Or consecutive— Mr. NORRIS. And where another term has intervened; and I want to ask the gentleman if any argument he has read from anybody has any application except where a third term is a successive term?

Mr. McCALL I think it has, but I am going to treat that very question which the gentleman has suggested.

Very many years ago Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries upon the Constitution, said of the tenure of the President

This usage has indirectly established by the force of public opinion a salutary limitation to his capacity for continuance in office.

Much later, when time had added to the authority which the practice had acquired in Chancellor Kent's day, Hon. John C. Spooner said in a note on De Toqueville's Democracy in the United States:

President Washington established the practice of declining a third election, and every one of his successors, either from a sense of propriety or from apprehension of the force of public opinion, has followed his example. So that it has become as much a part of the Constitution that no citizen can become a third time elected President as if it were expressed in that instrument in words.

Where a usage is not contrary to the terms of the Constitution but supplements it, it can acquire as valid a force as ever the common law had in England. Take, for instance, the method of electing a President. Under the Constitution an elector has practically unlimited discretion, provided he votes for a candidate who has the constitutional qualifications. Indeed, it was the purpose of the provision establishing the Electoral College to delegate to a few wise men the power to choose the President and Vice President. But by long usage an elector has become merely a ballot, bearing the name of the candidate of his party, and if his candidate lived and he should bring about the election of another the act would create a revolution.

The restriction imposed by Washington's example was never so salutary as to-day. The army of Federal employees has grown from a few hundreds to nearly a half million. Through the extension of our territory and the development of commerce and industry the activities of the National Government have expanded in a bewildering fashion. More than the total amount of our annual expenditure under Washington is now spent by the Government each year for inspectors and detectives for supervising what we write, what sort of contracts we make, and how we conduct our business. The central authority may know what every man does. This knowledge or ability to know business secrets and an unlimited power of prosecution for loosely defined statutory crimes enormously increase the weapons which an ambitious and unscrupulous President might employ to continue indefinitely in office.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry there?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not that argument apply with equal force to a President succeeding himself? Mr. McCALL. Logically I think it does. But I think the influence would be much stronger after two terms than one. The system of government that exists must bear the burden of all the evils, however much worse they might be under some other system. Rapacious avarice, which no code of law has ever been able wholly to check, the inequality that is inevitable as well as the inequality that is unpardonable, the vulgar splurging of the porky rich—these and other things will produce discontent. And then the country does not lack for people who chiefly delight in the glamour and the fuss and feathers of high office, who are swept away by its noise and vociferation, and who will listen in rapture to the siren song of the political calliope if only it can be made to play upon the White House grounds. [Laughter and applause.] A President who is at once an unprincipled and a skillful politician may augment and utilize discontent, may play upon the celestial beings of the gallery, and may so wield his vast power that at last the country might come to think that its safety depended upon one man and upon the sacrifice of its institutions.

But it is said that the rule against the third term has application only to those who are actually in the Presidency. utterances of our Presidents, however, were not ambiguous. They were against three terms, and not merely against three consecutive terms. President Roosevelt, for instance, said:

Under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination,

There is no equivocation there. The rotation of which Washington spoke to Madison did not leave room for passing the office on to a favorite to be passed back again.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McCALL. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. I want to know if all those statements made by Washington and Jefferson and Roosevelt were not made at a time when they were serving their second terms, and if they were not made in answer to suggestions that they should become candidates for a third term, which necessarily would have been a successive term?

Mr. McCALL. Undoubtedly.
Mr. NORRIS. Those expressions ought to be construed, then, should they not, in the light of the conditions and circumstances under which they were made?

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman is trying to complete the circumstances under which a man like Jefferson or a man like Roosevelt made a statement, in order to detract from the literalness of the statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I think they should be construed in the proper

Mr. McCALL. They should be construed as they were made, and I do not put them forth for any other purpose.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. McCALL. Yes. Mr. JACKSON. Inasmuch as the interruption has occurred, I would like to ask another question. The House of Representa-tives being one coordinate branch of the three great branches of the Government upon which devolves the duty of the election of the President in case the electoral college fails to elect, does not the gentleman think that if this House should rush into an expression of opinion upon the matter of the interpretation of what constitutes a successive or third term at a time when it was of importance to the country, it would be as much a viola-tion, or more of a violation, of the Constitution than it would be if an individual would offer himself as a candidate?

Mr. McCALL. I do not know how the gentleman voted yesterday, but he may be giving a very good reason for his action yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. JACKSON. I did not vote at all. I simply ask whether the gentleman thought it was proper for the House of Representatives to prejudge the question.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman thought it a prejudgment, undoubtedly that would justify his action yesterday in refusing to prejudge the question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that all the argument in opposition to a third term is founded upon a proposition that a President who is in office obtains power that gives him in his official position ability to control nominations and thus succeed himself? Is not that the principal argument against it?

Mr. McCALL. That is a very strong argument, but it is not the only argument.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman will admit that that argument does not exist when the term is not successive.

Mr. McCALL. Not that particular argument, although if the gentleman had listened to the statement I had made about rotation he must have seen that it must have even some effect on the exercise by the President of his influence on his party.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Referring to the Presidents whom the gentleman has named, who declined a renomination or reelection after the expiration of eight years, was any of them ever seriously considered for renomination except President Grant?

Mr. McCALL. It seemed to be considered a closed incident in the case of all of them except President Grant, who was the most powerful man in his party, and who was defeated in the convention of his party, and I believe he would have been more decisively defeated at the polls in the event that he had been a

Mr. SLOAN. Did any of them have an opportunity to take a third term after the lapse of four years?

Mr. McCALL. They had no opportunity, but undoubtedly, with the authority that a man has who has served eight years in the Presidency, they could have stimulated their friends to such an extent that they could have become candidates.

One who has served eight years as President, and who has no ambition of his own to serve, acquires an authority which makes him an asset of priceless value to his country. In times of distress and danger his advice would be a powerful force to keep her upon the right path. But if he should act under the influence of ambition and aspire to the Presidency, he would be converted from an asset into a grave liability. The faults of converted from an asset into a grave liability. The faults of a President soon disappear and are forgotten by the people after he has retired from office. On the other hand, the cares of the successor lie thick upon him during his first years of office, when he is involved in the struggles over patronage and before he has established himself with the people. If the retiring President who has honorably served for two terms may aspire to a third, his great reputation may serve as the rallying point for the discontented and as the center for intrigue against his successor. Instead of being a force for good government he would be a force for bad government and a source of danger to the country. From the time of Washington to this day there have been found emotional spirits fearful that destruction would come to the country or its institutions unless some man were elected to the Presidency for a third term. And yet, although no President has served more than two terms, the Republic has moved steadily forward. The Nation has no poverty in men. It possesses hundreds of citizens capable of performing with high honor the duties of the Presidency. And it will always be indefinitely safer to dip into the great mass of American citizenship in order to secure a head for the State than to do violence to the uniform precedents of our history and to remove the hallowed landmark of republican institutions established by George Washington and sacredly cherished by the Nation down to this hour. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 18956, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. Lamb, a reprint was ordered of the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, with certain clerical changes therein.

MESSENGERS TO POSTMASTER AND OFFICIAL REPORTERS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 386 (H. Rept. 304).

Resolved, That he Postmaster of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a messenger, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $100 per month during the remainder of the present session.

With the following committee amendment:

Insert, after the word "session," in line 5, the following:
"And that the official reporters of debates be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint a messenger, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $60 a month from the 15th day of December, 1911, during the remainder of the present session."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is need for an additional messenger in the House post office. In the last Congress there was a change in the law. The last appropriation bill carried one less messenger than had been carried in appropriation bills previously. The present postmaster finds it necessary, in order to carry on the work of his office, to have an additional messenger, and he has had such a messenger in his office constantly since the 1st day of December. What he now asks, and what this resolution provides, is that we shall pay out of the contingent fund the compensation of this messenger from now until the end of the session.

The official reporters of debates have no messenger at the present time on the rolls of the House, and it is found absolutely necessary that they have such a messenger. In fact, the official reporters have been employing a messenger and paying him out of their own salaries.

In order to be perfectly fair to the House I want to state that this messenger was cut off by a House resolution at the beginning of the extra session, and we are asking in this resolution to restore this janitor, who was taken off by that resolution and whose services are found to be absolutely necessary.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. Mr. MANN. The additional messenger for the postmaster, I understood the gentleman to say, was to have his salary com-

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. Mr. MANN. Why should not the salary run back? Mr. LLOYD. I really think it should run back. He has been necessarily employed.

Mr. MANN. Who has paid him during this time?

Mr. LLOYD. Part of the time he has not been paid and part of the time others have paid him.

Mr. MANN. I have no interest in the matter, but it seems to me that if the committee have reached the conclusion that the messenger is necessary, and he has actually been used, he should be paid.

Mr. LLOYD. I am willing to accept an amendment which provides for the payment of this messenger, as well as the other, from the 15th of December last.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "month," in line 4, the words "from the 15th day of December, 1911."

The SPEAKER. Is that an amendment to the amendment? Mr. LLOYD. That is an amendment to the original reso-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the other

Mr. LLOYD. No; both amendments are pending. The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to. Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Is this messenger in the post office a new place, which has not been on the pay roll of the House before?

Mr. LLOYD. It is the same place that has been on the roll of the House up to the 1st of July. In the last appropriation bill the number was changed and this one was cut off, and we are simply adding it to the roll again.

Mr. PALMER. That is not a place cut off by the House resolution in the beginning of this Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. No, sir.
Mr. PALMER. Now, as to the messenger for the reporters of debates. That is the same place that was cut out by a House resolution in the beginning of this Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. Mr. PALMER. And the same place referred to in the debate afterwards as probably necessary, but to be determined hereafter when we found out how the experience of the reporters of debates would work out?

Mr. LLOYD.

Yes, sir. ER. The question is on the amendment offered The SPEAKER. by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Archers Creek, S. C. (H. Doc. No. 513); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of St. Petersburg, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 512); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting list of documents received and distributed by the Department of Commerce and Labor for the calendar year 1911 (H. Doc. No. 514); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 470) for the relief Mrs. Tessie Du Bois, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CUMMINS. I report back adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. 3579) to amend section 1 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to oaths, and I submit a report (No. 323) thereon. The bill may go upon the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An adverse report to go to the calendar

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron] to it, and he can have such disposition made of it as he desires. I may say to the Senator from Ohio I have just made, from the Committee on the Judiciary, an adverse report upon Senate bill 3579, introduced by him, and, so far as the committee is concerned, it can either go to the calendar or be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BURTON. I prefer that it should go to the calendar.

The adverse report, I understand, is upon the ground that the form of oath should be made the same as that in each of the respective States. That was one ground?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is on the ground that there is no necessity for making the form of oath uniform throughout the country.

Mr. BURTON. I prefer, if satisfactory, that the bill should go to the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I know, it will be satisfactory to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2610) for the relief of the heirs of Lieut. R. B. Calvert, deceased, submitted an adverse report (No. 324) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report

Mr. POMERENE (for Mr. Owen), from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3686) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Coal Co. and the Eastern Coal & Mining Co. to exchange certain lands embraced within their existing coal leases in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation for other lands within said nation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 326) thereon. ESTATE OF MARY H. S. ROBERTSON, DECEASED.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1544) for the relief of the estate of Mary H. S. Robertson, deceased, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 209), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1544) entitled "A bill for the relief of the estate of Mary H. S. Robertson, deceased," now pending in the Senate be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provision; of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

ESTATE OF ALLAN J. MANN, DECEASED.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $228 to pay the legal representatives of Allan J. Mann, a deceased contractor, for services rendered in transporting the mails in the State of Texas prior and up to the 31st day of May, 1861, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-HENRY C. YATES.

On motion of Mr. BRADLEY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Henry C. Yates, S. 3090, Sixty-second Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 210), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to advise the Senate of the character, extent, and assessed valuation of the property owned by each of the railroad companies, including street railway companies, operating in the District of Columbia, and the amount of taxes paid by each of said companies during the last calendar year.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 211), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Sixty-second Congress to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ stenographers from time to time to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, and to have the testimony and proceedings of such hearings printed for the use of the committee. The expenses of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee and subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

PUBLIC-UTILITIES COMMISSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (8, 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public-utilities commission.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill will be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, page 4, line 5, after the word "railroads," to strike out "and"; in the same line, after the word "company," to insert "and the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co., and all companies engaged in interstate traffic upon the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay," so as to read:

The term "common carrier" when used in this act includes express companies and every corporation, street railroad corporation, company, association, joint-stock company or association, partnership, and person, their lessees, trustees, or receivers, appointed by any court whatsoever, owning, operating, controlling, or managing any agency or agencies for public use for the conveyance of persons or property within the District of Columbia for hire. Steam railroads, the Washington Terminal Co., and the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co., and all companies engaged in interstate traffic upon the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay are excluded from the operation of this act, and are not included in the term "common carrier."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the end of the following clause, in section 3 on page 9:

Sec. 3. That every public utility doing business in the District of Columbia having tracks, conduits, subways, poles, wires, switchboards, exchanges, works, or other equipment shall, for a reasonable compensation, permit the temporary use of the same or a permanent use for a distance not exceeding 2,500 feet by any other public utility whenever public convenience and necessity require such use, and when such use will not result in a noncompensatory or irreparable injury to the owners or other users of such equipment, nor in any substantial detriment to the service to be rendered by such owners or other users.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question at this point. Why did the committee limit that provision to 2,500 feet?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that is an arbitrary distance. On the one hand, there were those who contended that we ought not to compel one company to go over the tracks of another, and, on the other hand, there was a contention that they ought to be permitted to do so without restriction. After very careful consideration on the part of all parties in interest, it was decided that there might well be a restriction, the commissioners contending. however, that they thought it ought to be 3,000 feet, because that would serve the purpose in a particular place in the District where they wanted one company's cars to run over the tracks of another, but it was finally determined to put 2,500 feet in the bill—which is almost half a mile—thinking that would answer every contingency that might arise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason I asked the question was this:

The bill provides that when one company does use the tracks of another temporarily or permanently it shall pay due compensation for it. The distance from the Treasury Building, let us say, to the Capitol is much more than 2,500 feet.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is about twice that distance, probably.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is very probable that very many lines may in the course of time have to run over that space, because it forms the sentral enterprise the terms from the Wilter House.

it forms the central artery of the town, from the White House to the Capitol, and it would be out of all reason to allow any more tracks to be laid on Pennsylvania Avenue or on Fifteenth Street than are already laid. There is a double track there now. It seems to me the limit fixed in the bill ought to be

Mr. GALLINGER. The probabilities are that in the near future there will be another cross-town line a little north of Pennsylvania Avenue that will quite likely take care of the line of any company that wishes to come into the District from Virginia we will say: so that I think—

Virginia, we will say; so that I think—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but if the Senator will excuse me, this not only limits the distance over which one company may use the tracks of another permanently, but it limits it temporarily.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, suppose
Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that it does not limit it temporarily. In emergencies the companies are permitted to go over the tracks as far as they may see fit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I have heard the bill, it seems to limit both uses, temporary and permanent.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was going to say that a company might come in from Maryland at one end or from Virginia at the other, and while they were getting the balance of their crosstown lines built they ought to be able to use either F Street or Pennsylvania Avenue—either one or the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that, so far as temporary use is concerned, there is no restriction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This particular paragraph says "temporary or permanent."
Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the way I heard it. If that is the case, the word "temporary" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where is that?
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On page 9, line 19.
Mr. GALLINGER. "Permit the temporary use of the same"—there might well have been a comma there—"or a permanent use for a distance not exceeding 2,500 feet." The purpose was to make the temporary use unlimited.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, the term "temporary" used in that place ought to be stricken out, because it clearly carries the limitation of 2,500 feet.

Mr. GALLINGER. If we should strike out the word "tem-' I do not think it would cure the evil of which the Senators complain, would it? It would then read:

Permit the use of the same or a permanent use

I think the word "temporary" is quite properly used there: Permit the temporary use of the same of a permanent use for a distance not exceeding—

We might say "permit the unlimited temporary use," if the Senator thinks that would be preferable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let it read "permit the unlimited temporary use or the permanent limited use."

Mr. GALLINGER. "The unlimited temporary use," I would say. In section 3, page 9, line 18, before the word "temporary,' I move to insert the word "unlimited."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning in section 3, on line 2, page 10, as follows:

Provided, however, That the tracks, lines, or conduits, or other facilities, of any existing street railway, electric lighting company, telegraph or telephone company, shall not be used or occupied by any other company or public utility unless by contract duly made between the parties interested and approved by the commission, except as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Ought not those words to be "hereinafter provided," instead of "hereinbefore provided," for the provision authorizing it follows? The following provision authorizes the commission to compel them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it read "herein provided."

the Senator from Georgia is right in his suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 3, page 10, line 8, before the word "provided," it is proposed to strike out "hereinbefore" and to insert "herein," so as to read, "except as herein provided."

The amendment was agreed to. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the end of section 9, which is as follows:

Sec. 9. That every public utility shall keep and render to the commission, in the manner and form prescribed by the commission, uniform accounts of all business transacted. Every public utility engaged directly or indirectly in any other business than that of the conduct of a street railway, or the production, transmission, or furnishing of heat, light, water, or power, or the conveyance of telegraph or telephone messages, shall, if required by the commission, keep and render separately to the commission in like manner and form the accounts of all such other business, in which case all the provisions of this act shall apply with like force and effect to the books, accounts, papers, and records of such other business.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if it is proper at this point, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think that section tantamount to an authorization to these companies to engage in other business?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it was not so intended. I will say to the Senator that that particular section was taken almost verbatim from the law of Wisconsin, which, it is true is a very stringent law in every respect. I think perhaps it had reference more particularly to corporations that are now engaged in other business. As an illustration, the Washington Railway & Electric Co. has control of the electric-light system of this city

Mr. BAILEY. And ought to be compelled to abandon that control at once.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I agree with the Senator on the general proposition that that would be a wise thing to do, but unfortunately we can not do it in this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, I am rather inclined myself to offer an amendment to this bill providing that no corporation subject to its provisions shall permit any of its stock to be voted by any other corporation nor shall it be permitted to pay dividends on the stock held by any other corporation. surplus beyond a reasonable limit.

We have reached a point in this country when it seems to me absolutely necessary to rigidly enforce what I believe to be the common-law rule against one corporation owning stock in another corporation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under the provisions of the Code of the District of Columbia there is an absolute inhibition as to the right of one corporation owning stock in another company, I will say to the Senator. That is the law of the District of Columbia to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, why do you provide in this bill, which is subsequent to the District Code, the practical authority to them to do it by compelling them to account in a certain way for business outside of their main business?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, possibly the contention of the Sena-

tor is correct. I had not thought of it in that particular light.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the chairman of the committee to think that over. I am not sufficiently familiar with the practical state of affairs here to know whether it would be just and wise now to forbid the payment of dividends or forbid the voting of corporate stock in one corporation by another, but I am perfectly clear that no corporation ought to be permitted to own or control any other corporation. Certainly if it owns or controls the stock of a corporation engaged in a different character of business, then it is a diversion of corporate funds to a use not authorized by the charter, and if it is applied to a corporation engaged in a similar business, obviously it destroys all kind of competition between them. Whether it be one or the other, it ought to be forbidden. Mr. GALLINGER. I apprehend, without having actual knowledge on that point, that very likely this condition of things existed in this District before the provision in the code was enacted. I think that is so. The provision in the code is:

It shall not be lawful for any company to use any of their funds in the purchase of any stock in any other corporation.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, that probably would only authorize a stockholder to enjoin and probably to cancel the purchase of stock; but I think that does not compel those who have already acquired the stock to dispose of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator on that

Mr. BAILEY. Well, they ought to be made to do so. I think that is evident

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say that personally I am not opposed and I feel that no member of the Committee on the District of Columbia is opposed to an actual inhibition, so far as the future is concerned; but, as to the existing condition, I think, on this bill, it would not be wise to undertake to destroy the present relationship of these companies.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I think it ought to be done. But that is an abstract proposition; and I do not know enough about conditions here, and the uses or abuses of the power, to warrant me in obtruding my views on the committee. I did understand it, I would regard it as indefensible to dissent from what the committee has done. But it seems to me plain that this ought not to be permitted. If I was the court, I would have no trouble about this question, and I would not need a statute. Any stockholder who applied to me to restrain the payment of dividends or the voting of stock by a corporation would obtain prompt relief. I believe that is the common law, although I understand that rule is not followed in all the States. It is followed in the more enlightened jurisdictions.

Mr. PAYNTER. In Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; in Texas. Consequently I am not going to further insist upon it, but I hope the committee will provide against that Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say to the Senator from Texas that I do not believe any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia is inimical to the views expressed by him. So far as I am concerned I believe there ought to be a statute forbidding corporations engaged in interstate commerce holding the stock or bonds of other companies. I believe when a corporation is created for a specific purpose it ought to be confined to that purpose, and ought not to be permitted to hold the stock of other companies and control other businesses than the one which it was created to do.

Mr. BAILEY. And its earnings ought to be distributed in dividends, instead of in the purchase of stock.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I fully concur in that statement. I believe the tendency toward accumulating large surplus funds is wrong. Corporations ought to be required to distribute their earnings in dividends, and ought not to be allowed to have a

But it was hardly practicable, in dealing with the District of Columbia corporations, to adequately handle this subject, which is a very large one. We realized that the bill was left in a condition not very satisfactory, because we were anxious to initiate a system of public utilities to control the District of Columbia corporations, and we did not have the requisite information to go very thoroughly into it.

There is no indisposition on the part of the committee to meet the views of the Senator from Texas. Certainly there is no such indisposition on my part, for I believe the question is one of the utmost importance. I believe it would go further than perhaps anything else in controlling the corporations of the country, to limit them to the business for which they were created. If they are engaged in interstate commerce, they ought not to be allowed, through holding companies or by indirect methods, to reach fields of activity which they were not

I am sure, as I said, that this is more than a local ques-We have not undertaken to deal with it very thoroughly in the District of Columbia, feeling that it would not amount to a great evil here, in view of the law already existing, which the Senator from New Hampshire has read. But so far as I am concerned and so far as the committee is concerned, in my opinion, we would not be inimical to an amendment perfecting the We thought we had done about all we could do to commence this innovation here and to improve the conditions in the District of Columbia, but I do not believe the committee is at all inimical to an amendment along the line of the suggestion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin] and the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] satisfy me that it is only a question of time, and reasonable time, when the matter will be worked out and in their own way. They are both better qualified for the task than I am, and I shall do no more.

I am rather gratified at these expressions, because I think the evil of corporate ownership of stock in other corporations is one that it is impossible to overestimate. The fact is, Mr. President, that it would be impossible to organize and maintain a trust without a holding company or without the corporate ownership of stock in other corporations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 10, page 15, line 12, after the word "records," to strike out "in" and insert a period and the word "In," and in line 13, after the word "act," to strike out the period and the word "The" and insert a comma and the word "the," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 10. That the commission shall prescribe the forms of all books, accounts, papers, and records required to be kept, and every public utility is required to keep and render its books, accounts, papers, and records accurately and faithfully in the manner and form prescribed by the commission, and to comply with all directions of the commission relating to such books, accounts, papers, and records. In so far as practicable for the purposes of this act, the form prescribed shall be the form accepted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the end of section 15, on page 18.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question with regard to the section just read.

It is provided, first, that-

The commission shall provide for such depreciation in fixing the rates, tolls, and charges to be paid by the public.

It is then provided that-

All moneys in this fund may be expended in new constructions, extensions, or additions to the property of such public utility, or invested, and, if invested, the income from the investments shall also be carried in the depreciation fund.

Does the Senator from New Hampshire contemplate that there shall be rates and charges for the public service sufficient to accumulate a depreciation fund that will enable the company to build new lines or to add to its existing lines, and in that way supply a capital account instead of a depreciation account?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will confess to a knowledge of these technical questions not as accurate as some other Senators possess. In drafting this bill the utmost care was taken to produce a good bill. The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, a very excellent lawyer, rendered very valuable assistance, as did other gentlemen, in making the bill. I am free to say it is a composite measure.

This particular section was taken from the Wisconsin law. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], who introduced a bill on this subject, has the identical section in his bill. My impression is that the thought was that there would necessarily be a greater or less accumulation, and that it might properly be used for the purposes that are enumerated here. I do not think there is any thought that they are going to accumulate a great fund and in that way build new lines of railroad or new gas pipes, but that there should be more or less an ac-

Senator from Iowa think so?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know what the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin contains. I am not familiar with it. I have, however, in the course of my life given a good deal of study to this particular phase of public regulation. regulation.

I do not believe that the rates of railway companies, or of street railway companies, or of gas companies, or of electric light companies ought to be high enough to provide a fund that will enable those companies to enlarge their property. For instance, let us assume that a street railway company in Washington begins with a capital of $1,000,000. The city grows and it becomes necessary to double the capacity of the company. It has always seemed to me very unjust and unfair that the people of the District, in this instance, should be compelled to pay a rate of charge that would accumulate another million dollars, in addition to paying the expense of maintenance and repair in order that the company might thus increase its When that is done, then the company again begins to earn an income upon the million dollars accumulated at the expense of those who have used the service in excess of a fair charge for the service. In effect it gives to the company the opportunity to make the people of the District of Columbia contribute the capital of the company to enable the company to thereafter earn interest upon that capital, which is not dis-tributed among the people of the District of Columbia, but is paid in the way of dividends to those who may be the owners of the capital stock.

I think my observation with respect to public utility in the District of Columbia is equally true of public utility anywhere. It has been very common in the United States for the railways to charge a rate for their services that would accumulate a surplus used by the companies in the extension of their property. When so used it is capitalized, and then the people to whom the service is rendered are asked to pay a sum that will return a reward or an interest upon the very capital which they themselves have contributed in undue or excessive charges.

For one I have never been willing to adopt that plan of capitalization. I have never been able to see its justice. I have done what little I could through some years of public life to deprive public utility companies of the opportunity of collecting more than was necessary to maintain and repair their properties and pay interest upon their capital investments in order that they might take from the public the capital upon which they afterwards expect to demand an income or a return. It is a false system.

Whenever a public utility company in the District of Columbia or anywhere else desires to increase its capital the capital should be drawn from an independent source, and when invested in the property the company is entitled to earn a fair reward upon it. But for the Congress of the United States to solemnly declare that a street railway company or a gas company or an electric light company in the District of Columbia may charge rates that will enable these companies to gather together the capital which they may find it provident and necessary to use in their extensions and enlargements would, it seems to me, be in defiance of the fundamental rules which ought to govern the construction and the operation of such enterprises. never bring myself to support a measure which contains a recognition of the right of a quasi public company to base its rates upon any such hypothesis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and continued the reading to the end of section 39, on page 28.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a variance here in the bill. It is provided that the investigations can be made by the commission upon its own initiative, yet sections 38 and 39 proceed alone upon the idea of having a hearing when a complaint is made, and not of having a hearing when the proposed change comes from the initiative of the commission itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. -I do not quite understand the Senator. What sections seem to be inconsistent, I will ask the Senator? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Section 37 contemplates that changes of rates can be made by the commission on its own initiative which I think eminently proper-without waiting for a complaint from anyone, and yet sections 38 and 39 seem to con-template a hearing by the commission and a procedure to modify rates only where complaint has been made. It seems to me that they ought to be enlarged in their terms so as to cover the time when an effort to modify a rate is made, even Mr. GALLINGER. What amendment would the Senator from Georgia propose? by the commission at its own initiative.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The exact language I could not suggest at this time. At the close of the bill I expect to suggest to the chairman of the committee that the bill go over, so that the various amendments suggested may be perfected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say for myself that I had not intended to ask for a vote upon the bill to-day, and that I wish to accommodate every Senator, so far as suggested amendments are concerned. The provisions in this bill to which the Senator calls attention-sections 37, 38, and 39-were all taken from the Wisconsin statute, word for word.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then very probably there is some other section in the Wisconsin statute which also provides for the hearings where the proposed changes are made at the initiative of the commission itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is possible that such is the fact, although I have doubt on that point; but we will look it up.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only wished to call the matter to the attention of the chairman of the committee as a modification that may be necessary to carry out the real intent of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Of course, the chairman of the committee is anxious, as are the other members of the committee, to have the bill improved in any way that may be suggested, so that it may be perfected.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 53, page 34, line 9, after the word "forfeiture," to strike out:

It shall be unlawful for any street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, or other public-utility corporation, directly or indirectly, to acquire the stock or bonds of any other corporation incorporated for or engaged in the same or similar business as it is, unless authorized by existing law or as it may be authorized in writing to do so by the commission, and every contract, transfer, agreement for transfer, or ssignment of any such stocks or bonds without such statutory or written authority shall be void and of no effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, instead of striking out the clause which has been read, I submit a substitute for the portion proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, on page 34, striking out from line 9 to line 19, it is proposed to insert, after the word "forfeiture," in line 9,

It shall be unlawful for any street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, or other public-utility corporation, directly or indirectly, to acquire the stock of any other corporation, unless authorized by existing law; and every contract, transfer, agreement for transfer, or assignment of any such stocks without such statutory authority shall be void and of no effect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire has suggested that he will not ask for a vote on the bill to-day, I should like the amendment to be passed over until I can have further opportunity to examine it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will simply ask that the amendment be printed and be considered as pending. Is that satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is Without The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered. objection, the amendment striking out the words of the text will be agreed to. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire as a substitute for the words stricken out will lie over and be printed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the substitution of the matter proposed now by the Senator from New Hampshire for that which was in the bill. I do not want, however, the matter to be concluded by the adoption of the amendment so that, at a future time, we can not take it up again.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator that if we simply agree to the amendment recommended by the committee striking out the words after the word "forfeiture," in line 9, I will then offer my amendment to the bill, and it will be pending, and, of course, will be subject to further amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

If we agree to striking out the part which is designated now, does that preclude putting back substantially the same proposition at some future time?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that no point would be made on that at all, yet I am quite willing to allow it to remain in the bill if the Senator prefers.

Mr. CUMMINS. The course suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire is agreeable to me if the matter is left open for future consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment that I have suggested is very similar to the words proposed to be stricken out and will be amendable, so that the Senator will not lose any rights.

Mr. CUMMINS. With that statement, I am perfectly content that the matter shall take that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be considered pending, as the Chair understands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment recommended by the offered be agreed to, and then let the amendment I have offered be pending for future consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee striking out from line 9 to line 19, on page 34, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now the amendment I have offered can be considered as pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that arrangement will be made.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and continued the reading to line 12 on page 61.

Mr. POMERENE. I move to amend by striking out all that portion of section 92 just read, after the words "sec. 92" and ending with the words "in office," in line 12, and substituting therefor what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are first in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. All the committee amendments have been acted on. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he simply have his amendment read and printed, to be acted on later when the bill is taken up again.

Mr. POMERENE. That was my purpose, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the proposed amendment be read and then printed.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that it be read, so that it may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before it is read I will suggest to other Senators that this bill is not to be railroaded through. Ample time will be given for very careful consideration, because it is the wish of the committee that the bill should be as perfect as it is possible to make it when it shall be enacted.

I will venture the suggestion to other Senators that if they have amendments to offer, it would be gratifying to the committee if they would do as the Senator from Ohio has done, formulate the amendments and have them printed, so that the committee may examine them. It is fair to the committee that it should have an opportunity to look at amendments before they are voted on. Let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary. On page 61, following the numeral "92," in line 1, strike out all down to and including the word "office," in line 12, and insert:

That all the powers created by this act, and the duty of carrying into effect and enforcing the provisions thereof, are hereby vested in and imposed on a board of three commissioners to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall serve for three years, except that when the commission is first appointed, one shall be for a term of one year and one for a term of two years, and thereafter upon the expiration of the term of any of said commissioners, or in case of vacancy, the President shall appoint his successor. Said commissioners shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 each, payable monthly. The powers, authority, and duties hereby imposed on and granted said commissioners shall be permanent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if the amendment submitted by him should be agreed to, which I hope it will not be, it would be very necessary to give this commission some working force. They would need experts and clerks, and so forth. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have that force at their disposal now. I think when the Senator looks the matter over he will want to enlarge the terms of the amendment. I merely suggest it to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. That is perhaps true. I offer the amendment for this reason: I feel that the present Commissioners of the District are already overburdened with work, and that the investigation into the conditions, the finances, and charges of the several utility corporations here in the city should be begun at once, so that we may be advised as to whether the rates charged are excessive or not.

It is only necessary, it seems to me, to investigate the capitalization of some of these companies to justify the charge that the rates are excessive. For instance, and I will take only a moment, the Capital Traction Co. is capitalized at $16,000,000, with 28.588 miles of trackage, making the capitalization per mile $559,675. The Washington Railway & Electric Co. is capitalized at $27,995,018. The total mileage is 83.26 miles, and the capitalization per mile is $336,260.

In the hearings which we had before the committee the other day, when we were trying to ascertain whether these companies could afford to give free transfers from the lines of one company to the lines of the other, it is true of at least the president of one of the companies that he was not able to tell us whether the cost for construction and equipment was $100,000 or $200,000 per mile. Yet he wanted to assure the committee that it would impoverish the company to grant these free transfers.

It seems to me that these matters should be investigated, and investigated at once, so that the rates of charges can be determined within the near future.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reply, Mr. President, I will only say that I have no apprehension, if this matter is put in the hands of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, there will not be an immediate investigation along all those lines.

It is proper, I should further say, that the gentleman to whom the Senator from Ohio refers has been connected with that company for only a few weeks. I agree with the Senator that his testimony was very unsatisfactory, but the fact is he did not know very much about the company or its operations. There had been a change in the management and he had been elected to the presidency of the company, a gentleman who is very familiar with all these questions having been displaced and having left the city.

Mr. POMERENE. But the Senator from New Hampshire will agree with me that he was very positive in giving testimony to the effect that they could not afford free transfers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that the president of the Capital

Traction Co., who is very familiar with all these matters, was still more positive on that point.

Mr. POMERENE. That is very true. He assured us that there was a very small surplus after the payment of the dividends, but we were not advised as to the cost per mile of the trackage. Mr. GALLINGER. All those matters, when we come to the final disposition of the bill, will be taken up. I am very glad the Senator from Ohio offered his amendment, so that it may be in print to be examined. As I suggested before, I think the Senator, when he looks it over, will feel that he has got to enlarge it so far as the force is concerned, if we have three commissioners, making them an independent board. Mr. POMERENE. I desire to state that my only object in presenting the amendment, or what additional amendments may be necessary, is to insure the very earliest investigation of this

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the reading of the bill proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.
Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, I will ask that the bill be laid aside. It has become the unfinished business. I will venture to repeat my suggestion that I trust Senators who may feel that they ought to offer amendments to the bill will have them prepared as early as may suit their convenience and have them printed, so that we may have an opportunity to examine them before voting on them.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest, if there is nothing else to intervene, that we have a short executive session, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 8, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, February 7, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the

following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely great and glorious, "Life-giving, life-sustaining potentate," fill our minds with wisdom, our hearts with love and gratitude, that we are Thy children involved in changeless love. As the heavens declare Thy glory, so may we, in lives of purity, high resolve, and noble endeavor. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4651) to amend section 171 of the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 171 of the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 171. Whoever within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall bring therein from any foreign country, or shall have in possession with intent to sell, give away, or in any other manner use the same, any business or professional card, notice, placard, token, device, print, or impression, or any other thing whatsoever, in the likeness or similitude as to design, color, or the inscription thereon of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign country that have been or hereafter may be issued as money, either under the authority of the United States or under the authority of any foreign Government, shall be fined not more than $100. But nothing in this section shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing and publishing of illustrations of coins and medals or the making of the necessary plates for the same to be used in Illustrating numismatic and historical books and journals and school arithmetics and the circulars of legitimate publishers and dealers in the same."

The SPEAKER. Are there any amendments?

The SPEAKER. Are there any amendments? Mr. CLAYTON. There are no amendments. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. I may say that section 171 of the criminal code is amended by the insertion, after the word "journals" in the latter part of that section, of these words: "And school arithmetics." So that the last sentence of that section will read this way:

But nothing in this section shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing and publishing of illustrations of coins and medals or the making of the necessary plates for the same to be used in illustrating numismatic and historical books and journals and school arithmetics and the circulars of legitimate publishers and dealers in the same.

I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN]

10 minutes, if he desires,
Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I care to make any statement.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, this is simply enlarging the law so as to allow publishers of school arithmetics to insert pictures of coins, medals, and so forth?

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman is correct. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to be heard upon this bill; it is a simple matter.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT IN PROCEEDINGS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 18236) to allow and regulate amendments in judicial proceedings in the courts of the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any suit in equity instituted in the courts of the United States wherein it shall be decided prior to final decree that the complainant has a complete and adequate remedy at law the complainant may, at his election, upon such terms as the court may impose, cause the same to be transferred to the law docket of the court, there to be proceeded with as if originally instituted as a suit at law.

SEC. 2. That where, in any suit brought in or removed from any State court to any district court of the United States, the jurisdiction of the district court is based upon the diverse citizenship of the parties, and such diverse citizenship in fact existed at the time the suit was brought or removed, though defectively alleged, either party may amend at any stage of the proceedings and in the appellate court upon such terms as the court may impose, so as to show on the record such diverse citizenship and jurisdiction, and thereupon such suit shall be proceeded with the same as though the diverse citizenship had been fully and correctly pleaded at the inception of the suit, or, if it be a removed case, in the petition for removal.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries two very simple

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries two very simple propositions relating to procedure in the court. The first proposition is that whenever an aggrieved party has instituted a suit in equity, and after the cause has proceeded it is developed that his remedy is at law rather than in equity, then, in order to prevent his case being dismissed out of court and justice thereby defeated, as where the statute of limitations has barred the action at law, the aggreeved party may transfer his cause to the law side of the docket upon such terms as the court may impose.

The second proposition is this: Under the practice as it now exists, where a court has jurisdiction on account of diverse citizenship, and the allegation of diverse citizenship is defectively made or perhaps not made at all, and the cause proceeds, it may be dismissed upon that question being raised, even in the appellate court. Indeed, it must be dismissed whenever that question is raised. In such case it is often too late for the complainant to have any remedy at all, because his claim is then barred by the statute of limitations. This bill proposes to allow him to amend in the appellate court and allege in a of anow him to amend in the appendix court and anege in a sufficient way the diverse citizenship.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. Section 2 of this bill, I notice, provides for a removal on account of diverse citizenship at any stage of the

Is that correct? proceedings.

Mr. CLAYTON. No; the gentleman has entirely misappre-hended it. The cause contemplated by this bill has already been removed. This bill does not provide for removal at all, but where the case has already been removed and the diverse citizenship is defectively alleged it permits that defect in the allegation to be remedied at any time, even in the appellate

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from West Virginia

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any objection to the language or purpose of this bill, a discussion of it is more or less a work of supererogation. As stated by the chairman, the purpose of the bill is perfectly apparent on its face. It is in line with the whole tendency of modern thought with reference to court procedure. The whole tendency of both thought and legislation is to prevent a miscarriage of justice by reason of defects in procedure, whether committed through inadvertence, mistake, or ignorance.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. I yield, certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. In the statement the gentleman has just made I would inquire of him whether he assumes there would be a miscarriage of justice in the State courts?

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. I do not understand the relevancy of the gentleman's question.

Mr. CULLOP. I understood the gentleman to say that this was to prevent a miscarriage of justice?

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Precisely.

Mr. CULLOP. If after the defect in the removal proceeding was discovered it would be the duty of the court to remand the case to the State court, does the gentleman assume that in the State court there would be a miscarriage of justice?

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. By no means, but it would not be the duty of the court to remand if there were a defect of such allegation, nor is that the procedure. Where there has been, under the second section of the bill, in cases covered by that section, a removal of the cause to the Federal court, or where the cause has been originally instituted therein, it proceeds to final conclusion in the United States court in the absence of a seasonable motion to remand, and, perhaps, to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there the defective allegation first appearing, that court may dismiss the cause as having been erroneously brought. The effect may easily be that the party would then be barred by the statute of limitations and deprived of all remedy in a proper case.

Mr. CULLOP. In such a case the court would not dismiss the case, but simply remand it back to the court from which it had been removed.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. No; the Supreme Court would either dismiss the case or remand it to the lower Federal court for dismissal by that court; and that court would not of its own motion remand the cause to the State court, but would dismiss it if the jurisdictional allegations were defective.

Now, I concede to the gentleman that parties may after removal, upon proper motion, secure a remand, and with that procedure there is nothing in this bill that will interfere. This is to correct procedure where a cause is in the Federal court and has been proceeded with in that court even to a conclusion and an appeal.

Mr. CULLOP. The point I am trying to make and to get information upon from the gentleman is that where a cause was removed from a State court and there was a defect in the removal proceedings, or erroneously removed, when in such event the party would make a motion to have his cause re-manded, this act would deny that right and give the opposite party in the Federal court the right to make a new proceeding or amend the one already instituted for the purpose of retaining his cause there, when, no doubt, it ought to be tried in the State court where the point was raised or where it was brought.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to agree either with the procedure suggested by the gentleman from Indiana or with the law with reference to that procedure. from Indiana or with the law with reference to that procedure. If there be a cause removed from a State court in which there is a defective allegation of citizenship, that question may perhaps be raised upon motion to remand, but in every such instance the court could now permit an amendment of the pleadings in that particular. More commonly it would be raised at that stage of the cause by a demurrer, and upon such demurrer, if sustained, the court would give the party leave to amend; but the motion to remand could not be made in the Federal court after the cause had there proceeded to proof. Federal court after the cause had there proceeded to proof; but under this bill, after the cause had proceeded to proof, the parties might still amend the pleadings to conform with the proof as made instead of suffering a dismissal of their cause at that advanced stage of the proceedings. Now, there is not in this bill, Mr. Speaker, any purpose to affect in the slightest the procedure upon removal of causes or the power and right in an appropriate case to remand a cause so removed. It is only intended to prevent a miscarriage of justice at an advanced stage of the cause and to preserve to the party the right to make an immaterial amendment, so that he will not be put to the expense and delay incident to a reinstitution of his cause.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Certainly I do. Mr. CULLOP. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to this language in section 2, which, in my judgment, makes the bill very much broader in its scope, as the language shows, than the gentleman is now interpreting it. In line 5, it says:

So as to show on the record such diverse citizenship and jurisdiction.

Now, that would mean that when the party instituted his removal proceedings, as he had to do if he relied on that ground at the inception of the pleadings in the cause, after it was brought in the State court, if he had not made the proper showing there when he got to the last stage in the Supreme Court of the United States, if it reached there, he could be advented and come integers the state of the court of the united states. educated and come into court then and make a cause for removal. Does the gentleman believe that is fair? Does the gentleman believe that that is a correct practice to establish in the courts of this country? Would it not be inviting a want of diligence, a want of study, a want of proper preparation in a case, if persons are permitted when it reaches the last court to amend their original pleadings in the case? If it would, I can not agree with the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. I certainly believe, Mr. Speaker, that where parties have failed seasonably to move to remand a cause, where they have permitted it to proceed to final determination without complaint, they have no right then to ask that the cause shall be remanded and retried from the If the gentleman wants an illustration of what this bill is aimed at, he will find it in one of the cases cited in the report of the committee-that of Denny v. Pironi, in One hundred and forty-first United States. Suit had been brought without a proper allegation of citizenship in the original pleadings. Proof had been taken, judgment had been rendered, and the cause went to the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal. Before doing so, however, the parties, in the court below, sought to make citizenship appear of record, not by an amendment of their pleadings, but by setting it out in a remittitur of judgment which they had filed.

The court upon appeal very properly held that the remittitur was not a part of the true records; that, therefore, diversity of citizenship did not appear, the judgment must be reversed, the cause remanded, and the parties put back to reinstitute their proceedings. Under this bill they could have amended their declaration, made the fact appear as in truth it was, and the whole expense or cost, not only to themselves but their opponents, could have been averted.

Mr. CULLOP. Does the gentleman see what an advantage that gives the party over his adversary?

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. It gives none whatever, in my judgment

Mr. CULLOP. Why, this bill simply puts a premium upon negligence in pleading and preparing causes. Suppose a party had seen his adversary's case removed for cause, and he had not stated his full case, and waited; and after he got to the last court, then he would be barred from pleading and proof. Look at the advantage it gives to the other party. It gives one litigant an advantage the other litigant does not have in court, and it is therefore taking, in common parlance, snap judgment of the opposite party, and deprives him of an opportunity to fully present his side on its merit.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. On the contrary, if the gentleman will permit me, it is the present procedure that permits the snap judgment to which the gentleman refers, that a party without raising this question may sit by and permit the case to go to its final end, lying in ambush, as it were, for his unsuspecting opponent. This is a procedure which I think is against public policy. We need not say that all lawyers are all-wise; we need not say that all lawyers possess the highest degree of skill; but, be that as it may, the court accredits them to litigants as competent to transact their cases, and if it can be prevented no just cause should be permitted to fail because some error may be made by an attorney in his course of procedure, and certainly should not be permitted when his adversary has not seasonably raised his objection and presented it. My answer may not be conclusive to the gentleman, but he draws the distinction between his view and my own, and puts his finger on the very thing against which this bill is aimed.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, if I have [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in entire accord with the Committee on the Judiciary touching these two very important amendments, although I am going to offer a suggestion as to the first section in a moment. These amendments have long been needed, and if there is one thing that is apparent to all men in this day and generation, it is that procedure in court should not be made a trap for the unwary, and it is more important that the litigant have his rights determined than it is the equity side. One of the difficulties that confronts every lawyer in certain classes of cases is to determine whether a remedy can be had at law, or whether he must go into a court of equity, because, properly speaking, a court of equity will not entertain jurisdiction of a suit where there is an adequate remedy at law. The first section is to authorize, where a mistake has been made, such transfer so as to prevent what would otherwise frequently happen, the running of the statute of limitation, so as to deny to a man any relief. I believe it could go further, and while the cases are perhaps very rare, still it is to my mind conceivable that cases might be brought on the law side that ought to be in equity, and that power ought to be given for the transfer of cases from law to equity as well as from equity to law. But I am so anxious to see this legislation passed and realize its importance is so great, that I am not willing to undertake in the haste of floor preparation to offer an amendment. I simply felt called upon to make this suggestion so that, if my view was found to be correct, steps may subsequently be taken to give to the court the power to authorize the transfer from law to equity as well as from equity to law.

The second provision has been very plainly explained by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Davis]. It does not undertake to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts at all. It does not enable you to remove a case to the Federal court or to bring a case originally there that you could not bring without this law being passed. But it does prevent a man sleeping upon his right to make an objection to such a time when, if made, it could not be cured, and it gives the appellate court the right to authorize such a statement as to the jurisdictional fact of diverse citizenship as will cure a defective allegation. In my judgment the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. CLAYTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. CLAYTON. As much time as the gentleman may want; say five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the greatest reproach that can be leveled at our judicial system is that justice is frequently defeated either by delay or by technicality, and the design of the present bill is to correct it in two particulars at least—delay which may defeat justice, and technicality which may defeat justice. In this connection I deem it proper to compliment and congratulate the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the entire Indianary Committee, who as it seems to me in the hills which Judiciary Committee, who, as it seems to me, in the bills which they have reported, as well as those which they are now considering, show an earnest intent on their part to correct some of the evils growing out of the present methods followed under our judicial system. Some of these evils have been frequently called to the attention of the country and to the attention of Congress by our President, himself having been an eminent judge. I hope we may be able, under the guidance of the Committee on the Judiciary, to correct a number of these evils, so that justice may be made speedy and certain in the land. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record the report that I have prepared in this case. And I desire to say one other word, Mr. Speaker, and that is that this bill was prepared as the result of conferences with eminent lawyers throughout the country and correspondence with distinguished judges. Several judges of appellate courts, and, in fact, every judge and every practitioner at the bar with whom I have talked, have commended the measure. licitor General of the present administration, Mr. Lehman, and I know no abler lawyer, when this bill was introduced sent to me a letter commendatory of the measure.

I think that there is a good deal of force in what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] has said, that perhaps in one particular this bill does not go as far as it should. But I could not have that view agreed to by many lawyers or judges. I found a difference of opinion as to whether it should include actions at law; that is, whether or not the proposition stated by the gentleman from Kentucky should be included in the first section. I could not get an agreement, either among the bar or the bench, on that proposition. Hence, that was omitted, and this wise provision, which is a great step in modern progressive legislation, was adhered to.

that some shrewd lawyer should take advantage of a technicality.

We all ought to be in favor of bringing the courts up to date, to get rid of antiquated technicalities as much as possible, and this bill does it in two respects. It is a wise and good bill, and from equity to law of a case that has wrongly been brought on I hope it will have the approval of this House.

I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sheeley] for their indorsement of this, which I think to be a meritorious measure. Perhaps after the able and elucidating speech of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Davis] it was unnecessary for me to have said anything.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAY-TON] asks unanimous consent that he may insert in the RECORD, as a part of his remarks, the report which he mentions. Is there

There was no objection.

Following is the report referred to:

[House Report No. 286, Sixty-second Congress, second session.] The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18236) to allow and regulate amendments in judicial proceedings in the courts of the United States, report the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

FIRST SECTION OF THE BILL.

Whether the remedy of an aggrieved person is at law or in equity is often a very close question not easily determined by lawyers or judges. Sometimes a bill in equity is filed and after a lapse of considerable time and much money spent in litigation, and after a right of action at law is barred by the statute of limitations, the bill is dismissed upon the ground that the complainant has a complete remedy at law. In such a case the complainant is left without an available remedy and justice is therefore defeated. This ought not to be.

That it is often a difficult question to decide whether the remedy is at law or in equity, see Buzard v. Houston (119 U. S., 347) and cases there cited. See also Russell's and Winslow's Digest, volume 1, page 587, relating to action for fraud. A distinguished Federal judge has said that "I have known cases where a final decision of the Supreme Court holding that the remedy was at law and not in equity, rendered many years after the institution of the suit, left the parties practically without remedy, although at the beginning they had a good case at law."

many years after the institution of the suit, left the parties practically without remedy, although at the beginning they had a good case at law."

In the case of Buzard v. Houston (119 U. S., 347) the bill was in equity, and it appeared that the money sought to be recovered had been fraudulently obtained, but that complainant's remedy was at law for damages. In other words, the bill showed a ground for legal and not equitable relief. A demurrer to the bill on the ground that it showed no equity was overruled by the circuit court, and on appeal to the Supreme Court the decision of the circuit court was reversed.

The authorities directly in point cited by the Supreme Court in support of its decision were Parkersburg v. Brown (106 U. S., 487, 500), Ambler v. Choteau (107 U. S., 586), and Litchfield v. Ballou (114 U. S., 190), all cases of supposed mistake or fraud in which it developed on appeal that a remedy could be found in an action at law, and the litigations were abortive.

Insurance Co. v. Bailey (13 Wall., 616) is a case illustrating the same unfortunate predicament in which the litigant often finds himself. That was a case brought in equity for an accounting for fraud, and the Supreme Court concluded, several years after the suit was brought, that the complainant had mistaken his remedy and could have maintained an action for fraud.

In Whitehead v. Shattuck (138 U. S., 151) the bill in equity to recover land was dismissed on the ground that ejectment would lie. In Scott v. Neely (140 U. S., 110) a bill to subject land to payment of contract debt was dismissed on appeal, because the complainant had not established his claim at law; and in Cates v. Allen (149 U. S., 459) a bill to set aside a conveyance of land, brought by a contract creditor, was dismissed on the same ground.

The above case of Buzard v. Houston was also followed in United States v. Bitter Root Development Co. (200 U. S., 472) and in the following cases: Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co. (123 Fed. Rep., 519), Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Pea jurisdiction was made. The trial court then denied the defendant's request to dismiss on that ground, and a trial was had, resulting in a judgment for the plaintif on the merits. The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court sustained the circuit court, on the ground that the evidence so taken did not refute the allegation of diverse citizenship. But the Supreme Court reasserted the rule that if the proof had refuted the allegation, the decision would be reversed and the suit dismissed. Eaton v. Hoge (141 Fed. Rep., 66), adopts the same rule as the Supreme Court in cases involving the same question.

Both sections are in line with modern good legislation and seek to have substantial justice done in cases where now mere technicalities are allowed to defeat justice.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. - The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Clayton, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION, WORKHOUSE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FITZGERALD, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 238) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912, which, with the accompanying report (No. 308), was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the resolution.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS SIGNED.

· Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 184. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, and cots for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion to be held at Macon, Ga., in May,

1912; and

H. R. 1618. An act amending paragraph 6 of the act relating to the Metropolitan police force

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3580. An act to authorize the change of the name of the steamer Henry A. Hawgood;

S. 3369. An act to grant authority to the Inland Steamship Co. of Indiana Harbor, Ind., to change the name of the steamer W. R. Woodford to N. F. Leopold;

S. 3870. An act to grant authority to the Inland Steamship Co. of Indiana Harbor, Ind., to change the name of the steamer Arthur H. Hawgood to Joseph Block;

S. 4246. An act to authorize the sale of land within or near the town site of Midvale, Mont., for hotel purposes; and S. 4351. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the governor of the State of Arizona, for the use of the State, certain furniture and furnishings.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill and joint resolution

H. R. 1618. An act amending paragraph 6 of the act relating to the Metropolitan police force; and

LIENS OF JUDGMENTS AND DECREES, UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 18017) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sterling], who reported this bill to the House on behalf of the committee, 10 minutes, or such time as he may desire.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sterling] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to repeal section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States.'

The statute in question provides that judgments and decrees of the Federal court shall become liens to the same extent and in the same manner as judgments of the State courts in the States where the Federal courts are held; but section 3 makes an exception to that rule.

The first section further provides that when the laws of a State require judgments and decrees of the State courts to be registered or docketed or recorded in any particular office or in any particular manner, in order to become a lien on real estate, then judgments and decrees of the Federal courts must also be recorded or docketed in the same manner, in order to become liens on real estate.

That provision applies, however, only in case the State shall have passed appropriate legislation providing that judgments and decrees of the Federal court may be so docketed, recorded, or registered.

Section 3 provides that even though a State may pass a law requiring judgments and decrees of such courts to be registered or recorded, it is not necessary in those counties where a Federal court is held to register and docket judgments of the Federal courts in order to render them liens on real estate.

A number of States have adopted a system of land registration known as the Torrens Act. In States where this system of land registration has been adopted any person owning land may have it registered in the office of the registrar of titles, and then he may at any time get an official certificate from the registrar of titles showing the state of his title. The certificate states in whom the fee of the land is. It also states what estates, easements, or incumbrances affect the title to the land; but the registrar of titles is not bound to certify to anything affecting a title if it does not appear of record in his office. Under the laws of those States that have adopted that system all judgments, decrees, mortgages, and everything affecting the title to land thus registered must be recorded in the office of the registrar of titles in order to make them liens.

In those counties where a Federal court is held the judgments and decrees of the Federal court are not bound, under section 3 of this statute, to be recorded in the office of the registrar of titles. Therefore, when the registrar of titles makes a certificate in those counties it does not cover judgments of the Federal courts, and the landowner, the man seeking to find out the state of his title, must go to some other forum to find what judgments there are against his title in the Federal courts.

But this is of benefit not only in those States that have adopted that system of land registration. It will be of benefit to every county in the United States where a Federal court is held. It fixes one place where the landowner may find a record of liens and encumbrances affecting his title. It makes his title more certain, and it reduces the expense of ascertaining the state of the title, and for that reason this provision will be of benefit in all the counties throughout the country where a Federal court is held.

It has always been the policy of Congress to defer the matter of titles to the respective States, to allow them to regulate liens, the duration of liens, and the manner of discharging them. Congress has passed laws requiring that executions and attachments from Federal courts must proceed in the same manner as executions and attachments in the State courts in the States where the Federal courts are situated. The same is true as to the duration of judgment liens. There is a Federal statute providing that the duration of a judgment lien of a Federal court shall be the same as those of the State court where the Federal courts are held. This is practically the only exception where the Federal statute does not require judgments of the Federal courts to conform to the same regulation as judgments of the State courts with reference to the time and manner that they shall become liens and the time that those liens shall continue.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STERLING. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana. Mr. CRUMPACKER. The practical effect of this bill, if it becomes a law, will be to take from judgments and decrees of the Federal court the usual lien that attaches to property within the district until certified copies of this judgment and decree have been filed in the office of the county clerk, say, in the county where the property is located?

Mr. STERLING. It only applies to counties where Federal courts are held. That is necessary now in all counties where Federal courts are not held. In order to render a judgment of the district court now a lien on real estate, it must be dock-eted, registered, and recorded in the county where the real estate is situated, if the laws of that State so provide. Now, I think nearly all the States have such a law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If there is such a law in Indiana it has been passed in recent years, because I know that in making abstracts we are always required to procure a certificate from the clerk of the district court as to whether there are any judgments or records against the property in that court

Mr. STERLING. I will call the gentleman's attention to a provision of this law which says that the Federal law becomes applicable when a State has passed a law authorizing the judgment and decrees from the Federal court to be registered and recorded in the same manner as judgments of the State court. I supposed that all the States had such a law; I know a good many do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That local statute assumes that legislatures may determine the binding force of judgments and decrees of courts of the United States?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and I will say further that if Indiana has not a statute providing that Federal judgments shall conform to the rules and regulations of judgments in the States this will not affect Indiana at all. It only applies to States that have passed laws authorizing judgments of the Federal courts to be docketed in the same manner.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill, if it becomes a law, will apply to the counties wherein a Federal court is held, the court that renders the decree or judgment?

Mr. STERLING. It applies only to those counties for this reason: The law already applies to all the other counties. Section 3 makes an exception of these counties where Federal courts are held. The bill seeks to repeal section 3, so that these counties will come under the same rule as all other counties

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The purpose is to make a lien or judgment of the Federal court attach only from the time that it has been duly recorded in the county where the property may be situated?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and only affects these counties where the Federal court is held, for the reason that in all the other counties it is so now in the States that have passed such laws.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And in a question of priority as to the right of lien between a judgment of a State court and the judgment of a Federal court the question will be determined in relation to the judgment that was first recorded?

Mr. STERLING. I should think so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a pretty important question. Mr. STERLING. That would depend entirely upon the laws of the State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have some doubt about the power of a State legislature to limit or impair the force and effect of a judgment or decree of a Federal court. If the State has that power, it might, it seems to me, declare that no judgment of a Federal court should be a lien upon any property in the State at all.

Mr. STERLING. This law gives the State legislature the power to require Federal judgments to conform to the same rules as judgments of State courts.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, the act of Congress confers that power upon the State legislature.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and this bill does not affect that provision of the law. It affects only section 3, which it seeks to repeal. Section 3 excepts counties where Federal courts are held.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that is valid. I think that is a mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that is valid. I think that is a proper proceeding, because the Congress then will adopt a method fixed by State legislation. That is what it means?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Take it in the State of Illinois, where the gentleman procedures are both sittleman.

gentleman and myself are both citizens. Has there been legislation in that State touching this matter?
Mr. STERLING. There has.

Mr. CANNON. So that under the law as it now exists, except in the county of Sangamon, in the gentleman's district, at Springfield, there must be evidence of a judgment in the district court, filed in the court of McLean County, before it becomes a lien.

Mr. STERLING. Before it becomes a lien. Mr. CANNON. This would make the same law effective as to Sangamon County, for instance.

Mr. STERLING. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. STERLING. That is the purpose of it.

No. CANNON. That is all there is of it.

Mr. STERLING. Not all. The gentleman is aware that Illinois has adopted what is known as the Torrens system of land registration.

It does not run to all the counties, does it? Mr. CANNON. Mr. STERLING. It is optional in the State of Illinois. Any county can adopt it as it sees fit. Cook County has adopted it. There is a vast amount of titles registered in the office of the registry of titles in Cook County. Under the Illinois law, and I think under the law in all of the States that have adopted this system, lands that are registered in the office of the registry of titles are not affected by liens or incumbrances unless they are recorded or registered in that office; and this will re-quire in Cook County the judgments of the Federal courts to be registered in that office if the owner of the judgment desires it to become a lien on land that is registered in that office. So it is of double benefit to those counties in the United States that have adopted the Torrens system, and it is of benefit generally to all the counties in the United States that have a Federal court.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman one other ques-Suppose a bill is filed in the gentleman's Federal district at Springfield, where the court holds its session, alleging fraud in a conveyance of a piece of property. That is notice, as I understand it, to all the world-a lis pendens. That would still render it necessary for a citizen of McLean County to consult the records in the district Federal court, I take it.

Mr. STERLING. It might in a case of lis pendens. It would not, however, with reference to judgments.

Mr. CANNON. It would not in the case of judgments?
Mr. CULLOP. The mere fact of the filing of a declaration alleging fraud would not serve as notice to the world unless you follow out some statute and get a record in some recorder's office.

Mr. CANNON. I think it would.
Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, the statute which this seeks to amend is not lengthy, and I will read it for the benefit of those who are interested in knowing the changes this bill proposes. It is as follows:

poses. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall be liens on property throughout such State in the same manner and to the same extent and under the same conditions only as if such judgments and decrees had been rendered by a court of general jurisdiction of such State: Provided, That whenever the laws of any State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, or parish in the State of Louisiana, before a lien shall attach, this act shall be applicable therein whenever and only whenever the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States courts to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

Now. that is the important part of the law. Section 2 does

Now, that is the important part of the law. Section 2 does not pertain to that part of the law and I will omit it, but section 3, which this bill seeks to repeal, is as follows:

SEC. 3. Nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any State office within the same county, or parish in the State of Louisiana, in which the judgment or decree is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county.

If that is repealed, then Federal judgments and decrees must be docketed or registered in the counties where the Federal court is held the same as in all other counties.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STERLING. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I want to state to the gentleman that I was not present in the committee at the time this was reported, and I am simply asking for information. the State of Pennsylvania, for instance, in which automatically a judgment that is rendered in a county will be indexed and will become a lien. If, however, we seek to have that judgment bind land in Schuylkill County, it is necessary to go there with the transcript from the docket and file the transcript in that county. Now, I want to ask whether that will make a different practice in the Federal courts in Pennsylvania when this third section is repealed? It would seem to me that it would be necessary then to file a transcript of that judgment in the county in which the court is held.

Mr. STERLING. That would depend entirely upon whether Pennsylvania has adopted a State law as required by the Federal statute, which I have just read, authorizing judgments of Federal courts to be indexed and registered in conformity to the rules for indexing and registering judgments of the State courts. If Pennsylvania has not passed that law, this change will not affect Pennsylvania at all. If it has passed that law, then it is already the law in Pennsylvania that in those counties where the Federal court is not held the judgment of the Federal court must conform to the rules relating to judgments in the State courts.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. But a judgment in the county in which the court is held, if it conforms to the practice of the State courts, would not require the filing of a transcript to

Mr. STERLING. Not under this section 3, which we seek to repeal, but those judgments in counties where a Federal court is held, when this becomes a law, will have to conform to the rules relating to judgments in State courts. In those counties, as well as all other counties, it makes simply a uniform practice throughout the country and gives the State the right to determine with reference to liens of the Federal courts everywhere; in counties where Federal courts are held as well as in other counties.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Would not the sole effect of this bill, if passed, be to place the rule as to liens of Federal judgments in counties in which Federal courts are held on precisely the same basis as liens in all other counties in the State or district?

or district?

Mr. STERLING. That is it, exactly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD].

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in explanation of this bill. To my mind it is a very meritorious bill and ought to pass. It is also a very simple bill when understood. The act of Congress regulating liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States, approved August 1, 1888, gives to liens of judgments and decrees of the Federal courts the precise effect of liens and judgments of State courts on property within the State. In other words, it provided that judgments and decrees rendered in the circuit or district courts of the United States within any State shall be liens on property throughout such States in the same manner, to the same extent, and under the same conditions only as if such judgments and decrees had been rendered in the courts of general jurisdiction of such State. That was the purpose of the original act. Now, there is a proviso in the act which further makes these liens of judgments and decrees conform to the laws of the State, which is as follows:

Provided, That whenever the laws of any State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, or parish in the State of Louisiana, before a lien shall attach, this act shall be applicable therein whenever, and only whenever, the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States courts to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

The purpose of that proviso is to give the decrees and judgments of the United States courts the same effect upon the property of citizens within the State as that of the judgments and decrees of State courts, and no more. That is the law now in every county, except in those counties in which there happens to be located a Federal court. As to the counties where Federal courts are located, under section 3 of the same act it is provided:

Nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any State office within the same county or parish in the State of Louisiana in which the judgment or decree is rendered in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county.

The effect of repealing section 3 will make the law relating to liens of judgments and decrees of Federal courts uniform throughout the entire country, without any exception.

Mr. PUJO. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. PUJO. As a matter of information, the purpose of this act is to give a uniformity throughout the country with reference to judgments, or as they may operate as mortgages?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. That is the sole purpose of the act. In other words, as has been explained by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING], in the city of Chicago there are a number of Federal courts. They have a peculiar registration system in Illinois known as the Torrens system, and this proposed repeal of section 3 would compel these judgments and decrees to be recorded under that system with the proper officer of the State before they would constitute a lien, while as at present the party who is seeking to purchase property and acquire title to it, after he has gone to the registration records of Cook County, is compelled in addition to examine the decrees of all the courts in that county before he knows whether or not there is a lien upon the property.

I want to ask this fundamental question: What Mr. PUJO. power has the Congress to pass a law with reference to liens in the State of Louisiana or anywhere else?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The power of Congress to define and regulate the effect of liens, of course, is limited to judgments and decrees of Federal courts within States, and the purpose of this original act was to make such liens conform to the laws of the States, to which I think there should be no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I yield.
Mr. CLAYTON. In reply to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Pujo], it would be quite within the power of Congress to declare, if it saw fit to do so, that the judgment of the Federal court should in no case be a lien. But Congress has the power to declare the force and effect of the judgment of the Federal courts. It is entirely within the province of Congress to do that, and that is what this bill is doing, namely, dealing with the judgment of a Federal court, a court created by Congress under its constitutional authority.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I yield.
Mr. STERLING. This goes still further, and gives additional power to the States in determining how these judgments shall become liens.

Mr. PUJO. What power have you to say that as to Louisiana or Texas, say, with reference to a lien or a judicial mortgage? Mr. STERLING. The power of Texas and Louisiana and ery other State-

Mr. PUJO. You have the power in Federal courts.

Mr. STERLING. That is all this relates to, namely, judgments of Federal courts.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas, There can be no doubt of the power of Congress to fix the effect of liens of Federal courts, but the purpose of this act, regulating the effect of liens of judgments in the Federal courts is not to create a conflict between the Federal courts and the State courts, but to make them correspond, as the act expressly provides. And the only exception which prevents their complete harmony with regula-tions and requirements of the State laws is found in section 3, which provides that in those counties in which a Federal court is located parties shall not be required to conform to the State laws in order that liens of such judgments and decrees may attach, and the purpose of the repeal of this section is to remove that exception and make the law uniform throughout the United States in counties in which Federal courts are located as well as in all the other counties of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The que the third reading of the bill. The question is on the engrossment and

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the report on this bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 303, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

[House Report No. 303, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18017) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888, report the same to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The act which this bill seeks to amend is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall be liens on property throughout such State in the same manner and to the same extent and under the same conditions only as if such judgments and decrees had been rendered by a court of general jurisdiction of such State: Provided, That whenever the laws of any State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, or parish in the State of Louisiana, before a lien shall attach, this act shall be applicable therein whenever and only whenever the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States courts to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

"Swc. 2. That the clerks of the several courts of the United States ments and decreed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

"Sec. 2. That the clerks of the several courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indices and cross indices of the judgment records of said courts, and such indices and records shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of the public.

"Sec. 3. Nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any State office within the same county, or parish in the State of Louisiana, in which the judgment or decree is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county.

"Approved, August 1, 1888."

The main purpose of the law is to give to any State the right to require that judgments and decrees of the courts of that State are made liens. It provides that whenever the laws of a State require that a judgment or decree of a court of that State shall be registered, recorded, docketed, or indexed in a certain office in order to create a lien, then the State may, by appropriate legislation, authorize judgments and decrees of a court of the United States, held within that State, to be registered, etc., in the same manner, and otherwise conform to the laws of the State relating to Judgments and decrees of the State courts.

State office is any county where the judgment or decree of a United States court need not be registered or a transcript thereof filed in a State office in any county where the judgment is rendered in order to create a lien on property in that county. If this bill becomes a law it will abolish that exception and make the rule uniform throughout the country. Judgments and decrees of United States courts will be required then to conform everywhere to the same regulation as judgments and decrees of the State courts in order to become a lien.

A number of the States have adopted a land-registration system commonly known as the Torrens law. Under that law persons owning real estate may have their Hiller registered in the office of the registrar form the registrar of titles showing the state of his title. The registrar, however, is required to note in this certificate only such matters as are of record in his office. Under the State law all judgments and decrees sought to be made liens on registered land must be registered in the office of the registrar of titles. Likewise judgments and decrees sought to be made liens on registered land must be registered in the office of the registrar of titles. Likewise judgments and decrees out it is not held in the county where the land is situated in order to create a lien on the registered had. But by section 3, which this bill seeks to repeat, judgments and decrees of the United States court is not held in the county where the land is situated in order to create a lien on the registered had. But by section 3, which this bill seeks to repeat, judgments and decrees of the United States of the United States of the County of the registrar is not bound to create a lien on the registered had. But by section 3, which this bill seeks to repeat, judgments and decrees of the States courts if such court is held in that county. The purpose of this land-registration system is to simpl

ENROLLMENT AND LICENSES OF VESSELS.

Mr. ALEXANDER (when the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 18001) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 4475, which is an exact copy of the House bill, and that it be considered instead of the House bill. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to substitute a Senate bill of similar tenor for the bill which has just been reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that that bill was referred yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill came over from the Senate yesterday, and it therefore went to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Alexander] is the chairman.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to pass the bill temporarily while he sends and

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill may be temporarily deferred until the Senate bill can be returned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed temporarily without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF FUR SEALS AND SEA OTTER.

Mr. SULZER (when the Committee on Foreign Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Davis of West Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I object.
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Iowa. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KENDALL. That request was submitted a moment ago and objection was made. I renew the objection.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SULZER was recognized.

Mr. SULZER was recognized.
Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman from New York yield?
Mr. SULZER. For what purpose?
Mr. KENDALL. I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum,
Mr. SULZER. Then I do not yield.
Mr. KENDALL. I understand the gentleman can not estop me from raising the question of no quorum.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa raises the point of no quorum present, and he is in order in so raising it.
Mr. SULZER. I did not understand he made the point of no quorum. I understood he made a suggestion to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman did make the point that there is no quorum present. [After counting.] There is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a comprehensive measure to give effect to the convention concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia, for the preservation and the protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean. This treaty, when carried into effect, will end pelagic sealing.

The conclusion of this convention between these Governments was a signal triumph for American diplomacy and statesmanship; and when the convention is carried into effect by the high contracting parties pelagic sealing, which is and has been the scourge of the fur-seal herd, will be a thing of the past, and those best able to judge confidently declare the fur seals will abundantly increase and the herd grow rapidly to its former proportions. For more than a quarter of a century every effort was made that could be made on the part of the representatives of the United States to bring about a treaty to stop pelagic sealing on the Pacific Ocean. Pelagic sealing is a well-defined term. It means the pursuit or the capture or the killing of fur seals upon the high seas.

The fur-seal controversy, which has been the source of serious friction between the United States and the powers bordering upon the North Pacific Ocean, whose subjects have been permitted to engage in pelagic scaling against the fur-seal herds having their breeding grounds within the jurisdiction of the United States, has been satisfactorily adjusted by the conclusion of this treaty. This convention is a conservation measure of very great importance, and if it is carried out in the spirit of reciprocal concession and advantage upon which it is based, there is every reason to believe that not only will it result in preserving the fur-seal herds of the North Pacific Ocean, but also that it will afford a permanently satisfactory settlement of a question the only other solution of which seemed to be the total destruction of the fur seals. In another aspect, also, this convention is of importance in that it furnishes an illustration of the feasibility of securing a general international game law for the protection of other mammals of the sea, the preservation of which is of much importance to all the nations of the world.

After the discovery of Alaska, in 1741, the Russians devoted their efforts exclusively to the hunting of the valuable sea otter and paid little attention to the collection of other furs. By 1775, however, the supply of sea otters had become so depleted that efforts were directed toward securing those less valuable furs which theretofore had not attracted the cupidity of the hunters. Among these were the skins of the fur seal.

The existence of the fur seal was known to the early Russians only through the capture of an occasional animal in the water. The land habitat of the animal was not known.

Inquiries by the Russians of the native Aleuts disclosed the fact that a profuse migration of these fur seals occurred each spring northward through those passes between the islands forming the Aleutian Archipelago, and that an equally profuse migration southward occurred each fall. From this it was concluded that these fur seals each spring returned to breed at a place to the northward of the Aleutian Islands, and that they left this breeding ground each fall to spend their winters in the less rigorous climate of the Pacific Ocean.

As the location of this breeding ground was unknown to the aborigines, the Russians bent their energies to discovering the place to which the fur seal migrated and where they believed it could be found in countless numbers.

Vessels to search for this unknown breeding ground were fitted out and various attempts made toward its location. In 1786 the St. George, a small sailing vessel, sailed from Unalaska, in command of Gerrasim Pribilof, a navigator in the employ of the Lebedof Co., set out into Bering Sea to search for the haunts of the fur seal. It cruised for three weeks in the supposed vicinity of the seal islands without discovering them, but, withal, finding unmistakable evidences of the close proximity of land. At last, in the first days of June, 1786, the mantle of fog that generally surrounds this locality was lifted, and before Pribilof loomed the high coast of the eastern end of the most southern island of the group. The discovery was named St. George, after Pribilof's vessel. Finding no safe anchorage there the explorer ordered all his hunters ashore with a supply of provisions, while he stood away again for the Aleutian Islands to spread such reports as to keep others from following.

The news, however, of Pribilof's discovery of the breeding place of the fur seal was spread among the various companies operating in Alaska, and in 1787, when Pribilof returned to the islands, his ship was followed by others, and the location of the islands became a matter of general information. Various rival companies made settlements at several places on both the islands of St. Paul and St. George, and as these islands were found to be not inhabited by man they imported native Aleut hunters to perform the work of taking skins.

In 1799, by imperial grant, the Russian American Co. was given the exclusive right to exploit the resources of Alaska in consideration of its bearing all the expenses of administration and of protection of the Territory. This company at once expelled all the small traders from the seal islands and retained control of them until the cession of Alaska to the United States in 1867.

The story of the fur seal, from the standpoint of the naturalist, reads like a romance and is one of the most interesting things in all biology. There is no other animal like the fur seals, and no one knows it better than those who have watched them, studied them, and who know them. Their ruthless slaughter by the pelagic sealers is a tragedy in the annals of animal life.

Let me say here that there is no man in Congress to-day who is a better friend of the preservation of the fur seal than I am. I have studied them, and I would be the last man to stand here and speak against their best interest and protection.

These fur seals are migratory animals. Their habitat is the North Pacific Ocean. For many years, as I have said, very little was known about them. When Pribilof discovered the islands which bear his name, amphibian life was found there in limitless quantity. The shores of St. George literally swarmed with sea otters which, undisturbed so far by man, could be killed as easily as sheep. Large numbers of walrus inhabited the low beaches. The first hunters to land could not secure a foothold on the beaches because of the teeming animal life and were forced to scale the cliffs in order to reach the high ground beyond. As the summer progressed the fur seals made their appearance by millions. In the first year of discovery, by the few hunters left by Pribilof, over 2,000 sea otters were taken as well as 40,000 sealskins and nearly 15,000 pounds of walrus ivory.

With the return of Pribilof to the islands in 1787 and the arrival of the other vessels which followed in his wake, the killing of seals on land became the chief industry. From 1787 to 1799 as many as six rival companies established stations upon these two small islands, imported native workmen from Unalaska and elsewhere, and vied with each other in securing all the skins they could encourage the natives to deliver to them. In the killing no attention was paid to age or sex, but everything in the way of animal life having a marketable skin was killed. These islands were not then a Government reservation, and no restriction or regulation whatever was placed upon the killing of any animal found thereon. What number of skins was taken by these rival companies prior to 1800 will never be known.

When in 1799 they were either expelled or consolidated into the Russian-American Co., killing of seals continued in the same ruthless manner. Between 1801 and 1804 the company had accumulated in warehouses several hundred thousand seal-skins, most of which spoiled from lack of care in curing. In 1805 such unmistakable evidences of scarcity of seal life were found by a visiting court official that he took it upon himself to stop the slaughter entirely and to send nearly all the native hunters away from the islands.

Killing of seals began again in 1808 in a more moderate de-Attempts were made to secure an increase in this life by the provision of seasons in which no killing was done and by a limitation upon the catch. These measures, however, were ineffective, and in 1835 the Pribilof herd reached the condition of numbering not more than 250,000. The situation in that year became so alarming that all killing was prohibited except 6,480 nursing pups for natives' food and 100 bachelors, or young Also the vital principle that females should be exempt from slaughter and never disturbed on land was recognized in 1835 for the first time and thereafter enforced, at first partially and finally rigorously. With these restrictive measures in operation the herd gradually increased, contemporaneously with a gradually increasing killing of surplus young males for skins, until in 1867, the year of the cession, the Russians took 75,000 skins and the seal herd again numbered millions.

The seal is an amphibious animal. It can only live beneath the water a short time; just how long is not proven. Some people say 10 minutes, some 40 minutes, and some people say an hour, but the seal can only live beneath the water a short period of time, when it has to come up to breathe. It sleeps on top of the water, and the pelagic sealers start after the seal herd from the time it leaves the Pribilof Islands and they pursue it until the herd gets back to the Pribilof Islands. They capture and kill them in the water as they sleep or as they are swimming along.

All agree that the scourge of the seal herd is pelagic sealing. There is not a zoologist, there is not a biologist, there is not a naturalist, there is not a scientist, there is not a friend of the seal herd who has not said over and over again that the great crime against these animals is pelagic sealing. Stop pelagic sealing and the herd will take care of itself and increase rapidly. That is the object of this bill.

Why is pelagic sealing the scourge of the seal herd? I will tell you. When a seal is killed on the high seas the pelagic sealer does not stop to find out whether it is a male or a female, whether it is a bull seal or a cow seal; he pursues and kills the seals regardless of sex; he simply wants to get the skin for the value of the skin. He kills the seal on the high seas, strips off the hide, throws the carcass away, and salts down in the hold of his ship the hide of the seal regardless of sex, and every time the pelagic sealer kills a female seal he really kills three seals—the mother, the embryo seal, and the seal pup on shore, which will starve to death. Herein lies the great and cruel crime of the pelagic sealer. The enforcement of this treaty will stop that, and the quicker we pass this bill the sooner pelagic sealing will cease. As a friend of the seal herd that is what I want to do—stop pelagic sealing.

Upon the cession of Alaska to the United States, the Congress in 1869 declared the Pribilof Islands to be a special Government reservation. In 1870 an act was passed declaring that no unauthorized person should kill seals on these islands, but that the privilege of killing such animals be leased in 20-year periods to the highest bidder. Under this act, in 1870, a 20-year lease was granted to the Alaska Commercial Co. In 1890, upon the expiration of the first, another lease was granted to the North American Commercial Co. At the expiration of the lease of the latter company, in 1910, Congress passed a further act abolishing the leasing system and authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in his discretion, to kill seals of certain classes and to market the skins of such seals. Under this act, in 1910 and 1911, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, through his agents and officers, took such skins on the Pribilof Islands as the herd would afford and sold the same in London at auction.

During the period of American occupation the taking of seals progressed under careful Government supervision, and not more than 100,000 skins were allowed by law to be taken in any one year. Furthermore, females were exempted from slaughter at all times; neither could any seal be killed for its skin that was less than 1 year of age. These provisions were enforced by agents of the Government, under whose supervision the skins were taken.

From 1870 to 1889, both inclusive, the affinual take of skins on these islands was 100,000, except that for two years of this period the catch was arbitrarily restricted by the lessee to a smaller number because of an oversupply of these skins on the market. Notwithstanding this careful regulation of killing, however, the annual catch declined, from 1890, when 20,995 skins were taken, until 1911, when the catch comprised only 12,006 skins, due very largely to pelagic sealing.

During the American occupation this pernicious practice of pelagic sealing grew up, which previously had been unknown. This practice was called pelagic sealing, or the killing of seals in the water, as opposed to the land killing on the islands. This began as a business in 1881 or 1882, with an annual catch of about 10,000 skins, and reached its apex in 1894, when over 61,000 skins were taken from the Alaskan herd. Thereafter the annual pelagic catch declined because of scarcity of seals. In 1911 it was about 12,700.

The seals killed by the pelagic sealers are taken by means of spears or shotguns. In the water no differentiation can be made with respect to age or sex, whereas the land killing, which can be carefully controlled, is composed only of surplus males, which, owing to the polygamous habits of the seal, at least twenty-nine thirtieths are not required as breeders. The skins taken in the sea have been demonstrated to be composed of from 50 to 85 per cent of females. The death of the female entails the loss not only of herself but of her unborn fetus and of her nursing pup on the rookeries, which dies of starvation. The death of every pregnant female, therefore, entails the loss of three seal lives.

The early pelagic sealers were exclusively Americans and Canadians. Soon becoming aware of the destructiveness of the practice to seal life, this Government took active measures to protect that seal life, which, breeding on American territory, was asserted to be the property of this Government wherever found. Assuming that Russia had a right of property by discovery in all the eastern portion of Bering Sea and that those rights were transferred to this Government by the treaty of cession, the war vessels of the United States seized all schooners in Bering Sea engaged in pelagic sealing they could apprehend, whether American or Canadian, and confiscated them with their cargo, apparel, and furniture. This seizing of Canadian schooners led to the convention of the tribunal of arbitration in Paris, in 1891.

The award of this tribunal, rendered in 1893, disallowed all claim of this Government to exclusive jurisdiction in Bering Sea, and held that the seizure of vessels under this claim of jurisdiction was unwarranted. The tribunal, however, promulgated regulations, which, without forbidding the practice of pelagic sealing, were designed to afford protection to the fur seals during the breeding season. They required that all sealing in Pacific waters north of 35° of north latitude and east of the one hundred and eightieth meridian of east longitude should cease on April 30 of each year; that when it was again resumed on August 1 it should be carried on in Bering Sea only with spears and outside of a zone of 60 miles radius about the Pribilof Islands.

After the promulgation of this award pelagic sealing was begun again by both Americans and Canadians. It required but a few months to demonstrate that the Paris award regulations were ineffective in providing that protection to the seal herd necessary to preserve it from gradual extinction. The employment of expert spearsmen in the Bering Sea made the spear even a more deadly weapon than the shotgun, while the 60-mile zone about the islands afforded little or no protection, as the seals while feeding traveled usually three times that distance from the islands.

This Government at once strove to reopen the question with Great Britain with a view to obtaining greater protection for the seals, and as an earnest of her good faith, in 1897, passed an act forbidding pelagic sealing on the part of her own citizens. These efforts, however, were without results until the ratification of the present treaty.

Strangely enough, while the pelagic fleet of Canada became smaller that of Japan increased. These latter vessels, not being bound by the Paris award, could take seals whenever and wherever they pleased outside of territorial waters. In 1911 no Canadian schooners were known to have operated, while the Japanese fleet numbered at least 30, and took approximately 12,700 skins, as opposed to a land catch on the Pribilof Islands of 12,006.

A comparative statement of the land and pelagic catches from the Pribilof herd from 1870 to the present year follows:

It will be noted that a decrease in seal life occurred during the Russian as well as the American occupation. It will be instructive to examine briefly the causes which led thereto.

It has already been mentioned that the Russians, in their land killing from 1786 to 1835, killed both sexes indiscriminately, male and female, young and old alike. During these years it is not possible to ascertain the whole number of seals killed, but it is stated that between the years 1801-1805 over a million were taken. The killing previous to that probably was as rigorous. The meager Russian records show that several millions of sealskins were taken on these islands prior to 1805, and that they were taken from males and females indis-The practice of killing females for skins on land without restriction obtained until 1835, and was never completely abolished, it is believed, until 1847.

During the American occupation it also is proven that while the land killing carefully exempts females from slaughter, the sea or pelagic killing was and is composed in great part of the skins of females, all of which were pregnant and many of which had a nursing pup on shore that died of starvation upon its mother's death.

Furthermore, not by any means all the seals killed at sea are recovered, as many upon being shot sink and are lost before the hunters can reach them. The statistics obtained by this Government from an expert examination of thousands of skins taken in the sea demonstrate that of those taken in the North Pacific. Ocean from 50 to 60 per cent are pregnant females, while of those killed in Bering Sea from 75 to 85 per cent are pregnant females, each of which also was nursing a pup.

It is a recognized fact that any given class of polygamous animals will decrease rapidly if a system of slaughter is recognized to the formulation of t maintained which operates directly upon the females of the species. Such killing tends at once to decrease the birth of new animals, from which the numbers of the herd must be maintained. Whenever the number of animals killed becomes greater than the natural increment through births, the species must decrease. The fact that large numbers of female seals were killed annually by the Russians through a series of many years points inevitably to the cause of the seal herd's decrease during that period. The killing of large numbers of female seals annually through pelagic sealing during the American occupation indicates the same cause of the decline in numbers of seal life in recent years.

It is reasonable to conclude, therefore, that the decrease in both the Russian and American occupations was due to a like cause, namely, the excessive killing of female seals.

It is now confidently asserted that, with a complete cessation of seal killing in the open ocean, and the consequent immunizing of the breeding females from slaughter, the Pribilof seal herd will rapidly increase in numbers. It can be cited in confirmation of this belief that following the year 1835, when the Russians first recognized the principle of noninterference with the females, the Pribilof herd gradually increased during a period of 35 years to several millions in 1867. It is significant to note that this increase occurred contemporaneously with an annual land killing of surplus males of from 6,580 in 1835 to 75,000 in 1867. Also the fur seals on Robben Island, in the Okhotsk Sea, after having been virtually wiped out by raiders in 1855, had by 1869 reestablished themselves in their original

This bill appropriates the money to Japan and Great Britain stipulated in the treaty. Until this money is paid, this treaty can not be carried out. This money is appropriated in accordance with the provisions of the treaty. The scourge of pelagic sealing is going on, and will continue until this bill becomes a law. Pelagic sealing is going on to-day just the same as it has been going on for the last 40 years, and it will go on until the money is paid to those two Governments-until this treaty, on our part, is carried out to the letter. So it seems to me that we should legislate immediately to carry the treaty into effect, so that the Governments bordering on the Pacific Ocean which are parties to the treaty will stop pelagic sealing, and just as soon as Japan gets the money agreed to be paid by the treaty and Great Britain gets the money agreed to be paid by the treaty they will pass laws or promulgate decrees to stop pelagic sealing on the North Pacific Ocean; and as soon as pelagic sealing is effectually stopped the seal herd will increase rapidly and will become again as populous, no doubt, as it was 50 or 100 years ago. This treaty is for a period of 15 years. At the expiration of that period it is very important that the treaty be renewed-

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SULZER. In a moment. I call the attention of the House to the importance of this Government living up to the letter as well as the spirit of this treaty, so that at the expiration of the treaty in 15 years we will be able to renew it.

Mr. KENDALL. Does the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to ask the gentleman if these ratifications have not been long since exchanged between the various Governments that are parties to it, and if the treaty is not now in effect so far as our country is concerned?

Mr. SULZER. The President proclaimed the ratification of the treaty on December 14, 1911.

Mr. KENDALL. And it became effective on the 15th and is now effective.

Mr. SULZER. No; it will not be effective until this bill becomes a law and we pay Japan $200,000 and Great Britain $200,000. No action to stop pelagic sealing on the North Pacific will be taken until we carry out in good faith the obligations which we are under by virtue of this treaty.

Mr. KENDALL. The signatures appeared with the treaty and ratifications have been exchanged between these Governments.

Mr. SULZER. That is quite true; but it is conditioned upon the doing by us of certain things, and this bill is for the purpose of doing those things. This is a national obligation. We can not ignore it. If we did, it would give Japan and Great Britain an opportunity to recede from the treaty, and they would have the right to do it, and that would end the treaty. The killing of some of the surplus seals on the Pribilof Islands, which belong to the United States, is purely a domestic question; in other words, that is a national matter. That has nothing whatever to do with this bill. We will determine this domestic question in another bill soon to come before this House.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest a question?
Mr. SULZER. Yes.
Mr. SHARP. It seems to me that inasmuch as section 10 of this treaty contemplates and expressly provides, as far as that goes, that this Government may exercise whatever policy it may wish in its own domestic manner of killing these seals, it ought to be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. SULZER. No; I think not. However, the gentleman and I differ about that. I want to stop pelagic sealing now. This bill does that. One step at a time. We will attend to the other phase of the question later on.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question along the line suggested by our colleague from Ohio?

Mr. SULZER. I am trying to answer the gentleman from

Mr. KENDALL. It will only make one question.
Mr. SULZER. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sharp] first, and possibly the gentleman from Iowa will not then want to ask his question. killing of the surplus male seals on these islands is concerned, that is a matter for us to determine for ourselves. That is a domestic problem and has nothing whatever, and ought to have nothing whatever, to do with the international aspect of the

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. SULZER. One moment. In this bill we are dealing with foreign nations; we are dealing with Russia, we are dealing with Japan, we are dealing with Great Britain. When this bill becomes a law it will carry into effect the terms of this treaty, and we should never amend this law while this treaty lives. This treaty is for 15 years. This law should remain on the statute books for that period of time without any change. Those who have the best interests of the seal herd at heart, those who have worked long and faithfully to conclude this treaty, those who want to see this treaty carried out in good faith and pelagic sealing stopped, are very anxious not to complicate the international question with the purely national question-

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SULZER. So far as I am concerned, I have very positive views regarding rules and regulations for the herd in our own country on our own land. There is a difference, and an honest difference, I believe, of opinion regarding just what we should do with our own surplus male seals, but there can be no difference of opinion as to our duty now to stop pelagic sealing on the high seas, especially when the representatives of these high contracting parties have said in a solemn convention that pelagic sealing shall stop for 15 years. Let us do our duty to our neighbors. Let us first stop pelagic sealing.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

I am answering your question, I think, very Mr. SULZER.

effectively. Mr. SHARP. There is another question.

Mr. SULZER. Never mind the other question now. Let me answer one question at a time. I want to make it clear that the question before the House in this bill is an international question. The other question which will come before this House in a very short time in another bill is a national one, affecting the policy we shall pursue regarding the fur seals on our own

Mr. SHARP. May I ask a question—
Mr. SULZER. One moment. There are those who believe that to complicate this bill by amending it along the lines of some of the amendments suggested will defeat the very object the friends of the seal herd are most anxious to accomplish, and that is to put a stop to pelagic sealing. That is my purpose now, and I am moving speedily to do it.

There are people who want pelagic sealing to continue. It is a very profitable industry. The men engaged in pelagic sealing make hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, and the longer the matter can be put off the better for the pelagic sealers. But I say to you—and I know whereof I speak—that the duty of Congress now is to stop pelagic sealing; and the way to stop pelagic sealing, which is the great scourge of the fur-seal herd, is to carry out in good faith this splendid treaty which reflects so much credit on the representatives of America; and when we do that, we will do more to protect and preserve the fur-seal herd than anything else that can be devised by the ingenuity of man.
Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; in a moment. We will, ere long, have before us a bill that will deal with the domestic question. When that bill comes before the House it will be a good time, it seems to me, to discuss the question whether we should kill some of the surplus male seals or none. But remember that the treaty also provides that if we do not kill any of the surplus male seals on the islands and give to Japan and Great Britain their percentage of the skins, we must pay every year $10,000 each to Japan and Great Britain.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question-

Mr. SULZER. I am appealing to the House to-day to do one thing at a time; to pass this bill to carry this treaty into effect. Stop pelagic sealing. Then our international obligations are fulfilled, and when the national question comes up we can legislate on that as we may desire. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KENDALL. I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who desires to ask his colleague

Mr. PAYNE. I see a clause in the bill on page 8, beginning on line 14, by which it seems the committee has recommended to strike out all the provisions allowing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to regulate the killing of seals at his discretion. That is the law now, is it not?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Striking this out allows it to stand as it is

Mr. SULZER. It does. Mr. PAYNE. That is good law, and I do not see why you should repeal it.

Mr. SULZER. That law seems to be causing all the trouble with some of the Members. However, the bill now before the House deals with international obligations contracted by the United States Government. The other law will stand or fall, as it should, on its own merits-but that is another story, as Kipling would say.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to inquire of the gentleman if, when the State Department sent the bill here, it did not have a clause regulating the land killing of seals?

Mr. SULZER. No changes have been made in the bill since I introduced it except the changes made by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which the gentleman is a member. The committee amended the bill in certain particulars. Several of the amendments adopted protect sea otter. That should be done. Under the treaty sea otter as well as fur seals are protected from pelagic sealers. I offered these amendments in the committee and they were adopted. So much for that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a few words in conclusion. The Committee on Foreign Affairs submits this legislation to carry into effect the convention, especially so far as pelagic sealing is concerned, between the high contracting parties. The real object of the convention is to stop pelagic sealing. That is an inter-national question, and the bill proposed legislates on the subject matter without regard to the question of the killing of the surplus male seals on the Pribilof Islands, which is purely a na-tional or a domestic question, and about which there is much honest difference of opinion.

In so far as the matter of the Government killing annually some of the surplus male seals on the Pribilof Islands is con-cerned, the committee deemed it advisable to legislate in that regard in a separate bill, so as not to complicate the international aspect of the case regarding pelagic sealing with the national aspect of the case regarding land killing on the islands of the surplus male seals

If Congress shall determine to legislate for a closed season, or to place restrictions and regulations on the number of surplus male seals to be killed each season, or any season, on our own islands while this treaty is in force, it is exceedingly desirable for many reasons, which must be apparent, that such restric-tions and regulations should not be made in the act adopted for the sole purpose of giving effect to the treaty regarding pelagic sealing and to carry out in good faith our international obligations thereunder.

We must recognize the fact that this country can not deal with the herd at sea as its own property, and that the coopera-tion of Great Britain, Russia, and Japan in the manner provided for in the fur-seal treaty is essential for the protection of the herd against pelagic sealing.

These countries have been induced, after difficult and protracted negotiations, to agree to abandon pelagic sealing on condition that they shall receive a compensating interest in the skins taken by us on land. If, however, the interest which they derive in this way does not prove to be of more value to them than the profits to be gained by pelagic sealing, it is not likely that they will be willing to continue the treaty beyond the 15year period. It is certainly true that if during the 15-year period they receive less than they regard as their fair share of the increase of the herd, they will be inclined to make up the difference by resuming pelagic sealing, which, presumably, at the end of 15 years will be immensely profitable on account of the increase in the size of our herd.

One of the chief arguments which this Government relied upon throughout the past 25 years covered by the fur-seal controversy to induce Great Britain, and more recently Japan, to abandon pelagic sealing has been that pelagic sealing was chiefly responsible for the destruction of the fur-seal herd. It will be particularly unfortunate if we lose the opportunity, which is now presented for the first time by virtue of this treaty, to demonstrate by actual experience the soundness of this argument. It is a serious question, however, if this can fairly be tested, if land killing and pelagic sealing are both prohibited at the same time. The overwhelming testimony of the Government officials and many eminent scientists is to the contrary.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to find myself, as a Member from New York, and as a former member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in opposition to my friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. Sulzer] on this question. My objection to the bill presented by him is not because it carries into effect the treaty providing for the stopping of pelagic sealing, but because it does not go further and provide for the stopping of all killing of the fur seals.

In my judgment, if foreigners agree to stop killing the fur seals, Americans should stop killing them. If this is what it purports to be, a measure for the conservation of one of our great natural resources, why does it not go far enough really to conserve them? Why does it stop with prohibiting pelagic to conserve them? Why does it stop with promitting penagic sealing? Why does it not also include a measure to stop the butchering of these seals by Americans on the Pribilof Islands?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the gentleman think any law or treaty will do any good unless it stops pelagic sealing entirely?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I said in the beginning that that was not my reason for opposing this bill, but because it does not go far enough and stop Americans as well as foreigners from killing the seal.

Mr. KAHN. The only Americans who kill seals at the present time are those sent there by the Government of the United States, are they not?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is true; and has been true for the last two years.

So I understand it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. But prior to that time the right to kill the seals on the Pribilof Islands was leased to a company which butchered the seals to such an extent that it reduced the seal herd from about 4,700,000, when we took over the Pribilof Islands in 1867, to a number now considered at less than 50,000. I object to this bill because it does not provide for a closed season in the seal killing on the Pribilof Islands, so that the herd may have a chance to recuperate.

Mr. KAHN. No private individual would be allowed to kill under existing law, but the agents of the Government are alone allowed to kill them.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will say in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from California that the conduct of this matter by the Department of Commerce and Labor since we gave them the right to take over this killing two years ago has not been such as to inspire the confidence of those who wish to conserve the fur-seal herd. The whole story of the fur-seal herd is one of scandal and abuse from beginning to end; but my purpose on the floor this afternoon is not to make any charges about the administration of this law, because I think I can better serve the future of the fur-seal herd by advocating, if possible, an amendment to this bill which will include a closed season, prohibiting Americans as well as foreigners from killing these seals.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is it not a fact that the cause of the decrease in the seal herd is not the killing by Americans on land, where only males were killed, but the pelagic sealing upon the open sen?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman proceeds upon a very violent assumption. It was not males alone that they killed on land, but females and pups of both sexes, and the London market has been flooded for years, including the last two years, with thousands of clina which for the last two years. two years, with thousands of skins which, from their weight and dimensions, unquestionably are below the legal limit and show a violation of the existing law.

Mr. KENDALL. That applies to two-thirds of the skins marketed

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is because of a violation of the present law, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I should prefer to develop my argument a little further, if the gentleman will excuse me. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs says this is not a question of foreign affairs, but is a domestic question.

And then he goes on to say that the further regulation of the killing of the fur seals by Americans on the islands is to be handled by a bill by his committee. I would like to know from the chairman of the committee why, if this is not a ques-tion of foreign affairs, it should be considered by his committee at all? If it is purely a domestic question the Committee on Foreign Affairs has nothing whatever to do with it. If that is true, then his suggestion of conserving the seals by his com-mittee placing a closed season on the islands in a separate bill is apt to meet a lingering and unhonored death.

But, as a matter of fact, this is not a domestic question; it is a question of our good faith in entering into treaty relations with other nations. The best way for us to show our good faith in our treaty relations is to stop killing the fur seals by Americans, especially where it was done merely for the profit of private individuals and now is being done for profit for the revenues of the Government.

No plan could be more shortsighted than to attempt to obtain a few thousand dollars a year by killing seals now, if the immediate result of the killing will be to exterminate entirely the herd and to defeat all conservation of it in the future.

The only way to permit the herd to resume its former immense proportions is to stop for a time all killing of fur seals [applause] and allow the herds once more to assume the number of four or five million, as occurred during the years when Russia, for the protection of the herds, put an absolute closed season on the islands.

The gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee, has insinuated that those of us who are in favor of amending this bill by placing in it a provision for a closed season of the islands are really serving those who wish to continue pelagic sealing, and he says that there is a well-equipped lobby in Washington, which he would have the House infer is operating on our minds. This is the reductio ad absurdum of their whole position. As a matter of fact, the only way to conserve the furseal herd is to conserve it by stopping the killing of the fur seal; on the other hand, the way to put our treaties with foreign nations into the waste-paper basket is to continue the killing of them.

Those who are in favor of conserving the fur seal will vote for the amendment to be proposed to the bill, which will stop the Americans killing seals. Those who are in favor of the extermination of the fur-seal herds will vote against that amendment.

The butchery of the fur seals on the islands during the past 20 years has been such as to suggest now that if any persons are interested in operating under cover in this matter they would be in favor of continuing the butchering of the seals by Americans rather than to adopt the amendment, which will put But I consider it ungenerous and unnecessary to dwell on that feature of the case.

Now, the report of this committee does not receive the unanimous support of the committee; in fact, I believe nearly half of the committee is opposed to the bill in its present form, because it does not contain a provision against killing the seals on the islands. The minority had no time to file a report, and there is no information before the House which enables Members judicially to make up their minds on this question. I do not propose to state the grievances of the minority of the committee on this question, a minority comprising Members on both sides of the Chamber; they are able to do it, and no doubt will do it themselves. My complaint is that the House has before it a biased, partisan, and absolutely inaccurate statement of facts in the case, and the House with that statement is unable to make up its mind correctly. This report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs contains a number of letters from various gentlemen who are in various ways desirous of continuing the butchering of the fur seal, and also other letters from biologists and paleontologists here and there in the United States who have subscribed to a lot of ridiculous statements, in which they try to oppose the close of the fur-seal killing on the islands.

Chief among these is Mr. Henry Fairfield Osborn, the president of the American Museum of Natural History, which is an enormous building in the city of New York devoted to the preservation of the dead bodies and bones of animals whose species have passed away. Mr. Osborn is the president of that mausoleum of the dead, and, if he has his way, soon the carcasses of the last fur seals will be added to his interesting collection of extinct animals. Mr. Osborn has spent most of his time of recent years in digging for fossils in the Fayoum Desert in Egypt, and from time to time he emerges from the dust storms of the desert to electrify the world with the discovery of a piece of the thigh bone of an animal that perished there 10,000 years ago. If he has his way, if he is able to continue the killing of seals on the islands by Americans in the utterly unrestrained, reckless, and defiant manner in which it has been conducted recently, he will probably soon be able to add the preserved flipper of the last fur seal of the Pacific Ocean to his interesting collection in the Museum of Natural History.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that his reason for opposing this bill is that it does not regulate or prohibit the killing of seals?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Not entirely.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. . That is one of the reasons, I understand.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I am prepared to support the bill when it is amended to prohibit all killing of seals for some time.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The gentleman's opposition so far seems to have developed that position. I want to ask further if it is not true that we now have a law which empowers the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor to regulate the killing, even to absolutely prohibiting it, if he sees fit?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will say in answer to the gentleman that the present law does give that permission; but if the gentleman will examine the history of this matter he will discover that the conduct of affairs, even under that regulation, is thoroughly unsatisfactory to all persons who truly,

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will.
Mr. TOWNER. As I understand it, the terms of this treaty refer only to pelagic sealing and to its prevention. Am I correct about that?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNER. It is the statement of the chairman of the committee that it is the intention of the committee, in the bill as presented, to refer only to that phase of the custom. Is that also correct?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, is there any inconsistency in the keeping out of such a bill as that—provisions that shall be entirely other than those relating to this convention?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman did not do me the honor of listening to my remarks, or he would have received the answer to that question before he asked it. The inclusion of a period of close season on the islands, as well as out to sea, is absolutely essential to the conservation and preservation of the fur seal.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the chairman of the committee say that it is the intention of the committee to immediately report a bill upon that question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. I had intended to discuss it a few moments hence, when I close my remarks, but I shall answer that now. In my judgment the most adroit and harmless method of conducting an offensive measure to the gas chamber is to lead it into the presence of a subcommittee. That is a practice so familiar in the conduct of affairs in this House that we might be pardoned for fearing these Greeks, even when bearing gifts; but in this case it is not absolutely essential to believe that the subcommittee will turn on the gas and abandon this reform to its fate. It is fair to believe that they will report a close season of killing seals on the islands, because I understand that a large majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is in favor of a close season; but my judgment-and perhaps it of no more value than that of any other Member of the House—is that this pelagic measure will become a law, that another measure treading on the heels of this and relating solely to the killing on the islands will not become a law, and is not, by all those who advocate it, designed to become a law. This measure carries into effect the terms of a treaty.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would like to interrupt the gentle-

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Now, with regard to the subcommittee doing what the gentleman seems to think it will do, I desire to say that the subcommittee has made its report to the full committee and the full committee has adopted that report and directed a bill to be reported in this House.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Then it is a violent assumption that it will have first to go to the gas chamber, but if it is coming right into the House-

Mr. KENDALL. I want to say—
Mr. HARRISON of New York (continuing). My judgment is if it does that it will perish of inanition and lack of air in the House

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman from Virginia state if the subcommittee reported a bill for a closed season?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. KENDALL. That is what the gentleman from New York is talking about, a closed season, not for a limitation.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from New York was referring to a general regulation of the killing

Mr. KENDALL. Closed season; not killing. Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; he had reference to the remarks of the other gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, and was referring to a bill regulating the kill-That bill has been adopted by the full Committee ing of seals. on Foreign Affairs and will come into this House.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I am in favor of a bill absolutely suspending all killing by foreigners and Americans for a certain term of years, until the herd can naturally increase

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Committee on Foreign Affairs considered it well and did not agree with the views of the gentleman in that respect

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I understand that a majority of them did not agree, but a very substantial minority holds out for this amendment. I am in favor of absolutely suspending all killing of fur seals for a considerable number of years, and, in my judgment, that ought to have been included in this bill, and I hope that an amendment to effect that purpose will be offered and adopted by the committee. Now, to resume for a few moments the discussion of the letters in this biased, partisan, and one-sided report of the committee. I will return for a moment to the statement of Mr. Henry Fairchild Osborne, the celebrated conservator of bones. He says in his letter that the reason why he is opposed to a closed season on the islandsand that, I may add, is the tenor of several other letters on the same subject—is that if we do not kill off a certain number of the gentleman seals on the island, their attentions to the lady seals will become so dangerous as to entirely destroy the life of the fur-seal herd, males and females alike, and he says in the letter that pelagic sealing has destroyed 85 per cent of the females in the herd and that the balance of nature has thus been destroyed.

Why, he has been entirely misinformed as to the state of fairs up there. Instead of 85 per cent of the females having been killed, there is at present a great surplus of females among the 40,000 or 50,000 seals now surviving the seal butchers. The whole argument made by Mr. Osborne and these other paleontologists is to the absurd and ridiculous effect that mankind can better direct the operations of nature than nature can itself; that nature, if left to itself, would accomplish the entire destruction of the fur-seal herd, but that man, acting with the wisdom accumulated behind the domelike forehead of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, could direct the operations of nature to such beneficent effect that the seal herd would soon resume its balance and soon thereafter its mighty proportions of the past

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is, the more you kill the more you have?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. And that means the more seals you kill the more you have. It means you can both eat your cake and have it, too. I understand that there are other scientists in other fields of zoology who have tried to apply similar arguments to other forms of animal or fish life, and that is the only serious argument which I think is worth while to direct to this feature of the case. I am somewhat familiar with the salmon rivers of Canada. In the most of these rivers they have established at the mouths a fish hatchery, in which they divert the eggs of the spawning fish and with the hand of man attempt to supplant the natural operations of nature. Now, in every one of those rivers where this has taken place the universal testimony of all persons concerned, from the Indians who act as guides up to those who act as guardians and conservators of the water, is that the immediate result of this has been enormously to diminish the stock of fish.

And so far as that furnishes any parallel to the case under consideration, it shows what folly it is for mankind to attempt to interfere with the course of nature. I believe, and I think any reasonable Member of this House believes, that the fur seals, if left to themselves, are better able to take care of themselves than the Hon. Charles Nagle is able to take care of them. I believe that the members of the herd are better able to arrange for their future than any Secretary of Commerce and Labor is able to arrange; but I believe still further, Mr. Chairman, that to continue at the present time in the hands of persons who have certainly not mitigated the scandalous conduct of these matters in the past, a further license to butcher the seals on these islands will, in the space of a few years, insure the total destruction of the herd. Now, Mr. Chairman, believ-ing that, as I do, I shall vote for an amendment which is to be offered when we reach the right place in the bill, providing for a closed season on the islands as well as at sea. And I believe if we adopt this amendment it will not only find its proper place in a bill designed to carry the treaty provisions into effect, but it will show our good faith in the matter by evidencing the fact that we are willing ourselves to stop the killing of seals as well as to prohibit foreigners from doing so. And I believe that the immediate result of it will be that the herd will multiply by leaps and bounds and will at the end of the 15-year period attain the same magnificent proportions that it did in the past. Now, if that comes about, the result of denying ourselves a few thousand dollars of revenue to-day will be that we may get many hundreds of thousands of dollars in revenue in the near future; and that the fur-seal herd, one of the most valuable and magnificent acquisitions which came to us with the cession to the United States of the great Territory of Alaska, will be projected into the future as an enduring monument to the wisdom of Congress.

[Mr. FOSTER of Vermont addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Kendall) there were—ayes 58, noes 34.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require a quorum of the committee to rise. The point of order is not well taken.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Davis of West Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan. and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill 16571; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate on the bill be closed at 5 o'clock, one half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kendall] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 16571, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill close at 5 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. KENDALL. I object.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move that general debate on the pending bill be closed at 5 o'clock, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL] and the other half by myself.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-nine gentleman present-not a quorum.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves a call of the House.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KENDALL. Division!

The House divided.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 91 and the noes are 47.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. HARRISON of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KENDALL. Division!

The House divided; and the affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn is not in order pending the announcement of Mr. KENDALL. That point of order comes too late.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, no.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken as to what the situation was. The Chair had announced the vote, and the gentleman from Iowa demanded the yeas and nays. Pending that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Har-RISON] moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, certainly the demand for the yeas and nays would have to be disposed of before the motion to adjourn.

Cline

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is the supreme motion in the House.

The negative vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. On the motion that the House do now adjourn the ayes are 32 and the noes are 81.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. SIMMONS.
Mr. WHITACRE with Mr. SELLS.
From February 3 until February 10, inclusive:

Mr. McDermott with Mr. Draper. From February 2 ending February 12: Mr. REILLY with Mr. DE FOREST. From 3 p. m. to-day ending Monday: Mr. Padgett with Mr. Loud.

For this day:

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr, Kopp, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I voted "no." I would like to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. Foster of Illinois, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then appeared as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion for a call of the House

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdraws his motion for a call of the House. The vote recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York to close general debate at 5 o'clock.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. Kendall)—ayes 121, noes 61.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-four Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the motion to close debate at 5 o'clock was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16571.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman from New York did make the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I take it that the Speaker considered he simply called up the bill, and pending the calling of it up, moved to close debate. Under those circumstances, the motion having been agreed to, does not the House automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The House will therefore resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

* Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further con-sideration of the bill H. R. 16571, affecting the fur-seals con-vention, with Mr. Davis of West Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate on the pending bill will close at 5 o'clock.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the gentleman from Iowa controls one-half of the time and I control one-

Mr. KENDALL. Considering that there is only one hour left that is not a very heavy undertaking.

Mr. MANN. There was no agreement about time.

Mr. SULZER. I agreed to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that the motion as put by the Speaker of the House did not incorporate any arrangement for the division of time. If that is desired, the Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I think I have been recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio, but understood he had yielded to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHARP. Not at all. Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided equally between the gentleman from Iowa and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York for the purpose of making that request?

Mr. SHARP. Yes; I yield. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield any of his time to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, out of our abundance I yield the gentleman 20 minutes.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, having had before us hearings which have lasted much of the time during the past three weeks, I regret very much that the time for debate on such a very important question as this will be so exceedingly limited. It is also an additional matter of regret on my part that it comes as the result of a very serious misunderstanding on the part of a considerable number of that committee. I do not know that I betray any secrets of the committee-and I certainly do not wish tobut it is only fair to say that at least a respectable minority of the committee did not know that this report was to be made until an opportunity was given for a minority report, and they did not know that it would be considered at so early a date.

I agree very heartily with what the distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. Sulzer] said in reference to the desirability and importance of giving this treaty, after so many years of delay, full effect. Our Government is entitled to much credit in bringing it about. I know how necessarily limited must be the means of many of the Members, who have not lad the opportunity to read the hearings, so interesting and so in-structive, to intelligently pass judgment upon this question. We can not, unfortunately, well resolve ourselves into a sort of Committee of the Whole House in hearing all of this testimony, so it is of necessity given to only a very limited number of Members to hear the evidence on both sides. Briefly stated, I will say that the bill, as it provides for giving effect to the treaty, is, with the exception of one phase of the subject, entirely satisfactory to all members of the committee.

To the extent this bill intends and proposes to give effect to the treaty to prevent pelagic sealing as between the countries interested it is entirely agreeable to all the members, and I do not believe it will receive one dissenting vote of the entire member-ship of the House; but the question at issue is, How far shall we go in making provision in this specific bill in governing and determining what has been termed our domestic policy of slaughtering seals? That is the question, and the only question, upon which we differ as members of this committee. I wish to take issue with the chairman of the committee [Mr. Sulzer] upon that one particular point; and, while it is in a certain sense a domestic question referring purely to the killing of the seals upon our own shores and may have nothing whatever to do with pelagic sealing, yet inasmuch as that phase of the subject is considered in the provisions of the treaty itself, I think that it is removed from the category of purely a domestic question and becomes international in a way. No reference has been made by any of the speakers who have preceded me to the fact that the treaty in expressed terms contemplates a provision governing our domestic policy for the killing of seals off our own coast. It provides in section 10, briefly stated, as follows-this is the treaty, not the bill:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall restrict the right of the United States at any time and from time to time suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on such islands or shores subject to its jurisdiction, and to impose such restrictions and regulations upon the total number of skins to be taken in any season and the manner and times and places of taking them as may seem necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number.

Mr. WILLIS. Where is the gentleman reading from? Mr. SHARP. From page 25 of the report containing the treaty. Turning over to the next page, page 26, there is even a more definite and specific reference to the policy which this country may assume in affairs domestic purely to itself. It reads as follows, and I will only quote that part which is applicable to this:

Unless the killing of seals in such year or years shall have been absolutely prohibited by the United States for all purposes except to supply food, clothing, and boat skins for the natives on the islands, in which case the United States agrees to pay to Great Britain and to Japan each the sum of $10.000 annually in lieu of any share of skins during the years when no killing is allowed.

Although this is a domestic question, as it concerns the killing of seals on our shores, yet possible limitations thereto have been specifically incorporated in the treaty itself, so that I believe it is entirely fair for this committee to not only assume jurisdiction over that question, but to express such limitations in the very treaty itself, so that the contracting powers interested may know what hereafter will be our future domestic policy in reference to the killing of these seals.

Mr. Chairman, I think I do not go beyond the truth when I say that not one Member on this floor out of fifty has any conception of the tremendous slaughter of the seal herd that all the world is calling upon the countries interested to protect. They have no knowledge of the large number of seals that have been slaughtered upon our shores by direction of the United States Government itself. We raise our voices in protest against pelagic sealing. We point to the fact, and the hearings establish its truth, that whereas 60 years ago there were upon those islands approximately 4,700,000 seals, that great herd has been so decimated that to-day we have but about 120,000 upon our shores, and if I remember the testimony correctly less than an aggregate of 12,000 upon the shores off Japan and Russia, so that altogether there is only a total of about 132,000 seals-hardly 3 per cent of what it was 60 years ago. I know the answer to that question is made that it is because of the indiscriminate slaughter of seals out on the water, what we call pelagic sealing, that females have been killed and therefore the means of reproducing the herd has been destroyed.

This is largely true, but I believe that if the American people knew the truth-knew that in addition to the enormous loss from pelagic sealing our own Government had permitted the killing of many thousands of seals on our shores and was prosecuting such a policy as permitted the slaughter of nearly 25,000 male seals during the past two seasons for merely the revenue derived from their skins—they would raise their voices in a mighty protest. The testimony shows that the killing lasts about 60 days a year through the summer. This means the killing of 200 seals every day; and I suppose, as they have no labor laws up there providing for the 8-hour workday, we may assume a laboring day of 10 hours, which means the death of 20 seals every hour. It means that a male seal is slaughtered every three minutes during the season under the present system by the United States Government. The chairman of this committee, who has been off the shores of the Pribilof Island many times, he tells me, and has seen the slaughter of those seals, in the committee said, "I never saw the killing of those seals that it did not appeal to me as though the men who were slaughtering them were committing murder."

I think he quoted a biologist as saying that if you are to search anywhere on earth for the missing link you should go to the seal herd to find that link. It seems inhuman to allow the native islanders, to whom this killing is intrusted, to select out, drive, and impound 200 of those seals every day—nearly 13,000 in the short space of 60 days last summer—huddle them up into the shambles, and then club each seal on the head and shoot him afterwards in full sight of the herd.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman for information, whether we have a contract with any corporation or corporations permitting the slaughter of a certain number of seals.

Mr. SHARP. Not at all. And in reply to that question I want to say that that unjust and unwise arrangement was broken up and became unpopular a number of years ago, and we have no contracts involved whatever.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is there any restriction under the law, then, at all on the killing of seals, except as you make

Mr. SHARP. No.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman to advocate a policy of not at this time or any time in the future killing any of these seals?

Mr. SHARP. Not to consume too much time, because there are those on the committee who wish to follow me. I must answer very briefly questions that are asked of me. But I wish to say that the question before the House to-day is whether they will not undertake to arrest the arm of the butcher and stop him, for a time at least, from further decimating that valuable herd and see what the consequences will be. Some one has asked what the nature of the amendment would be that we propose to offer. I want to say that the minority of this committee will propose an amendment to the effect that during the first 5 years of the 15 years of the treaty there shall be absolutely no killing whatever of our own herd upon our shores by the United States Government or any lessee under it; that during the following 5 years there may be a certain limited number of seals killed, and then a greater number the remaining 5 years. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. Harrison] favors a similar restriction. Now, I submit to you, gentlemen of this House, if that is not a humane policy and one in consonance with sound reason?

Mr. CLINE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHARP. Certainly.
Mr. CLINE. Why is it, if you are in favor of an absolute closed season for the first five years on the ground of the humane policy, you are not in favor of the same policy for the next five years? Mr. SHARP.

Mr. SHARP. I am very glad the gentleman asked me that question lest I had forgotten to express my own personal opinion about this whole matter. We have sometimes to face questions calling for solutions that are purely of expediency, and the only reason I would put a limitation at all of five years upon the time for a closed season is that it might be more in accord with the conservative sentiment of the House and meeting the Department of Commerce and Labor half way. But let me say that if I had my way, and could write the law in the statute books, I would never kill any seals for the value of the pelts. Not 1 out of 1,000 people can afford to buy garments made from them. They are not a necessity, but an expensive luxury.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Has the gentleman estimated how long it will take to exterminate this seal herd at the present rate of killing?

Mr. SHARP. I can only answer the question by saying that it is a question purely of mathematics, it seems to me. If you admit that 60 years ago there were 4,700,000, and there are now 120,000 seals, you can fairly estimate when they will be practically wiped out, providing past practices are carried on.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is practically no other seal herd in the world?

Mr. SHARP. Except the small herd on the coast of Japan and one on the coast of Russia. My answer to your former question is not quite responsive, because the purpose of this treaty is to provide against pelagic sealing. I desire to be entirely fair in my statement. I wish to say that this treaty is humane; and it has my hearty commendation. I want to see the bill passed as much as any Member of this House. As I stated a moment ago, there is no opposition upon the part of any member of the committee to its passing, and I have no question but that the number of the seal herd will be greatly increased if the treaty is given full effect, and this even if we continue our present policy—a mistaken, mercenary, inhuman policy, as I have said—of slaughtering 12,000 or 15,000 male seals a year; but it will increase much more rapidly and result in a better and more sturdy stock if we cease all killing.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SHARP. Certainly.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is it not a fact that the rules and regulations as prescribed last year by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, restricting and regulating the killing of seals upon the Pribilof Islands, are to the effect that none under 2 years of age, and only male seals at that, could be killed, and that the report of Mr. Frazer, the American agent in London, the great fur-seal market of the world, addressed to the Department of Commerce and Labor, was to the effect that out of 12,920 seals killed last year over 8,000 were less than 2 years of age, and over 5,000 of them, in all probability, judging from their measurement and the prices obtained therefor, were less than 1 year old? Is not the report of the American agent in London, Mr. Frazer, to that effect?

Mr. SHARP. I think there has been testimony to that effect.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHARP. Just for one question.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in a report stated that there were less than 100 of these seals, according to measurement, under 2 years of age?

I can not say as to that. I have only one Mr. SHARP.

minute more, and I do not want to give that minute up.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one further minute to the gentleman to enable him to conclude his statement.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit one short question? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SHARP. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLINE. Is it not a fact that Mr. Bowers, in charge of the Bureau of Fisheries, who took the skins to London and sold them, made a report to Secretary Nagel to the effect that there were less than 100 skins of less than a year old?

I do not recall that testimony and therefore Mr. SHARP.

can not answer the question.

Now, one concluding thought: The whole contention—and in order to be fair I will state it as it is given by the Government officials—the chief reason for slaughtering these seals is revenue; and then they claim that by slaughtering a certain portion of the males the seals will be propagated just as fast as before and even improved in strength, and the killing of those males does not make any difference even to the extent of 12,000 each year. My answer to that argument is-and I think I voice the opinions of some of my colleagues on the committee—that the Creator's plan of propagation in animal life is at least as wise as that of man, and where originally we found a herd of millions of these seals, it is safe and well enough to leave it to the laws of nature to propagate that species instead of sending some of our own Government expert scientific officials up there to lay out the plan by which the herd may be increased by substituting artificial laws of selection for those designed by nature. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Lin-

THICUM] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I appreciated from the beginning that the seal question was one of great importance to our country; that the matter of killing seals by the Government, or of pelagic sealing, was of deep concern to this country, and I believe that the entire Committee on Foreign Affairs has taken the same view.

We have had gentlemen before the committee who have made this subject a thorough study, men who have gone into the wild and frozen North from year to year and have spent months upon the ground, both summer and winter, studying and examining this question. The result has been that this committee, from the evidence of these competent witnesses, has come to the conclusion that it is the duty of Congress to put into effect as speedily as possible the treaty which has been agreed upon between Japan, Russia, Great Britain, and the United States. We have decided-at least, a majority have decided—that the proper plan by which to carry into effect speedily the provisions of this treaty is to divorce the subject from all other questions and confine it alone to the carrying out of the treaty. [Applause.]

To that end we have not embodied in this bill legislation which we may enact to-day or to-morrow or next week. We have put into this bill only that legislation which is necessary to stop pelagic sealing at the earliest possible moment. The committee has, therefore, brought in this bill to carry out the treaty divorced from all other questions of what shall be done in the future or what regulations shall be made hereafter.

The committee has also passed upon another bill, to be pre-pared in accordance with the report from the subcommittee appointed from the full committee, regulating how many of these seals may be killed under legal provisions, and when, and providing also for a closed season for a certain time; and that bill will come before this House as an entirely separate and distinct proposition.

Now, I leave it to the judgment of this House whether that is not the better plan. Personally I believe it is better to have one bill presented to this House which, when passed, will need no change, no amendment, and no alteration whatever during the entire life of the treaty, and then to have another separate distinct bill which shall prescribe how many seals may be killed, when, and what closed season there shall be, which latter bill shall be subject to amendment at all times in the future without in any wise interfering with the bill carrying the treaty into effect.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Does the gentleman say that the placing in the bill of a provision for a closed season will violate the international agreement?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; I do not say that. I say that a bill which carries into effect the international agreement should be separate and distinct from the one which legislates as to how many seals shall be killed.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If that is the fact, why did the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of State, who drafted this bill, incorporate in section 11 a provision giving authority to Congress to limit and restrict the Secretary of Commerce and Labor as to the number of seals on the Pribilof Islands that shall be killed under his direction every year? If this was an international bill to prohibit pelagic sealing, why did those three Secretaries incorporate into this bill a provision restricting the killing on the Pribilof Islands?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It was embodied in the treaty so that Congress might legislate as to whether they wanted to kill any or not; and if they do not kill them, then our Government must pay a certain sum of money annually to Japan and Great Britain. But the principal point now is "to carry into effect the treaty" which these countries have ratified after negotiations extending over 25 years, whereby we are to pay the $200,000 we owe to each of these countries and to stop pelagic scaling at the earliest possible moment.

I would call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Goodwin] to the statement of the Secretary of State that his department and the Department of Commerce and Labor had differed as to whether this provision should be embodied in the bill, and that it was inserted at the request of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and did not coincide with his views then nor since.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say for the benefit of those who have not had the time nor, perhaps, the inclination to give this fur-seal question close study, that the subject is, perhaps, one of the most interesting of any presented by wild life which comes to our attention.

The fur seal was described by Mr. Lembkey as an animal totally devoid of intelligence and unlike the hair seal which we see so often exhibited in circuses.

In 1786 a Russian navigator, by the name of Gerassim Pribilof, discovered these five little desert islands, the largest of which is only about 13 miles long, in the North Pacific Ocean, 2,000 miles from Seattle and 214 miles from Unalaska, the nearest port. It is upon two of these little islands, the St. Paul and the St. George, that this once great American fur-seal herd breed during the summer, and then, in the fall, leave and proceed through Bering Sea and the passes between the Aleutian Islands into the Pacific Ocean, going at times as far south as Santa Barbara Channel, off the coast of southern California, returning about May to the islands for the summer.

When the United States purchased Alaska this herd was variously estimated at from two to seven million seals—the best estimate is probably about 4,000,000—and from then until now they have been so wantonly destroyed that they now number less than 140,000. They are the only species of their kind in the world and even now, in their depleted number, are the largest known herd.

During the first 20 years of American ownership about 100,000 were killed each year and the skins sold throughout the world; and not only did the very rich ladies wear sealskin coats, but ladies of moderate means as well. From 1899 down to the present time the number secured has rapidly diminished, until now the yearly killing on these islands does not exceed 12,000.

In years gone great herds of buffalo grazed upon and roamed through the western prairies of our land, and often trains were compelled to stop until a herd had crossed its tracks. Buffalo robes were to be seen on every hand, but, as the march of civilization proceeded toward the setting sun, the buffalo had to go. He was a menace to the new order of things, a destroyer of crops, and trampled down and devoured grain fields to the great loss and often ruin of their owners. He was useless in captivity, having little to recommend him save his thick and heavy-coated hide, useful only as a robe, for which substitutes appeared as fast as the price of buffalo robes increased. To-day the buffalo is but a curiosity in some zoological garden as the remnant of a once great herd; but not so with the seal. They have chosen as their abode these little desert islands of volcanic origin, far removed from all civilization, in a region cold and dreary and useless for all purposes other than the one for which nature, under a wise Providence, seems to have provided them. Their food consists principally of a small fish even now unclassified, and not used by us for food, so they are in the way of no one and deprive no one of food, and are certainly entitled to the protection of those into whose possession their home has come.

Since the purchase of Alaska, in 1867, the United States has received from leases, according to Mr. Lembkey, the agent in charge, about $11,000,000, and as Alaska cost but $7,200,000, they have much more than paid the purchase price. In addition to this, add the customs our Government has collected from the reimportation of the skins after being dressed in London. The trade in skins by the citizens of the United States since the purchase exceeds $50,000,000, and we are therefore charged with the care of this herd, not only from a humane standpoint, but from a commercial and financial standpoint as well.

The Governments of the United States and Great Britain have endeavored to protect the seal so far as they can, and the United States have placed them under the care and keeping of the Department of Commerce and Labor. This department has been careful to kill only a certain percentage of the male seals on land in a manner least likely to disturb or injure the females, and as the seal is a polygamous animal, having harems composed of as many as 30 or 40 females, this killing of the males is pretty generally conceded as doing no injury to the herd, and at the same time produced a total revenue of $436,155.19 for the year 1910; and after deducting the entire cost of the killing, sales, and the feeding and caring for the natives on the island (some 300 in number), netted Uncle Sam $303,043.37. Imagine, then, what a vast revenue can be obtained from this magnificent asset of the United States if we will but care for what we have and make provisions so that a great increase may be obtained.

and make provisions so that a great increase may be obtained.

You may naturally ask what has been the cause of this great decrease and why has it not been prevented long ago? First, raids were made upon the seal islands from time to time and many seals, both male and female, were killed, their skins taken and carried away. Besides the number thus killed many others were injured, and the seal herd disturbed and annoyed, doing great damage and injury. Then there came into vogue about 1880 what is known to-day as pelagic sealing, or, in other words, sea killing. This was the great agent which brought about the depletion, and if not soon discontinued will totally annihilate the seal, and they will become as the buffalo.

The seals, principally female, leave the island for several days and go for a distance of from 150 to 200 miles at sea in search of food, intending to return and nurse the pup, which is left on shore. The seal must come to the surface very often to breathe, and after eating will sleep upon the surface of water while digesting its food, just as a dog sleeps on land after eating a hearty meal. The pelagic sealers provide boats of from 25 to 125 tons burden and carry a crew of about 30 men with canoes to lower and pursue and kill seals. The sleeping seals are speared, and the swimming seals are shot, regardless of whether they are male or female, and usually about 60 per cent are females. By the killing of the female further increase from her is at an end, and the little pup on shore dies for want of nourishment, because a cow seal will not, as is often the case among other animals, nurse the pup of another seal.

In 1881 some 10,000 were killed in this way, and this number gradually increased until, in 1894, more than 61,000 were so taken, and from then until now this great herd has rapidly diminished.

Mr. Chairman, I am therefore, as I said in the beginning of this speech, when I yielded to answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Goodwin], desirous of stopping this pelagic sealing at the earliest possible moment. After 25 years of vain endeavor the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has at last obtained a treaty with Great Britain, Russia, and Japan, the latter of which is the principal nation engaged in this pelagic sealing, by which treaty the regulation of the killing is left to the United States, which country is to pay Great Britain and Japan each $200,000 as an advance, and each of these countries are to be entitled to 15 per cent of the sealskins taken by us; and in the event we decide not to kill during any certain year or years, they are to receive for each year no seals are taken further advances of $10,000, all of which money so advanced is to be repaid the United States out of the 15 per cent of skins to which they are entitled. These Governments will not pass laws to prohibit pelagic sealing by their citizens until we pass this law and are prepared to make these payments, so the sooner we do so the quicker will pelagic sealing cease. I am therefore in favor of passing at once the bill reported by the committee, which carries into effect the terms of the treaty; and I am then in favor of passing the other bill recommended by the subcommittee, instructing and restricting the Department of Commerce and Labor as to the land killing and providing for a certain closed season for whatever time the subcommittee may recommend.

But by all means let us make this bill a law and save the seal. Mr. SULZER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire].

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, some of you will no doubt remember that there were some charges preferred, one way and another, against the action of the Department of Commerce and Labor with respect to the methods of killing seals on the Pribilof Islands. As a result of those general charges the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor took about 350 pages of testimony with respect to the conditions in those islands, the number of seals killed annually by the Government of the United States and the number killed by pelagic sealers, who were in the main Japanese. It developed in the course of that investigation that the most critical supervision on the part of Mr. Nagel has been exercised for the last three years at least in regard to the killing of the seals.

Gentlemen, you are apt to be misled by one statement which has been repeated here about three times this afternoon. That is that 60 years ago there were more than 4,000,000 seals in and adjacent to the Pribilof Islands, but that there are now in the neighborhood of only 100,000. The testimony differs. Some put it as low as 50,000 seals, and some think there are as many as 125,000. There is that range, according to the testimony before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor. But according to the figures, undisputed by the gentlemen who want to discontinue the killing-Mr. Elliott -at no time during any one season has the Government of the United States killed one-half as many seals as were born and raised upon the islands. I want to call your attention to the figures. One gentleman stated that it was a mathematical problem to say how long it would be before there would be no seals there. According to the undisputed testimony the killing of seals on the islands under the supervision of the Government of the United States is less than one-half of the number born, and the number will increase from the very day you stop pelagic sealing.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; although I have only five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. My question will only take a moment. I want to know if it is the gentleman's contention that the killing does not help to decrease the number?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Killing, of course, helps to decrease the number; but in further answer to the gentleman's question I want to say that according to the figures of Mr. Elliott and the department there ought to have been 25,000 seal pups born in 1911; in 1912, 27,000; in 1913, 28,000, with a continuous increase until 1927, when, according to this computation, there would be 150,000 pups born on the islands annually. According to this computation there were last year 25,000 pups born. According to the figures of the Interior Department there were a few more than 12,000 seals killed, about one-half as many being killed as were born upon the islands. Consequently, your argument and statement, that it is a matter of mathematical computation as to how long before they will all be killed, will not hold good. I will tell you the reason. The seals live on the islands and they go to sea, for the purpose of feeding, after the pups are born. The Japanese pelagic fishermen come along and throw their harpoons into them. Then they skin the carcass and throw it into the sea, and that is the last of it. But in killing that seal they have killed the mother of two pups. That is the class of sealing that has been devastating these islands of the seals. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].
Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I will go as far as any Mem-

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I will go as far as any Member in this House in the protection of the seal herds, but that is not the question that this House has now before it for consideration. The question now is whether or not we shall at this time pass a law that will make effective this treaty that has been entered into between this country and other countries for the purpose of stamping out pelagic sealing.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I have only five minutes, but I will yield.
Mr. SHERLEY. Would the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio prevent any ratification of the treaty to stop pelagic sealing?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think it would, I am frank to say, but I do assert that it would be extremely foolish for us now in this legislation and at this time, to pass a law of that kind, because here now at this time we ought to legislate primarily for the purpose of making these treaties effective, and for the reasons that have been given by the chairman of the committee and by the gentleman from Vermont, that these treaties are only for a limited time-for a period of 15 years. reason the legislation ought to be contemporaneous with it and of a character that need not be changed during the life of these treaties.

But the question with regard to the protection of the seal herds on the Pribilof Islands is a question purely domestic in

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If that is the case, and this bill was drawn by three gentlemen eminent in international law, why did they incorporate domestic control in the original bill which was struck out by a majority of the committee against a respectable minority?

Mr. TOWNER. The truth is, as I suppose the gentleman knows, that law is already in existence, and that power already exists, and it was only for the purpose of seeing that it did not cease to exist if no other legislation was enacted, that it The committee say now that they have prewas put in. pared a bill that will be presented to this House which will go to the protection of the seal herd on the Pribilof Islands, and when that comes before the House for consideration, then it will be time for us to take up the discussion of these matters that are presented here.

I say again, as I said before, that I will go as far as any gentleman on the floor of this House in the protection of the seal herd, and I assert, Mr. Chairman, that it can certainly be done better by a comprehensive bill that will have that object alone in view than it can now be done by an amendment tacked onto this bill. I can not understand why gentlemen here are so seriously insistent upon it. Do gentlemen on the other side believe that the chairman who has this bill in charge is not telling the truth, that other Members are not sincere, when they assert that they will immediately report a bill of this character to the House?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If the gentleman is such a good friend to the seal herd, if he is as much of a friend as any man on this floor, will be vote for a closed season of 10 or 15 years to prevent all seal killing?

Mr. TOWNER. I can not say; I think I will go as far as any reasonable man ought to be asked to go. I have no other desire than to protect the seal herd; to maintain it as it ought to be maintained, under such rules and restrictions and regulations as can be made by this House when they deliberately consider that question, and that question alone. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa

if he will not consume some of his time.

Mr. KENDALL. How many speeches are there to be made on the other side?

Mr. SULZER. Not more than two, and I think only one. Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he will have one of his speeches made now.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I prefer that the gentleman from Iowa should proceed.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that a proposition of such magnitude and importance as this should be precipitated upon the House at this hour. The chairman of the committee has properly stated that this is an international question. It is one which has engaged the attention of the State Departments of this country, of Russia, of Japan, and of England now for more than a quarter of a century. Everybody in all the countries and in all the parliaments of all the countries recognizes that pelagic sealing ought to be terminated at once. The gentlemen who are here this afternoon urging amendments to this measure are not actuated by the corrupt purpose imputed to them by the chairman of this committee, but they are impelled by an earnest interest in the preservation of our seal herd in the Pribilof Islands. They are eager to unite with the chairman of the committee in any legitimate effort he may make for the protection of that wild life in the North Pacific Ocean.

My honored friend from New York says the history of the fur seals is a romance. I have great respect for his discriminating judgment, but if he had reflected upon that history as profoundly as others have done he would have concluded that it is not so much a romance as a tragedy. [Applause.] Let me make this suggestion: When that Russian navigator, Pribilof, discovered the islands which now bear his name, in 1786, there were upward of 5,000,000 seals in those northern waters. had increased to that number, not because some official in some department somewhere had had jurisdiction over them, but because of natural selection. There were more than 5,000,000 seals in those waters at the date I have mentioned. Russia entered upon the practice of indiscriminately killing the seals, largely on land, but partly on water, and in 1835 the herd numerically had diminished to 60,000. Then Russia ordered an almost complete embargo upon the slaughter of seals, either upon land or water, and from that time up to 1867, when we entered into the occupation of the islands, killing had been practically and substantially suspended. What was the result?

The herd increased from 60,000 in 1835, as it is estimated, to 4,700,000 in 1867. I challenge any man on this floor or from any of the bureaus or departments of the Government to dispute what I have just stated. Now, the novel proposition is advanced that the most effective way to restore the herd is to butcher it. Have we more judgment, more discretion, more discrimination than the Divine intelligence which controls the forces of nature operating upon this wild life in the Northern Pacific Ocean?

It is not intended here, and I am sorry that the suggestion has been introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGure], that any amendment of this bill shall be construed as a reflection upon the Department of Commerce and Labor or any other agency of this Government. That is not true.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon-

Mr. KENDALL. It is granted. I do not want the gentleman to consume my time, and I deny his right, or the right of the chairman of this committee, or the right of any number of gentlemen to railroad this proposition through this House this afternoon without the consideration to which it is entitled. [Applause.] I am going to state some facts here

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the statement attributed to me by the gentleman.

Mr. KENDALL. Then I withdraw it. Mr. SULZER, Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that there is no disposition to railroad or even bring this bill to a vote this afternoon. We will take it up next Wednesday under the five-minute rule. Then there will be ample time for amendments and discussion.

Mr. KENDALL. The chairman of this committee reported this bill to this House without allowing the minority on that committee an opportunity to present its views for the consideration of the House [applause], and he did that after an express understanding that such opportunity should be accorded. [Applause. 1

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. KENDALL. And now he comes on this floor this after-

Mr. SULZER. One moment. I know the gentleman from Iowa does not want to be unjust.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, that is one correct statement the gentleman from New York has made this afternoon.

Mr. SULZER. And the statement I am going to make now is just as correct. I want this House to understand that when this bill was ordered to be reported by the committee it was distinctly understood that it should be expedited in its passage. There was no request made to file a minority report. On the contrary, the only request that was made was that the bill should be subject to amendment, to be offered by any member of the committee.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York must not occupy more of my time. I decline to yield further.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman does not want to misstate what occurred in committee. That is the fact-

Mr. KENDALL. I decline to yield; and the chairman of this committee would not be safe to consult his own associates on that committee as to whether the opportunity to present minority views was promised.

Mr. SULZER. I stated the facts. The minutes of the committee will confirm the statement.

Mr. KENDALL. And now we come on the floor this after-noon directly from a meeting of this committee, which adjourned at 12 o'clock, with no premonition that this question should be discussed or disposed of, and find almost immediately. ately that it is called up by the chairman of the committee, with the demand that since he has been fully heard the time be restricted to one hour for other discussion of this great international question.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one short question?

Mr. KENDALL. I yield.

Mr. SHARP. Does the gentleman anticipate that there will be any delay or danger of defeating this treaty by incorporating in the bill the proposed amendment?

Mr. KENDALL. Not the slightest, Mr. Chairman; and if the amendment which was furnished this committee by Secretary Knox himself should be attached to this bill this afternoon its enactment into law would not be interfered with, but would be expedited. What do we propose to do?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. KENDALL. Nothing would afford me more pleasure than to yield to the gentleman from Maryland, but the gentleman himself will readily understand that I had only 10 min-

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman will understand that I was interrupted also.

Mr. KENDALL. I know I would acquire valuable information from the gentleman from Maryland, but I will have to deprive myself of that advantage this afternoon. Now, what do we propose to do here? Why, we join with the gentlemen who are in favor of the termination of pelagic sealing. body in the country everywhere is demanding that, but in view of the history of this question, in view of the results which have been experienced under the limited killing by the Department of Commerce and Labor, we ought to suspend all killing for a period of 7, 10, or 15 years [applause], and afford this herd an opportunity to rehabilitate itself to its former splendid proportions. Why, Mr. Chairman, the only argument advanced by the gentlemen before the committee who were in favor of continuing the killing of seals was that it was a profitable enterprise in which the Government ought to engage. I hope this issue may be determined upon a higher level than that. I unite with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sharp], and I say that, discarding the consideration of financial returns, I would like to see a suspension of all killing for the seals' sake itself, because I believe it is a high public duty to conserve and perpetuate that wild life which has almost disappeared and which will become entirely extinct in 20 years if no provision for its protection on land is adopted.

Now, the gentleman insists that another bill will be reported but I have had too much unfortunate experience with this bill to rest with calm security upon assurances of that character. We think this measure ought to be amended. The Secretary of State was right when he incorporated section 11 as it originally appeared in the bill, and-

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KENDALL. I will yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did not the Secretary of State say that there was a difference of opinion as between he and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. KENDALL. I do not know what the Secretary said about a difference of opinion between "he" and anybody. [Laughter.]

report of this committee. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter, and I believe every Member of this House who has given this question any thought is in favor of doing what he believes is best for the rehabilitation and preservation of the seal herd. I believe everyone on this committee, in this House, and in this country is opposed to pelagic sealing. The bill under consideration provides for nothing but the prevention of pelagic sealing. Its only provisions are to carry into effect a treaty between the four nations who were parties to it intended to stop this class of sealing. The gentleman from Iowa has described the enormous seal herds which existed at one time. This was before the days of pelagic sealing, which started about 30 years ago, and at that time these herds were about as large as they had ever been. Now, Mr. Chairman, they have been fearfully reduced—in this country to a herd of about 125,000, on the Commander Islands of Russia to a herd of about 18,500, and on the Japanese islands to a herd of about 6,500.

Every man who claims to have knowledge upon this subject. attributes the depreciation of these three herds to pelagic seal-[Applause.] Yet when we propose to carry into effect and operation a treaty that will put a stop to this barbarous custom, these gentleman who claim to have so humanitarian an interest in the seal herd put objections in the way of the enactment of this law. There should be no delay. Delay may mean another season of pelagic sealing. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think that land killing is of no harm?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think that land killing of surplus bachelors under the proper regulations is not only no harm, but that it is an advantage. And every scientific man, every man who claims to have scientific knowledge upon this subject and who has visited the Pribilof Islands-and there were eight of them who testified before the Committee on Foreign Affairs either in person or by letter or telegram-say that this character of land killing under proper regulation is an advantage instead of a disadvantage.

It is a common-sense position, notwithstanding the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] shakes his wise head, putting his judgment against the judgment of every scientist has testified upon this question except Prof. Elliott and Dr.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. What scientist was before the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I did not say they were all there in person. Dr. Evermann and Mr. Lembky were there in person. The committee had the opinions of Dr. Jordan, Dr. Fredrick A. Lucas, Dr. Stejneger, Dr. True, Dr. Stanly Brown, and Dr. Charles H. Townsend.

Mr. KENDALL. Do you say they testified before the com-

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I say their evidence was before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is in this record.

Mr. KENDALL. In what form?
Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. In the form of letters or telegrams to the committee. I will read you what one of them said. Here is what Prof. Lucas, a distinguished zoologist of the American Museum of Natural History, who has frequently visited the Pribilof Islands and made an expert study of seal life, about a difference of opinion between "he" and anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINTHICUM. Did not he say it was against his judgment?

Mr. KENDALL. I do not know; I do not want to be interrupted by questions of that character—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. Everybody can see the futility of an attempt to discuss a question of this magnitude in 10 minutest time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited by the House, and the gentleman request is not in order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, has the time upon the other side been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been exhausted.

Mr. SULZER. Then I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood).

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this question should be complicated by an attempted criticism of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs by certain the chairman of the committee prepared and filed the majority that a seal herd that has been reduced almost to extinction will so replicate the proper and filed the majority.

I do not know; I do not want to be interrupted by questions of that character—

Dear Str.: I understand that the question of a Lose closed season for the fur seals is likely to come up again, and I take the liberty of writing you to protest against this closed season as beliap absolutely unnecessary as well as unpractical ocose season as beliap absolutely unnecessary as well as unpractical and unscientific. I have never seen the fur seals likely to come up again, and I take the liberty of writing you to protest against this closed season as beliap absolutely unnecessary as well as unpractical pecalosed teason as beliap absolutely unnecessary as well as unpractical pecalosed to end of a fur seals is likely to come up again, and I take the liberty of writing you to protest against this closed season as beliap absolutely unnecessary as as well as unpractical becaus cover in from 5 to 10 years as to yield a large number of killable males, this where every seal that could be taken (whether male, female, or young) has been slaughtered by the sealers. With pelagic sealing at an end, the control of the seal herd is absolutely in our hands, and as the killing is now done by the Government and not by any parties directly interested in the number of seals taken, it is a simple matter to control the killing as may be desired.

The sole suggestion I would make would be that as pelagic sealing has ceased, a smaller number of males be killed for two or three years to come, but this is a matter that the fur seal and advisory boards can consider at leisure. I sincerely trust that no such absurd measure will be considered as to prohibit the killing of bachelor seals.

I remain, faithfully, yours.

F. A. Lucas.

F. A. LUCAS.

Hon. William Sulzer, Chairman House Committee Foreign Affairs, Washington, D. C.

The others are just as strong. There were eight of these gentlemen connected in some way with the Government

Mr. SHARP. Yes

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of the Leland Stanford University, has some kind of a Government relation to this question. He goes to these islands. tlemen of this character were brought before this committee, in person or by communication, and every single one of these eight gentlemen testified that the scientific and practical thing to do was to protect the female seals from being killed and leave a sufficient number of males for breeding purposes and kill the surplus males. That is the testimony of every man who professes to have knowledge upon this subject except Mr. Elliott, who has not been upon these islands for 22 years, and of Dr. Hornaday, who has never been there.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will not the gentleman from Virginia admit that Dr. William T. Hornaday, the president of the New York Zoological Society and the only one of these scientists who has had anything to do with the live animals, advocated the absolute cessation of killing on the islands?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was unnecessary to ask me that

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was unnecessary to ask me that question. I have just stated what Dr. Hornaday's position was, but Dr. Hornaday has never been upon these islands. He is like my friend from New York [Mr. Harrison]. He is a theorist upon this question. These gentlemen who testify that the preservation of a sufficient number of males is better for the seal herd were men who had been there, some of whom have spent years and years there, and others of them going there frequently and studying fur-seal life at first hand. have made a practical investigation of the question and should know what they are talking about. We were confronted in the committee with this question. There were two views presented to us. No man who pretended to have scientific knowledge of this question ever suggested a closed season of five years or seven years. If I entertained the view that my friend from Ohio does, that these seals are almost human, that to kill them is murder, I would never stand here and advocate killing them at any time, because if it is murder to-day it would be murder at the end of five or of seven years. [Applause.]

But the gentlemen who appeared before that committee, Mr. Elliot and Dr. Hornaday on the one side, contended for a closed season for the whole 15 years of the life of this treaty. The other gentlemen contended that the scientific and practical and sensible thing to do was to kill all the surplus male seals, not only because it was an advantage to the remaining seals, but also because it involved a very considerable financial interest to this Government. The difference between a closed season for 15 years and the proposition advocated by this committee means between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 in the Treasury of this Government. I do not believe gentlemen are going to sit here and carelessly vote away $15,000,000 of the people's money upon theories advanced by Members of Congress and by men who purport to be scientists but who have never visited these islands and whose knowledge is entirely theoretical.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. SHARP. Suppose we cease the killing altogether for about five years. Then, under the terms of this treaty, how much money would be involved?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would suppose, without having time to make the calculation, that about two and one-half or three million dollars would be involved.

Mr. SHARP. I should say half that.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not believing that a fur seal is human or half human, I treat this question from a commercial standpoint, and would deal with the seal herd as I would a flock of sheep or a herd of cattle I owned. I would so handle them as to get the best results. The life of the seal is not more than 15 years. If the close season is adopted many of these seals would never bring anything whatever to the Government, because all of those born in the early years of that period would have died and the skins of many others would be useless. sealskin is not worth anything after the seal from which it is taken has reached the age of 5 years.

We would thus be trifling away $15,000,000 upon a mere eory. What was the Committee on Foreign Affairs to do, and what is the House to do, when 10 men, claiming scientific knowledge of this subject, are examined and 8 of them testify to one theory and only 2 of them to another; and upon inquiry we find that one of them—Dr. Hornaday—has never visited those islands, has never taken the trouble to make any personal investigation of the question, and that Mr. Elliott, the other one, has been before the committees of this House for the past 20 years and, as far as the evidence shows, has been discredited by every committee before which he has ever appeared? [Applause.]

There is another question. The Secretary of State is of opinion that if we undertook to close the season, as suggested by Mr. Elliott and Dr. Hornaday, at the end of this treaty the nations that were parties to it would not enter into a new treaty because they would feel that we had not kept faith with them by not killing some of the seals and supplying them with the proportion which the treaty provides they shall receive, and that at the end of that time we could not negotiate another treaty. Then pelagic sealing would begin again, and the great butchery which these gentlemen describe as having taken place in the last 30 years would be again repeated and doubled.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Does not the treaty itself give the right to this Government to have either a closed season or a limited kill and manage the domestic proposition as we please?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not question that. Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If the treaty vouchsafes that to this Government, why would these other Governments refuse to enter into a further treaty with us at the expiration of this proposed treaty?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Because this treaty provides that we shall give Japan 1,000 sealskins a year, worth $35,000, and that we shall give England 1,000 sealskins a year, worth $35,000, and if you have a closed season each of the nations would lose a large amount each year, and at the end of 15 years they might not enter into another treaty, but would permit their citizens to engage again in pelagic sealing.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is not that proposition included in the alternative-either so many sealskins or so much money'

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If we have a closed season these nations would only get $10,000 apiece a year, which would be a loss to each of them of $25,000 a year, which in 15 years would be $375,000.

And so, Mr. Chairman, the course recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs is the better one for the seal herd and saves $15,000,000 to the Treasury of this country. [Applause.1

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All debate has closed on this paragraph.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise

Mr. GARNER. Pending that, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an amendment for the information and benefit of this House, so that the Members can read it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I will withhold my motion that the committee do rise.

Mr. GARNER. I want the opportunity to call the attention of the committee to the provisions of this amendment, and I ask for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes on the proposed amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "convention," in line 6, page 9, Amend by adding, after the word "convention, in line b, page 9, the following:
"Provided, That the number of seals to be taken in any one year for the first five years from the passage of this act shall not exceed 5,000, and for the next succeeding five years shall not exceed 7,500, and for the next succeeding five years shall not exceed 10,000: And provided further, That the number of seals thus taken in any one year shall not exceed 50 per cent of the 3-year-old male seals, and that during the said period of 15 years no seals shall be taken except male seals 3 years of age or older."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, and desire to have it considered as pending.

Mr. SULZER. I move that the committee do now rise. Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman print his amend-Mr. MANN.

ment in the RECORD?

Mr. SULZER. I have no objection to the gentleman from Arkansas inserting his amendment in the RECORD and having it pending

Mr. MANN. Not having it pending, but having it printed. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to have his proposed amendment printed in the RECORD.

What is the request? Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. To have the amendment printed in the RECORD, as the Chair understands. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment proposed by Mr. Goodwin of Arkansas is as follows:

follows:

Amend H. R. 16571 by striking out section 11 and substituting the following:

"Sec. 11. That from and after the approval of this act all killing of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands, or anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States in Alaska, shall be suspended for a period of 10 years and shall be, and is hereby, declared to be unlawful, and all punishments and penalties heretofore enacted for the killing of fur seals shall be applicable and inflicted upon offenders under this section: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to the annual killing on St. Paul Island of 1,500 small male seals for natives' food and 500 small male seals for natives' food and sof which shall be preserved and annually sold by the Government, and proceeds of such annual sales shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That at the expiration of the said 10 years' suspension of all commercial killing on the said Pribilof Islands said killing may be resumed thereon as the Government shall thereafter determine to be safe and proper."

Mr. SUILZER. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SULZER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Davis of West Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, on January 29 I addressed the House on a question of personal privilege regarding the history of certain legislation affecting the White Earth Indian Reservation. Since then I have obtained copies of the reports on those bills in previous Congresses, and I have also prepared an additional statement, which I want to insert in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steen-ERSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD-

Mr. STEENERSON. On that matter. The SPEAKER. On the question that he discussed some days ago on the question of personal privilege. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SULZER. I move that the House do now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 8, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for refunding internal-revenue collections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 518); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting estimate of appropriation for the construction of vaults in the building now being erected for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (H. Doc. No. 517); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a survey of Yaquina River, Oreg., from Toledo to Yaquina (H. Doc. No. 519); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18964) to amend section 6 of the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 306), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a communication from the secretary of state of Idaho transmitting a certified copy of a house joint memorial adopted by the legislature of that State memorializing Congress to provide for the erection of an American Indian memorial and museum building in the city of Washington. The memorial will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CURTIS. I believe the bill on the subject was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. If so, I should think the memorial had better go to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial had better follow the reference of the bill. It seems to the Chair that the bill should have gone to the Committee on the Library, but the memorial will follow the reference of the bill to which it relates.

The Chair also lays before the Senate a memorial from the secretary of state of Idaho transmitting a certified copy of house joint memorial adopted by the legislature of that State protesting against the enactment of a law reducing the tariff on zinc and lead ores. The memorial will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the clerks investigate the RECORD to see whether I did not present those memorials yesterday. Copies were sent to the President of the Senate, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is discovered to be the fact, the Chair will withdraw these memorials from presentation. It is not necessary to duplicate them in the Record.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not prepared to speak positively, away from the memorandum that accompanied them, which is in my office.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ouba, Kans., remonstrating against the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Scott City, Kans., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Menlo, Kans., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BORAH. I present a telegram, in the nature of a petition, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. as follows:

WALLACE, IDAHO.

Senator William E. Borah, Washington, D. C .:

Washington, D. C.:

At a regular meeting of Wallace Typographical Union, No. 617, held Tuesday, February 6, the following resolutions were adopted by unanimous vote and the secretary instructed to forward them to our Senators and Representatives in Congress:

Whereas it is apparent that the lead and zinc mining industries of this, one of the greatest lead-producing sections of the United States and of the world, are threatened with curtailment and possible ruin by the proposed reductions in the tariff on lead and zinc existing under the Payne-Aldrich bill; and

Whereas the means of livelihood of thousands of American workingmen are at stake, and the loss of their positions through the inevitable curtailment of production is certain if the proposed law is passed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Wallace Typographical Union, No. 617, hereby protests against the measure known as the Underwood bill, as passed by the National House of Representatives and reported to the Senate; be it further the National House of Representatives and reported to the Senate; be it further Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives be urged to use their utmost endeavors to prevent the said measure from becoming a law and to prevent a lowering of the existing tariff on lead and zinc

Mr. LIPPITT submitted an amendment providing for the examination and survey for a breakwater at Narragansett Pier, R. I., intended to be proposed by him to the rivers and harbors appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL-SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4142) to amend section 9 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal-savings depositories for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes," which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PUBLIC-UTILITIES COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 300).

Mr. WORKS. I desire to propose an amendment in the form of a substitute to Senate bill 3812, known as the public-utilities bill. This proposed substitute is, with a few minor changes, a copy of the bill now pending in the House. Upon that bill two reports were made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I ask that the proposed amendment and those two reports, which have not yet been printed, be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 213), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Woman Suffrage, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized, during the Sixty-second Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ stenographers to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, and to have the testimony and proceedings of such hearings printed for the use of the committee. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee and subcommittees thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT IN THE IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

Mr. BORAH. I have what is called a preliminary report, or, rather, a résumé, of three or four volumes in which is found the full report of the Bureau of Labor, Department of Commerce and Labor, on conditions of employment in the iron and steel industry. It consists of about 60 pages, and is a resume, as I said, of what is found in the entire report. I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor is entered.

COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that Senate Document No. 294, Sixty second Congress, second session, being a message from the President of the United States transmitting information in response to Senate resolution of January 25, 1912, giving the names of the members of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency in the Government Service, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message is as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, TRANSMITTING INFORMATION IN RESPONSE TO SENATE RESOLUTION OF JANUARY 25, 1912, GIVING THE NAMES OF THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

To the Senate:

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:
H. R. 18017. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States; and

H. R. 18236. An act to allow and regulate amendments in judicial proceedings in the courts of United States.

H. J. Res. 238. A joint resolution making appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GENERAL ARRITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.
Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Dixon du Pont Foster Gallinger Gamble Gronna Heyburn Hitchcock Myers Nelson Nixon O'Gorman Oliver Root Shively Smith, Ga. Smith, Md. Smith, Mich. Smoot Stephenson Sutherland Swanson Borah Bourne Brandegee Brown Bryan Burnham Burton Overman Owen Page Swanson Thornton Townsend Warren Williams Chamberlain Paynter Penrose Perkins Poindexter Kenyon Chamberian Chilton Clapp Clark, Wyo. Clarke, Ark. Crawford Cummins Curtis Kenyon Lea Lippitt Lodge McCumber McLean Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Pomerene Rayner Reed Works Richardson

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, public sentiment in this country is demanding the ratification of the proposed treaties between this country and Great Britain and France. This is evidenced by resolutions of religious and civic bodies and letters by the hundreds received by Senators urging such action. The sentiments expressed in these communications, coming from every part of the country, are commendable in the highest degree. Doubtless a like sentiment prevails on the part of the people of the two great nations with whom the treaties have been negotiated. It is a sentiment that leads to the hope that some time universal and unbroken peace between the nations of the earth will no longer be a dream of the lovers of peace but a reality. It is a sentiment that must find a response in the mind and heart of every true American citizen. Ît must appeal to every Christian man and weman, to every human being who loves liberty and justice.

But, Mr. President, I can not but confess my disappointment that these proposed treaties, if ratified, will be so ineffectual as a means of meeting this sentiment. Very few of the thousands of people who are calling upon Senators to support the treaties really know their contents, and but few of those who know their contents understand their meaning and effect. They are so uncertain in their terms and so inadequate in expression that even on this floor the official representatives of our Government differ widely as to their scope, meaning, and effect. The question presented is so far-reaching and important in its effects that I am sure Senators have given it the most careful and unbiased consideration, as I have tried to do. It touches the peace and happiness of the people of three great nations. Yea, more than that, if these treaties could accomplish what is fondly expected of them, they touch the most cherished interests of all people, and may—let us hope they will—eventuate in universal and world-wide peace.

The sentiment so generally and widely expressed in favor of the treaties is not founded upon their terms or the extent to which the high contracting parties are obligated to settle their disputes by peaceful means and not by war, but rather upon the general, almost universal, desire that the world should be at peace. So viewing it, lame and impotent as I believe the treaties to be as a means of obligating the parties to them to settle their disputes by peaceful means. I favor their ratification because they constitute a declaration by three great civilized nations of the world in favor of arbitration.

Mr. President, I desire, as briefly as possible, to analyze some of the terms of the treaties and to express my views as to their proper construction and legal and binding effect. I am very little concerned about the fear expressed by some Senators and put in concrete form by the majority report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that the Senate may by ratifying the treaties surrender some of its constitutional prerogatives. With that I will deal very briefly further along. The important question with me is what will be accomplished in the way of establishing peace and putting an end to war if they are ratified and carried out conscientiously and to the letter by the contracting parties. The treaties attempt to de-clare what matters shall be arbitrated, how and by whom it shall be determined whether a given matter of dispute is within the agreement and how it shall be settled if found to be within their terms. I am not going to consume the time of the Senate in discussing at any length the last two questions. What I have most carefully considered in attempting to arrive at a conclusion satisfactory to myself is the extent to which the treaties go in obligating the settlement of disputed questions by arbitration, what questions and what manner and kind of controverted matters are included in the terms of the agreement. They provide:

All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other, under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted, etc.

Bear in mind that the matters in dispute must be "justiciable in their nature." If the treaties had stopped there the difficulty of so construing them as to make them practically effective would not have been so great. But the contracting parties were not content to leave it there. Out of an overabundance of caution they must declare how they shall be justiciable, viz, "by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity."

Obviously, the one important thing to determine, at the very outset, is what kind or nature of questions are susceptible of decision by such means.

It may well be asked, in the first instance, whether any international question arising between the nations themselves is susceptible of decision by the principles of either law or equity.

Mr. President, the question as to what matters in controversy will fall within the term "justiciable," as thus defined, depends largely upon the meaning placed upon the word "equity" as here used. If the word is construed as synonymous Tith justice or fairness, then every dispute conceivable would come within its meaning and the parties to the treaties would be forced, if they kept their agreement, to submit any and all questions of dispute between them, whatever their nature, to But if this were intended the use of the word arbitration. "law" would have been wholly superfluous. I assume that no such construction of the treaties was conceived of by the representatives of the contracting parties. Certainly such a construction of them would defeat them in this body. It is true, nevertheless, that this broad and unlimited purpose and effect of the language I have quoted is contended for here, and upon that contention is founded much of the opposition to the treaties. It is quite possible that on the part of some of their enemies this broad construction is placed upon them as a means of compassing their defeat.

Mr. President, what is the meaning of equity as the word is used in the treaties, and what are the principles of equity to which resort could be had in settling international disputes In its broadest sense it is defined as being fair, under them? as fairness in dealing with others, as right or just, or as synonymous with natural right and justice, or, as said in Webster's Dictionary, "right, impartiality, rectitude, fairness, honesty, uprightness." It must be manifest that no such meaning as this was intended to be placed on the word in this connection. No court in this country would so construe it in any controversy between man and man. To my mind the very words of the treaty exclude any such idea. The matter in dispute must be susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of equity. That is equivalent to saying that it must be such that a court might render a decree upon it binding between the

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the Senator from California would object to an interruption, or would he prefer to continue uninterruptedly?

Mr. WORKS. I do not object to interruptions.

Mr. HEYBURN. My mind was attracted to the language just used by the Senator. How would that work in the case of a controversy to which France was a party? Equity is not known to the French law.

Mr. WORKS. I am coming to that branch of the subject, if the Senator will bear with me.

Very well; then I will not interrupt the Mr. HEYBURN.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it seems to me too obvious to admit of controversy that it was meant to refer in these treaties to the body of laws by which controversies can be adjudicated and determined by a court of justice between individuals. The rules or principles of equity create no new rights. In order to enforce a remedy in equity one must have a legal right. The rule is thus tersely and accurately stated by Mr. Adams in his work on equity:

The acknowledged jurisdiction of chancery was in cases where the common law gave or admitted a right but which were irremediable by its proces

The difference between law and equity is not in the right but solely in the relief or the remedy when the right exists at law. Mr. Adams says further on this subject:

The same principle still governs the jurisprudence of the court. It does not create rights which the common law denies, but it gives effectual redress for the infringement of existing rights where, by reason of the special circumstances of the case, the redress at law would be inadequate.

The manner of redress at law is by a judgment for the plaintiff, entitling him to recover, as the case may be, either possession of his property or damages for its detention or injury, followed by a writ of execution to the sheriff, requiring him to give effect to the judgment obtained. If this redress be sufficient, there is no jurisdiction in equity; and, in accordance with this principle, it is held that the court of chancery can not assess damages or decree possession of land or payment of rent under a legal title; for in the one case the assessment may be made by a jury, in the other the possession may be obtained by ejectment, and the intermediate rent may be recovered either by assumpsit for use and occupation or by trespass for mesne profits. The manner of redress in chancery is by a decree against the wrongdeer, compelling him specifically to make good his defaults; and therefore if the wrong require specific redress and such specific redress is not attainable at law there is a prerogative jurisdiction in equity to relieve. And whether specific redress be requisite or not, the inability of the common-law courts to examine the defendant creates in all cases of civil wrong a jurisdiction in equity to that extent.

If we turn to a more modern view of the meaning properly given

If we turn to a more modern view of the meaning properly given to the word "equity," we find it in the work of Prof. Pomeroy on equity jurisprudence. After a very full discussion of the rise and growth of the principles of equity and the various views entertained as to the character and extent of those principles, the learned author sums up by saying:

views entertained as to the character and extent of those principles, the learned author sums up by saying:

As the expansive tendencies of the common law are thus confined within certain limits, and as its power to administer justice and to grant the variety of remedies needed in the manifold relations of society is incomplete, the English and American system of equity is preserved and maintained to supply the want and to render the national jurisprudence as a whole adequate to the social needs. It is so constructed upon comprehensive and fruitful principles that it possesses an inherent capacity of expansion, so as to keep abreast of each succeeding generation and age. It consists of those doctrines and rules, primary and remedial rights and remedies, which the common law, by reason of its fixed methods and remedial system, was either unable or inadequate, in the regular course of its development, to establish, enforce, and confer, and which it therefore either tacitly omitted or openly rejected. On account of the somewhat arbitrary and harsh nature of the common law in its primitive stage, these doctrines and rules of equity were intentionally and consciously based upon the precepts of morality by the early chancellors, who borrowed the jural principles of the moral code and openly incorporated them into their judicial egislation. This origin gave to the system which we call equity a distinctive character which it has ever since preserved. Its great underlying principles, which are the constant sources, the never-falling roots of its particular rules, are unquestionably principles of right, justice, and morality, so far as the same can become the elements of a positive human jurisprudence; and these principles, being once incorporated into the system, and being essentially unlimited, have communicated their own vitality and power of adaptation of tight and duties than the correlative department which we call equity is, as a whole, more just and moral in its creation of right and duties than the correlative d

In one sense, and in that sense only, equity gives a right that does not exist under the principles and rules of law. A right may exist in fairness and justice that a court of law can not recognize because it affords no remedy for such a right. Equity acts upon the principle that there can be no right without a remedy, and therefore it provides the remedy and enforces it where the right exists. This conception of the remedial force of the principles of equity is well expressed in Rees v. City of Watertown (19 Wall., 121), in which it was said by the Supreme Court of the United States:

Watertown (19 Wall., 121), in which it was said by the Supreme Court of the United States:

But independently of this statute, upon the general principles of law and of equity jurisprudence, we are of opinion that we can not grant the relief asked for. The plaintiff invokes the aid of the principle that all legal remedies having failed, the court of chancery must give him a remedy; that there is a wrong which can not be righted elsewhere, and hence the right must be sustained in chancery. The difficulty arises from too broad an application of a general principle. The great advantage possessed by the court of chancery is not so much in its enlarged jurisdiction as in the extent and adaptability of its remedial powers. Generally, its jurisdiction is as well defined and limited as is that of a court of law. It can not exercise jurisdiction when there is an adequate and complete remedy at law. It can not assume control over that large class of obligations called imperfect obligations, resting upon conscience and moral duty only, unconnected with legal obligations. Judge Story says, "There are cases of fraud, of accident, and of trust which neither courts of law nor of equity presume to relieve or to mitigate," of which he cites many instances. Lord Talbot says, "There are cases, indeed, in which a court of equity gives a remedy where the law gives none, but where a particular remedy is given by law, and that remedy bounded and circumscribed by particular rules, it would be very improper for this court to take it up where the law leaves it, and extend it further than the law allows."

Generally, its jurisdiction depends upon legal obligations, and its decrees can only enforce remedies to the extent and in the mode by law established. With the subjects of fraud, trust, or accident, when properly before it, it can deal more completely than can a court of law. These subjects, however, may arise in courts of law and there be well disposed of.

A court of equity can not, by avowing that there is a right but no remedy kno

Then the question whether a disputed matter is justiciable or not must be tested by the established code of equitable principles devised to afford an adequate remedy where a legal right has been violated. Consequently they must necessarily invade some right of person or property. It can not be the right of a citizen of one nation or the other, such as the right of immigration or any other right that accrues to the citizen, or any number of citizens, not only because the matter in dispute must be one between the contracting nations, but because such a matter could not by any stretch of construction be one "susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity."

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if the representatives of these three nations had intended to exclude from the terms of the agreement every dispute that a nation is likely to go to war about, they could not have done it more effectually. Questions of national honor, so called, the Monroe doctrine, the respective rights of the citizens of the contracting parties, and almost every other matter of dispute of any consequence is excluded from the effect of the treaties by the definition of justiciable questions. As a declaration in favor of peace, as a part of the general movement to establish proper sentiments in favor of peace and against war, the treaties are commendable and as such I support them. As a means of settling disputes between nations in a way to avoid war they are almost wholly without force or merit.

In my judgment these treaties are not nearly as broad as the proposed treaty of 1905, in which the matters to be submitted are mentioned in the report of the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations as "practically all questions which did not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States and which did not concern the interests of third parties," or the treaty of 1908, mentioned in the same report.

I do not agree with the majority of the committee in its conclusion that because, as it is asserted, there is no system of equity jurisprudence in France we are bound to give the "equity" its broad and universal acceptance as that which is "equally right or just to all concerned, as the application of the dictates of good conscience to the settlement of controversies."

The principles of equity as a basis for the decision of disputed questions did exist in this country and must have been known to exist, and the scope and limitations of it, by the Republic of France. It must be assumed, therefore, that as there was no such system in France reference was made to the principles of law and equity prevailing in this country. Certainly France could not, under such conditions, justly say that there was no such system, when the rights of the contracting parties were defined and limited to such a system under which a "decision" might be made.

Mr. President, looking at these treaties as I do, conceiving as I do that their scope is so limited as to render them of little effect as a means of enforcing the settlement of disputes between nations by peaceful means, I am not impressed with the argument that the Senate will, if it ratifies the treaties, surrender any of its prerogatives that are worth preserving. I go further than that. I do not believe the Senate will, if it shall advise the making of the treaties, surrender any of its prerogatives or delegate any of its powers, as is contended; but it is not my purpose to extend these remarks by entering into a discussion of the question.

Mr. President, I believe in peace between nations. I abhor ar. I do not believe there can be any justifiable excuse for war between civilized nations. Why should it be necessary for the two great civilized English-speaking nations, the United States and Great Britain, to agree in advance and attempt to bind themselves by a written treaty not to go to war but to settle any disputed questions that may arise between them by arbitration or mutual agreement? It is because, while we are pleased to call ourselves so, we are not yet quite civilized. There is some savagery in the human race that has not yet been subdued by the teachings of civilization, Christianity, and humanitarianism. Nations go to war because they have not the moral courage to settle their controversies by peaceful means. Too many people look upon it as pusillanimous to be merciful and just. Our own Nation is puffed up with the power of wealth and consumed with the lust for more power and greater wealth. By little better than a sham naval battle, followed by a course of deceit and intrigue, we acquired additional territory across the sea, and began to talk about being a world We have subjugated and held in practical slavery a whole nation, half civilized and speaking a foreign tongue. have taken over other countries and other peoples with no better reason or excuse. As a consequence our Army and Navy must be increased and a free Republic kept on a war footing.

One effective way to advance the cause of peace by this Government would be to surrender their territory to these people and restore to them their liberty and independence. have no right in law or equity to hold or interfere with either. This single act of justice would remove one of the greatest obstacles to the attainment of peace by this Nation, enable us to reduce our military and naval forces and save the people millions of dollars in unnecessary expenses.

While the President and Secretary of State are crying for peace and asking this body to ratify treaties of peace that are mere shells—a delusion, a seeming declaration of peace that is wholly ineffectual as a means to that end—the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are calling for more soldiers and more ships of war. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] is afraid that these treaties may lead to an alliance between Great Britain, France, and the United States. An alliance for what? An alliance for peace? I presume so, as these are treaties of peace. If so, let us hope that the alliance will be formed and that soon. is just what is needed and what must come if we are to have real and continued peace between nations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curris in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think if the Senator from California will recall what I said in that connection, he will realize that I did not simply express my own fear that these treaties, if entered into, would lead to an alliance between Great Britain and the United States. What I did was to quote from the speech delivered by Sir Edward Grey, the minister for foreign affairs in Great Britain. In that speech Sir Edward Grey made the distinct declaration that these treaties, if entered into, would probably lead to such an arrangement between the United States and Great Britain that if either Nation were attacked or brought into conflict with another power having no arbitration treaty, the other Nation would support it.

The interpretation I placed upon what Sir Edward Grey said was the very obvious interpretation that if these treaties were entered into, and Great Britain should have the anticipated trouble with Germany, the United States would be expected, from the English point of view, to come to the assistance of Great Britain.

That was not simply my own fear. It was the interpretation placed upon these treaties by the secretary for foreign affairs of Great Britain, not in an interview, nor as a matter of rumor, but in a reported speech in the House of Commons. And I said that if Great Britain were entering into these treaties with that understanding of their ultimate result, it was some-thing which we in the United States, who want no entangling alliance, should take into account very seriously.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am glad that at least the Senator from Nebraska is not afraid. I have been unable to see anything in the treaty that would lead to any such construction as has been placed upon it, tending to show that there could arise out of it an alliance for any purpose between these two There should be an alliance between the great and powerful civilized nations, such as those between whom these treaties have been negotiated, to ostracize any nation that goes to war. They should bind themselves to withdraw all trade and other relations with a nation at war, whatever the cause of war may be, at the same time obligating themselves to tender their services to settle the dispute between the conflicting nations fairly and justly by peaceful means. At the same time they should agree and bind themselves not to increase their own armament and to reduce it to the limit of the needs of internal peace and safety.

You say this is an idle dream impossible of attainment. Yes; so it is just now. But why? Because the people are not ready for peace. To obtain it we must go down deeper for our remedy. The individual citizen must be taught to believe in peace as the only means of obtaining justice between men or nations. So long as the evils of ambition, hate, revenge, avarice, greed, and like evil propensities and base instincts control the minds of men and shut out the pleadings of justice, mercy, charity, love, and all the finer instincts of man's nature we shall never have peace between nations or men. If the people want peace, let them cleanse their own consciousness of these evil propensities. Let them put away all sense of hatred and malice or strife in their own individual consciousness and submit to the rule of justice and mercy in their own minds, and war will cease. Peace is not a question of nations but of men. The whole mass must be leavened, the people themselves regenerated, and peace, justice, and love established in the minds of the people themselves, in their relations with each other, before peace between nations can be reached.

Mr. President, I stand for universal peace; not peace between nations alone, but between men. I stand for the golden rule, and for peace on earth, good will to men.

Mr. WARREN. I do not see the Senator in charge of the treaties present, but unless some one wishes to discuss further this matter in executive session, I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business in open I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Monday next.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA WORKHOUSE.

Mr. WARREN. I ask permission to report from the Committee on Appropriations a joint resolution from the House, and I desire its immediate consideration. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and PRINTING OF ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF STATE KNOX (S. DOC. NO. 298).

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if it has not already been printed as a public document, I ask unanimous consent that the address of Hon. Philander C. Knox before the American Society for Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, delivered at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 8th of November, 1911, be printed as a public document. It deals with the question now before the Senate, and appears to me to be the administration's view of it. I think it ought to be made a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I rise merely for the purpose of suggesting that it would be very appropriate that that address should appear upon the records of the proceedings in open executive session in which the treaties are considered.

Mr. BAILEY. That would be entirely agreeable to me, Mr. LODGE. Printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ROOT. Printed in the record of the proceedings in open executive session.

Mr. BACON. What does the Senator from New York mean by his request in that form? That it be printed in the RECCED?

Mr. LODGE. That it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROOT. The request of the Senator from Texas was that the address be printed as a public document. in the address a number of statements by the Secretary of State which, I think, should appear in the RECORD as a part of the matters considered by the Senate in dealing with the treaties, and I mean that the paper should be printed in the RECORD in such a way as to appear as a part of the proceedings in which the treaties are considered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.
Mr. LODGE. I, of course, think it most desirable that the address should be printed as a public document. The ground was taken in the Senate the other day—and, I think, wisely taken—that nothing should be printed in the RECORD which was not delivered on the floor; and unless the speech should be read entire, and read into the RECORD, I think it is a bad precedent to enter on the publication of speeches in the RECORD not made in the Senate. I shall object to it on that ground, unless it is read.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.
Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from Texas, I desire to say that I entirely agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. I, of course, have the very highest respect for the utterances of the Secretary of State, and I am more than glad to have the address printed as a document, where it will be accessible to everyone, having as many copies printed here as the public demand may require, as well as may be required by Members of the Senate. I certainly feel the greatest hesitation in entering an objection to its being printed in the RECORD, because, while favoring arbitration treaties generally, I do not agree to some of the particular features of these proposed treaties, and to the extent of some of these features I do not agree with the views of the Secretary of State; but the matter of precedent and uniformity of practice should, I think, control us in this instance. There was an offer made a few days ago by a Senator to print in the Record a speech of some one—I have forgotten now by whom—and the ruling was distinctly then made by the Senate that it is against the policy of the Senate to print in the RECORD the speeches of anyone delivered outside of this Hall, the custom of printing them in the shape of documents being sufficient to answer all practical purposes.

It is impossible to draw the line. It is true that the Secretary of State is one of the most distinguished officials of the Government and one of the highest, but you can not draw the line. If you admit the propriety and establish the precedent of printing the speech of one person delivered outside of this Chamber, whether it be an official or a private citizen, you can not deny the privilege to others.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. ROOT. If Senators think it will create a bad precedent, I do not want to insist upon the request. I will see to it at the proper time that the statements contained in the address, which have in fact been a part of the subject matter of consideration, doubtless greatly affecting the action of many Senators regarding these treaties, are read into the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. There can be no possible objection to that, and shall be very glad to have that done. Mr. ROOT. Therefore I withdraw my request to print the address in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas, that the address be printed as a document? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am advised that the Vice President will be absent from the city on Monday and Tuesday of next week. As we are without a President pro tempore, it is necessary now to provide for some one to preside over the deliberations of the Senate on those two days.

I ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] may be designated to preside over the Senate on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PAULINA (OREG.) NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (8. 4745) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Paulina (Oreg.) National Forest to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 340) thereon. I ask that the bill may be considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consid-

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution 204, submitted by Mr. Penrose on the 1st instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed and delivered to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads 20,000 copies of the annual report of the Postmaster General of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On January 26, 1912: S. J. Res. 68. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, Mr. José Pasos Diaz, of Nicaragua.

On February 1, 1912: S. 1650. An act to amend section 110 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the Judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

On February 5, 1912:

S. 2750. An act to amend sections 90, 91, 105, and 186 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has a message from the President to lay before the Senate. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold the motion for that purpose?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I withhold the motion.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IN THE PHILIPPINES (S. DOC. NO. 299).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a series of joint reports made by officers representing the insular Government of the Philippine Islands, the Army and Navy of the United States, for the purpose of formulating plans for the construction and operation of a system of wireless telegraphy for the Philippine Islands.

In view of the fact that no commercial companies have installed wireless stations in the Philippine Islands up to the present time, and that the needs of the msular Government, of commerce, and of the Army and Navy of the United States for the wireless telegraph have now become urgent and are steadily increasing in importance, and in view of the additional facts that wireless signals will greatly add to the safety of the shipping of the China seas and will be of paramount importance to both the Army and Navy in time of war, it is considered highly advisable that an official system of wireless telegraphy be installed with as little delay as possible in these islands, and that the difficulties which would arise should commercial and Government stations be hereafter installed which are not in harmony with a well-considered plan may thus be avoided.

The report of this board is approved by me and urgently recommended to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1912.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the subject matter of wireless telegraphy has been before a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce for a long time as a matter of general legislation. The committee have reports from all the departments having anything to do with it, the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Treasury Department. I suggest whether, in view of the work which is being done in connection with that proposed legislation, it would not be advisable to refer the message relating to this same matter to that committee. I shall not ask it; I only suggest it.

Mr. LODGE. I would have no objection, but the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines is not here, and I would hardly like to have it done in his absence. The message relates to the establishment of a local system in the Philippines, and I doubt if it bears on the subject that the Committee on Commerce is considering.

Mr. NELSON. I am not at all tenacious about it. I simply suggest it in view of the fact that the committee is considering general legislation on the subject.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the message being re-ferred to the Committee on Commerce if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Guggenheim], who is chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, does not object. It is also to be remembered that a treaty on this subject is now pending in the Committee on Foreign Relations. Therefore the matter is in the hands of more than one committee.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BOURNE. I understand that two of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burton] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], have this matter under consideration, and they are also upon the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce having the whole question under consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would be better to let the message go to the Committee on the Philippines, where it would naturally go, and then, if it is desirable to send it to the Committee on Commerce, it can easily be done afterwards. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the message will be referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and it will be printed, together with the accompanying papers.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 238) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 12, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 8, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.
The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, from whom cometh all wisdom, power, and goodness, imbue these Thy servants plenteously with these gifts that their resolves and enactments may be in consonance with the laws which Thou hast ordained, thus making it hard for men to do wrong and easy for men to do right. That the evils which doth beset us may be diminished and good increased; that popular government may prove itself wise, just, efficient in statesmanship, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ABANDONMENT OF ARMY POSTS.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following privileged report (H. Rept. 311) from the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 398.

House resolution 308.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House with the following information relating to the following Army posts recommended by him for early abandonment: Forts Apache, Ariz.; Bolse Barracks, Idaho; Brady, Mich.; Clark, Tex.; George Wright, Wash.; Jay, N. Y.; Lincoln, N. Dak.; Logan H. Roots, Ark.; McIntosh, Tex.; Mackenzie, Wyo.; Madison Barracks, N. Y.; Meade, S. Dak.; Niagara, N. Y.; Ontario, N. Y.; Wayne, Mich.; Whipple Barracks, Ariz.; William Henry Harrison, Mont.; Yellowstone, Wyo. First. Cost of each of said posts to date under the following heads: (a) Lands. (b) Buildings. (c) Water supply. (d) Roads and miscellaneous.

Second. Amount of expenditures for construction work on each of these posts for the last five years.

Third. Amounts expended for the care and upkeep for each of these posts for the past year.

Fourth. Number, character, and present condition of buildings and water systems at each of said posts.

Fifth. Capacity of quarters for each arm of the service at each of said posts.

Sixth. Conv. of the estimate of the amount expected to be said posts.

said posts.

Sixth. Copy of the estimate of the amount expected to be secured from the sale of these posts on which was based the statement in the report of the Secretary of War of the date of January 25, 1912, that the relocation of the Army may be largely financed from the proceeds of the sale of the real estate no longer needed for military purposes.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

Your committee, having had under consideration House resolution 398, requesting the Secretary of War to furnish the House with information relating to certain Army posts, recommends that the said resolution be amended by striking out the period at the end of the first paragraph, after the word "Wyoming," by inserting a semicolon, and adding to said paragraph the following, to wit: "Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.; Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y.; Fort Robinson, Nebr.; Fort Missoula, Mont.; Fort Logan, Colo.; Fort Douglas, Utah; Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.," and further recommends that the resolution as so amended do pass.

The SERAKER The great strip is now the committee armond.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment to the resolution was agreed to. The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEE VACANCIES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the election of the Hon. Harvey B. Fergusson for the vacancy on the Committee on the Public Lands and the Hon. George A. Neeley for the vacancy on the Committee on Banking and Currency, two Democratic vacancies now existing in those committees.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations?

There were no other nominations.

Mr. Fergusson was elected as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. NEELEY was elected as a member of the Committee on

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have one further nomi-At the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I offer the following resolution to fill a vacancy on the committee that belongs to the minority side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Mr. S. F. PROUTY, of Iowa, is hereby elected a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other nomination? There was no other nomination. The resolution was agreed to.

GEN. JAMES B. WEAVER.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House briefly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, the newspapers this morning convey the sorrowful intelligence that Gen. James B. Weaver, for many years a distinguished Member of this House from the district which I now have the honor to represent, is dead. think it not inappropriate that we pause momentarily to acknowledge the loss which is sustained by his country in his departure. In many notable respects his career is without parallel in the political history of the American Republic. From the day of his youth, when he volunteered as a private soldier in the Second Iowa Infantry, to the day of his death at three score and nine years, he was constantly on the firing line, advancing some policy which he enthusiastically favored or combating some principle which he earnestly condemned. was a natural polemic, whether in official position or in honorable retirement, always amply armed for any controversy, and challenging conflict with any adversary he might encounter. He never hesitated to espouse a cause unfamiliar or unpopular, and he would struggle to the uttermost to vindicate the beliefs he entertained. While he did not always achieve victory, he never confessed defeat. He entered politics as a Republican, transferred his allegiance to the Populist Party prior to 1880, and united with the Democracy when Mr. Bryan was nominated for President in 1896. Many men differed from the opinions he defended, but all men recognized his sincerity of conviction and his integrity of purpose. His life is an inspiring illustration of extraordinary ability, of unexampled energy, of unblemished character—all devoted with unfaltering fidelity to the welfare of his fellow men. He passes from the world to receive the divine benediction, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." [Prolonged applause.]

PIMA INDIANS IN ARIZONA (H. DOC. NO. 521).

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a House document certain letters, petitions, and papers with reference to conserving the rights of the Pima Indians of Arizona to the lands on the reservation and the necessary water supply for irrigation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document certain letters and petitions concerning the Pima Indians of Arizona. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for the first time, I think, since I have been a Member of Congress, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Herald of this morning, in the course of an article headed-

Florida land case opens next week. Mr. CLARK's statements are said to be untrue. Department makes reply—

Uses this language:

There were several new developments in the Everglades controversy yesterday. The department issued a statement denouncing as "prejudiced and one sided and untrue" the statement given out on Tuesday by Representative Frank Clark, of Florida, declaring that Secretary Wilson suppressed a warning circular and an engineer's report on the Everglades because the circular and report did not please the land speculators operating in the Everglades.

There is more in the report, Mr. Speaker, but that is the particular part upon which I predicate the question of privilege. I want to say that I have not seen the alleged statement sent out by the department; but I do desire to say that in my little career, public and private, whatever else may be said of me, no man has ever yet fixed a false statement as emanating from me either in my public or private capacity. I appeared before a committee of this House. I did it reluctantly, because I knew that persons engaged in promotion schemes in my State would immediately raise the cry that I was engaged in an onslaught on the progress of my State and my district. I knew that in the campaign in my State just my district. opening, in which I have opposition, I would have to meet that statement upon the stump before my people. I hesitated, but when I found that there were a number of people operating in the State of Florida to the detriment of the State, and to the robbery of thousands of people all over this country, I felt that my duty as a Representative demanded that I speak and that I ask a committee of this House to investigate those operations. [Applause.]

I have no interest in any land company in the State of Florida or anywhere else. I have not a foot of Florida land for sale in any part of the State. The only interest that I have is in protecting the people of this country from being ensnared by the lurid, truthless, false statements of these land sharks, who would rob the poor all over this land and bring discredit upon the fair name of my State. [Applause.] I did go before a committee, and I am prepared to prove, not only by my own statement but by the sworn testimony of as good men as live within this Republic, that the Secretary of Agriculture told me that he suppressed the circular referred to at the instance of persons engaged in selling Everglades lands in Florida. I want to know, and the country ought to know, who those persons were who could exercise this great influence over a great department of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, I hesitated because I looked upon the venerable Secretary more in a sense of pity than I did of blame. The Department of Agriculture sent certain engineers down to investigate these lands. Those engineers made a report. The department was being flooded with inquiries from all over this country relative to that project. They could not answer them singly, so it was thought necessary to get out a circular letter giving the necessary information. That circular letter was prepared, and when a few of them came into circulation the agents of these land sharks immediately appeared at the de-They threatened the chief drainage engineer of that department if he did not recall that circular letter. He "stood pat." He declined to do it. They then told him that they would go higher and they would have him do it. In a few days the chief engineer received a letter from the Secretary telling him that he must circulate no more of these letters and he must not answer any question relative to the Everglades of

I simply went before that committee to know whence comes this great power that can accomplish things like this. I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to be put in the attitude of opposing this great work of internal improvement. I do not know whether it can be done or not. If it can, I am willing for it to be done, and I am not opposing any enterprise in my State or any honest legitimate industry, but I will oppose thievery and robbery and fraud, whether it is committed in Florida or in any other State of this Union. [Applause.] These men have brought discredit upon our State. Millions of dollars have gone into their coffers for land 8, 10, and 12 feet under water, lands that ought to have been sold by the quart instead of by the acre [laughter]; and I wanted to know what connection the Department of Agriculture of this great Government has with these land boomers and land sharks. I am perfectly willing, if the people are like Barnum said they were—that they loved to be humbugged—I am perfectly willing to allow them to be humbugged, but not by a copartnership between a great department of this Government and the speculators and pirates who are seeking to humbug them.

Mr. Speaker, the statement I made before that committee is true. I am prepared to prove it. I do not make statements like that which I can not prove. I have practiced law too long not to know that it is dangerous to make a statement that you can not absolutely establish. I reiterate that I will prove that the Secretary of Agriculture told me in the presence of reputable witnesses that he suppressed this circular letter which gave the facts at the instance of persons engaged in selling the Everglades lands of Florida. [Applause.] The committee has taken it in charge. Let the department come there and under oath submit their defense. I am prepared to prove every count in the indictment that I make, and I will prove it beyond, not a probability but beyond every shadow of reasonable doubt. [Applause.]

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION, WORKHOUSE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House, as in Committee of the Whole House, a joint resolution to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the support of the workhouse, District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the House joint resolution referred to may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a joint resolution providing for a deficiency appropriation for the workhouse?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 238) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912.

District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $61,500 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, payable one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half by the United States, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1912, including the objects set forth in the appropriation therefor in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is required at this time because the appropriation for the workhouse of the District of Columbia is now exhausted. The appropriation for the current year is $193,000, of which $80,000 had been made immediately available and was expended prior to the beginning of the present fiscal year. When the District appropriation bill was reported to the House for the current fiscal year it carried an appropriation of $288,000. It was intended that this money should be used in the operation and maintenance of two institutions, one at Occoquan and the other at Belvoir. The House by amendment provided that no money should be expended for the maintenance of any such institution within 10 miles of Mount Vernon, except the one at Occoquan. The District Commissioners were required to hastily revise their estimates in the Senate, and in doing so they presented an estimate of $193,000, which sum it now appears is inadequate. An investigation, Mr. Speaker, discloses that an additional appropriation of $61,500 is now necessary. I wish to say one word, however, as to the necessity for passing this resolution at this time. Congress passed an urgent deficiency bill early in the session of Congress, and it is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations not to pass urgent deficiency bills at the beck and call of every department of the Government. There will be a general deficiency bill, if deficiencies exist for which appropriations are necessary, later in the session. The attitude of the departments toward Congress is well illustrated in a letter transmitted to the House in an estimate for a declared, though not an actual, deficiency. A bureau official called attention to what he believed to be the haste with which the Congress had passed an urgent deficiency bill, and said that as a result of that haste his bureau and others had not had an opportunity to have included in that bill items which they believed should have been placed therein,

Mr. Speaker, the more quickly the bureau chiefs realize that if they have estimates for appropriations to be submitted to Congress, that they promptly perform their duties, the more speedily will they realize that the Congress will act in accordance with its own judgment and not in response to the whims of the departments. The committee is unanimous in this matter. There is little further explanation needed. The severest criticism to be made of this matter is the failure of the District Commissioners to have had their estimate before Congress sufficiently early to have had this item included in the urgent deficiency bill. The estimate should have been here. If it were not that the appropriation is essential to keep open the workhouse, it would not be made at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk completed the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the House joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Fitzgerald, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate will proceed for four hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and the other half of that time to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hav] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18956, the Army appropriation bill, and pending that he asks that general debate be limited to four hours, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince]. Is there objec-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire what the policy of the committee will probably be in relation to liberality of debate under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that the committee does not propose to cut off any reasonable debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to discuss the legislative provisions in the bill for about 20 or 25 minutes, and with the limitation asked for now on general debate I will not be able to get time, and if I feel that I can secure it when we reach the legislative provisions under the five-minute rule I will make no objection to the request.

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can not promise the gentleman to give him 20 or 25 minutes under the five-minute rule, because I do not know what the circumstances will be at that

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not asking that my request be embodied in the agreement, but if I am reasonably certain of it at the time, so far as the gentleman from Virginia is concerned, I make no objection to his request.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman I do not propose to cut anybody off when they are discussing the provisions of the bill, and I have no doubt that he will be able to get the time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is, Shall the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill?

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, with Mr. Saunders in the chair.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

PRINCE] desires to yield some time first.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague, the leader of the minority, the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the holding of a caucus by the Democratic Members of the House last night on the subject of the "Money Trust," or whatever it was, I desire to call the attention of the House to a statement which recently appeared in the Washington Post, attributed to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, in which, among other things, he stated, as reported:

"The first thing I shall do when I get into the caucus next Wednesday night will be to demand that the representatives of the press and the public be admitted to the gallery," said the Texan. "We are going to legislate in that caucus, and the country has a right to know how every man votes and what he says in debate.

"The statement that I am willing to compromise is false. An emissary of Mr. Underwood to-day asked me if I was willing to have a special committee to make the investigation made up of a member from the Banking and Currency, Judiciary, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and Elections Committees, and three more to be selected by the Speaker. I said I was not."

"An emissary of Mr. Underwood to-day asked me." doubtedly the gentleman from Texas, who is very careful of the use of his language, knew what he was saying when he said that an emissary of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwoon] waited upon him; and in order that the House may have a full understanding of the occurrence, I desire to read for the benefit of the House the meaning of the word "emissary."

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary says:

Emissary (em'is-sa-ry), n.; pl. emissaries (-riz). (L. emissarius, fr. emittre, emissum, to send out; cf. F. emissaire. See Emit.) An agent employed to advance, in a covert manner, the interests of his employers; one sent out by any power that is at war with another to create dissatisfaction among the people of the latter.

I judge by the results, Mr. Chairman, that there was not only one emissary, but that there were many emissaries sent out by the gentleman from Alabama into the camp of the gentleman from Texas. At least there seems to have been the required degree of dissatisfaction created. [Laughter.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Cox of Ohio having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution making appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield half an hour to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] is recognized for half an hour.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I have taken the floor for the purpose of discussing the Army appropriation bill and the business methods that are in vogue in the War Department. In so doing I want to disclaim any intention on my part to make any undue criticism of the committee that has the Army appropriation bill in charge. The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, of which I am a member, has for some time been making investigation into the methods that are in vogue in the War Department, and I hope as the result of the efforts of that committee that what I shall say will be of some benefit to the Committee on Military Affairs and to the Committee of the Whole

Many of you are aware that the total amount of the appropriations for the current fiscal year for the War Department, which is divided into the military establishment and the civil establishment, for the year 1912 amount to $196,647,006.86. I submit to the House that that is a very considerable sum of money to be handling. I am aware of the fact that we deal with millions and speak of millions here as children speak and deal with pennies. The War Department is carrying an expense to the taxpayer of this country amounting in the aggregate to over $196,000,000.

Now, this total appropriation is carried in several different lls. The civil establishment is carried in the legislative, bills. executive, and judicial bill, and amounts to $2,041,008. cluded in this $2,000,000 are the general salary account, the contingent and miscellaneous expenses, rents of buildings, salaries of employees, public buildings and grounds under the charge of the Chief Engineer, and the contingent expenses under the Chief Engineer and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds. Then comes the appropriation of $93,412,230.54 for the military establishment proper, carried in the Army appropriation bill, which is the bill before the House.

It is to this appropriation that I desire to address myself more particularly. Before doing so, however, I want to remind the House of the fact-and I do not believe that I miss the mark wide when I say it-that the appropriations for the military establishment for the last 10 years will average $100,-000,000 annually, or, to put it roundly, in the last 10 years there has been expended by the Government for the military establishment, exclusive of the civil establishment of the War Department, $1,000,000,000.

Now, the country is interested in knowing what results it has obtained from this enormous expenditure of money. I want to read to the committee an extract from the Washington Post, I believe every person within the sound of my voice will agree with me that the Washington Post is strictly an administration paper. On January 2, 1912, there appeared an article in that paper which I shall not undertake to read in its entirety, but simply to read those portions of it that bring out the point I want to make. A member of the staff seems to have given an interview to the Post. In order that the committee may understand as near as I am able to identify the officer who gave this interview, I will read this excerpt:

Every section is opposed by the line of the Army. The reason for this united opposition was set forth by one of the most able officers of the line as follows:

Among other things, there appears this:

Among other things, there appears this:

Does Mr. Hay know what the present Army is worth in military efficiency? Has he concerned himself as he should in determining whether the Army, which is costing the taxpayers $100,000,000 a year, is worth the investment? He says in defense of his bill that it will save $2,000,000 a year. Does he know that if he summons line officers of the Army hefore his committee they would tell him that the Army in military efficiency is not worth $20,000,000 per annum; that in fact it is useless for the purposes of war?

That, I submit to the House, is rather a severe criticism of that arm of our Government upon which we are expending annually $100,000,000; and if my statement is correct, or approximately correct, that within the last 10 years we have spent $1,000,000,000 on the Army, and have a fighting machine that is worth only $20,000,000, I submit to this House that there are screws loose somewhere in this department; that there are screws that ought to be tightened up; and that this committee and that Congress owe it to the country to look more closely into these appropriations and see where our money is going and what results we are getting for this enormous expenditure.

I shall not undertake to discuss what I term the administrative features of the Hay bill; but from my knowledge of them I am disposed to support them. I submit to this committee that if this Army is to-day worth only $20,000,000 as a fighting machine, the present organization of the Army is wrong: that there is something radically wrong in the make-up of the

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman what he means by the statement that the Army is worth only $20,000,000 a year as a fighting machine? Does he mean that we could produce an equivalent of the Army for which we would not have to pay more than $20,000,000 per annum?

Mr. HELM. I am simply quoting to the House the reputed interview of some officer of the line who, I suppose, is near the head of the military organization in the War Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman does not indorse the statement, however, does he?

Mr. HELM. As this paper quotes an officer high up in the circles of the Army, an officer who, I presume, is a man who ought to know what he is talking about and acquainted with the efficiency of the Army, and if he goes on record as saying that the Army is only worth $20,000,000 in efficiency, I submit that that man either does or does not know what he is talking

Mr. ANTHONY. But the gentleman does not mean that it would be possible to maintain the Army on an expenditure of $20,000,000 a year?

Mr. HELM. No; I do not undertake to say that. I am simply undertaking to bring out, as best I can to the House, the results that we are getting for the expenditure of $100,000,000 annually; that according to this line officer we are getting a fighting machine which in efficiency is worth only $20,000,000.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. With great pleasure.

Mr. PRINCE, If I understand the gentleman aright, he means that as a fighting force we are not getting what we are paying for?

Mr. HELM. That is the way I construe this statement of this officer of the line.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman's idea is that we ought to turn our attention toward making this Army a fighting force and making it more efficient.

Mr. HELM. My idea is that you ought to get more efficient results for the outlay of a hundred million dollars annually; that if you are going to spend a hundred million dollars you ought to get better results; and if the gentleman will be just a little patient with me I believe the gentleman and the committee will understand in a few minutes what I have in mind.

Going back for a moment, I want to say in all candor that the expenditure of $196,000,000 carries with it the appropriation for the Panama Canal, which amounted, I believe, last year to about $48,000,000, and the appropriation for rivers and harbors-I can not just at the present moment put my hand on the exact amount of that; but these expenditures, especially on harbors, have a large element of military color to them,

Money is expended on these harbors partly as a war measure, and the money that is spent on the canal is largely a war measure, although coupled with it there is a commercial proposition. But the point I want to get to is this: That here is a tremendous business-going proposition, handling $196,000,000.

Now, I submit that simplicity in business is the very vital essential of that business. We had the chief of staff before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. would not misquote him under any circumstances. I am speaking from memory. He told that committee that the present methods of bookkeeping and letter writing, or, to sum it up, their paper work, were antiquated; that they had come down from a time so long past that the system was entirely obsolete; that if we were compelled to go to war to-day the methods that are now in use in the War Department would be abso-Intely unwieldy, that they would simply have to be abandoned; that those methods, so far as their paper work was concerned, would, if this country was in war, create confusion worse confounded; that they would produce a condition of chaos.

Now, I submit this to the committee, and I think I have quoted him approximately correct. There is a strange feature to all this business that has been developed before the committee; when the officers came before the committee to testify about such conditions as that to which I have just referred. I asked the chief of staff if he requires any legislation to correct these obsolete usages, and he says none at all. It seems to me that the time has come when somebody in that department has got to quit tiptoeing around-one officer tiptoeing around the when some officer has got to roll up his sleeves and wade into that department and get the thing straightened out. There is too much courtesy, too much walking around like they were walking on a lot of eggshells. Dignity and rank are great things, but they are costing the Government too much, and I am inclined to the opinion that more attention is given to official rank and preferment than is given to the business end of the department. They admit that everything is out of balance, that it is wrong; but there is no officer with the nerve to take the situation in hand and set the thing in order. The chief of staff stated before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department that the result of these conditions-this paper work, which is simply a side issue-was costing an enormous sum of money, and that it resulted in inefficiency in the

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. If to remedy this condition which the gentleman describes does not require legislation, is it not up to the Secretary of War to bring it about?

Mr. HELM. It would seem so to me. Let me give you another instance where there is no legislation required, but where millions and millions have been sunk, wasted, and squan-dered in this Army-post proposition which the committee has been developing.

I want to see if I can not submit a proposition that is absolutely accurate. I am not saying that it has been done, but I say that it can be done; that wherever the Government owns in the United States sufficient land on which an Army post can be built, under existing law the War Department has the authority, whether it will or will not do so, it has the authority to use the appropriation for barracks and quarters to construct an Army post. I submit to members of the Committee on Military Affairs sitting here if that is not an absolute fact. is not true, I would like to have some one rise and deny it. It is absolutely true.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. I will.

Mr. PRINCE. Let me say to the gentleman, as one of the members of the Military Committee, that we have constantly before us delegations from the different States; and if I recollect aright a delegation was before the committee from Kentucky, wanting to make the Mammoth Cave a part of a park for military purposes. Now, it is not the purpose of the Military Committee to create these posts or parks.

Mr. HELM. I am talking about Army posts. I understand that that is a military park. I am speaking altogether about the construction and maintenance of Army posts. The law is entirely different as to military parks.

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, I fully agree with the gentleman that a number of Army posts ought to be abandoned.

Mr. HELM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, Is there any authority required from Congress for the Secretary of War to abandon those Army posts that are useless?

Mr. PRINCE. If the department wants to abandon them they have ample power in their hands to do it without any legislation.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield? Mr. HELM. I will yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. KAHN. But you can not take soldiers away from one post unless you can house them in another post, and it is necessary before you abandon a post to build new barracks and quarters somewhere else so as to house the soldiers.

Mr. HELM. The proposition I am laying down is that the authority is now vested and rests with the Secretary of War to abandon these posts, and whether he will or not is aside from the proposition. Sell the useless Army posts, retaining possession until with the proceeds of the sale larger and more centralized posts can be constructed.

Mr. KAHN. But it depends upon appropriations from Congress for barracks and quarters whether he can do it.

Mr. HELM. Under existing law you appropriate a lump sum, and if I have time I want to show that that is wrong, in my opinion. Congress appropriates under the law lump sums which the Secretary of War can use to build up certain posts for purposes which are satisfactory to him and abandon others, My contention-and I might as well come to that now as at any other time-is that that is one of the things that needs correction. I am aware that the department disagrees with me. You appropriate $7,000,000 for what is termed supplies." Now the department takes that $7,000,000 Now the department takes that $7,000,000 and subdivides it into 33 impersonal accounts, and under existing law they can transfer any sum of money from any one of these impersonal accounts to another.

The proposition is this: Instead of appropriating, say, $7,-000,000 annually for regular supplies, these appropriations should be itemized, so to speak, and appropriations should be made for the different items that are carried under regular supplies in this appropriation, especially in times of peace. difference in the proposition is simply this: You have been dealing, say, for a year with a merchant and your account amounts to $7,000,000. He renders you a statement on the 1st of January.-to amount of merchandise, $7,000,000. I submit the average man does not want to settle his bills in that form, notwithstanding the contrary opinion of the War Department. Why they can not carry a separate appropriation for each different item, just as a bank can carry 33 accounts as easily as 1, is something beyond my understanding. Let me give you an in-"$7,000,000" simply for illustration and not to be accurate.
Under "regular supplies, care and protection" we have heating apparatus, ranges, stoves, cooking appliances, repairs and maintenance, heat, light, fuel for modern batteries, engine supplies, post bakeries, ice machines, cold storage, laundries, laundry engines, furniture, books, equipment, tableware, forage, bedding, straw, stationery, typewriters, blank books, certificates, blank forms, printing. There is no overpowering, no overwhelming necessity for grouping heat and light under the head of regular supplies. They could as well be carried with transportation or with other items. I see some of the gentlemen present smiling. Simply because this method of bringing in appropriation bills is one that has been handed down to you is no more argument for continuing that method than it is for the War Department continuing this old method of bookkeeping, which the Chief of Staff said is absolutely burdensome. These appropriations have been made from time to time, just as this bill has come in, but why these items could not be grouped is beyond my understanding. Simply because you have from the time of the Civil War been appropriating in this bill in the way in which you now present it is no argument for continuing it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, is it the gentleman's proposition that heat and light should be carried in the item of transpor-

Mr. HELM. Oh, no. I was unfortunate in my statement, perhaps. There are certain items, such as heat and light and forage and transportation, for which you must allow a wide latitude, but when you come down to such items as horseshoeing and horseshoes, you know how many horses you have in the Army and you know what a horseshoe is worth and you know how much it costs to put it on. You know, also, what a stove is worth or what it should be worth. You know what a cooking range ought to be worth. The committee ought to be able to say how many of these are required annually, how many we have in stock, and appropriate for that specific sum. The proposition comes down to the difference between settling a bill, as I stated, rendered in the form of a statement rendered-$7,000,000-or to one that has it itemized as for sugar and coffee and rice and flour and meal, so many pounds, and bacon at such and such a price on such and such a day and such a quantity. That is the way I want to settle my bill if ever I become a housekeeper.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [By unanimous consent Mr. Helm was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, at the very outset I want to compliment the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay], for the able manner in which he presented the majority views of the committee upon this floor on last Saturday. I regret exceedingly that the report of the majority members of the Committee on Military Affairs was not equally free from caustic criticism. I hope to show as I proceed that much of this criticism is unfounded. I want to say in the beginning that the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs are opposed to the legislative features of this bill. They believe that a much better purpose would be served if those matters would be taken up in a separate measure. Long experience in the House has determined the fact that it is ill advised and not conducive to good results to legislate on important questions upon a general appropriation bill. The legis ation that is proposed in the pending measure, so far as military affairs are concerned, is the most important that has come before the Congress since the passing of the Army re-organization act of February 2, 1901, and the General Staff law of February 14, 1903. The legislation that is pending proposes to reorganize, by consolidation, some of the most important staff bureaus of the War Department. We feel that if they are to be reorganized the reorganization should be made in connection with a reorganization of the line of the Army, so that we would have a complete reorganization and not a piecemeal reorganization. The reorganization of the line of the Army is being considered at the present time by the General That was testified to before the committee by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff. This legislation which is proposed in this bill should be made to fit the reorganization of the line of the Army, and it should not be expected that the reorganization of the line of the Army-in other words, the fighting branch-should be made to fit the reorganization of It has been said before our committee-and the Staff Corps. that probably bears out the statement the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] made a few moments ago, that so far as the fighting branch of our Army is concerned, we practically have no Army.

ing the present session of the Congress a measure that will reorganize the line of the Army so as to create proper units that can be expanded in time of war and contracted in time of peace. The present measure is analogous to this condition: Suppose a railroad corporation is organized and the company buys forthwith all its locomotives, puts up its depots and warehouses, and then proceeds to lay its tracks. Now, if a railroad company were to attempt to do that it would go into the hands of a receiver before it was fairly started, and properly so; and we of the minority protest against a procedure in military affairs that is analogous to a condition such as I have just mentioned with respect to a business enterprise. The majority of the members of the committee contend that the legislation is conducive to economy. There is no difference of opinion among the members of the committee as to the necessity for economy. We all favor that. But we do not favor economy at the expense of efficiency, and I shall try to show as I proceed that the legislation which is pending in this bill will not make for the efficiency that is claimed by the majority. So far as the reductions in the supply items of the bill are concerned. I shall make some statements as we proceed to consider them under the five-minute rule. I desire at this time to take up the legislative features of the pending measure.

The first change from existing law occurs in section 2, which provides that enlistments hereafter shall be for a period of five years instead of three. In my opinion that is a decided step backward. Let me give the committee some reasons which impelled a change from the five-year enlistment to a three-year enlistment. Congress did not make the change simply because it had the power to do so. It made the change upon the repeated recommendations of the War Department. Of course, immediately following the Civil War enlistments were for five years. At that time the great West was being developed. Our Army was cut down to a rather small number of enlisted men. Most of these were out in the posts in the West along the frontier to fight Indians. It was an exciting life, and it appealed to many young men who enlisted for the five years, but when the Indian wars were over then desertions commenced to be of frequent occurrence. Let me read to the committee some of the reports of the commanding officers of the Army and Sectaries of War with respect to this question of desertion under the five-year enlistment period. On page 153, volume 1, Report of the Secretary of War for 1887, we find the following statement in the report of Maj. Gen. O. O. Howard, commanding the Division of the Pacific:

I am still strongly of the opinion that a shorter first enlistment would be beneficial, making less desertions and enabling recruiting officers to secure a larger proportion than now of good, reliable men.

The record of Gen. O. O. Howard as a great military commander needs no comment from me upon this floor. On page 162 of the same report, Brig. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding the Department of Arizona, has the following to say regarding desertions:

In this connection I renew the recommendation made by me two years ago that the enlistment be for three years instead of five and reenlistment of good soldiers in the same troop, company, regiment, or department for one year.

The experience and ability of Gen. Miles need no comment from me upon this floor. On page 12, volume 1, report of the Secretary of War for 1888, the commanding general of the Army reports that "10 per cent of the Army deserts each year," and the Army was then composed of approximately 25,000 men. Ten per cent under the five-year enlistment period deserted each year. Think of it. On page 15 of the same report we find the following:

The Adjutant General recommends the amendment of section 1119 of the Revised Statutes and the reduction of term of enlistment from five to three years. One of the principal causes of desertion is undoubtedly the distant prospect of relief from a service which for some reason has been made distasteful.

This report of the Secretary of War is based on the recommendation of Gen. R. C. Drum, then Adjutant General of the Army. On page 10, volume 1, report of the Secretary of War for 1889, Hon. Redfield Proctor, Secretary of War, has the following to say in recommending measures for a reduction of desertions:

Other points that are strongly recommended by many prominent officers, and have much to commend them, are, (1) Authorize enlistments for three years only. If a man has not the elements of a soldier or is himself dissatisfied with the service, it is better to release him within a reasonable time.

On page 64 of the same report, Maj. Gen. J. M. Schofield, commanding the Army, speaking of the causes of desertion,

We have no Army, either in tactical or geographical units.

The various branches of the Army are out of proportion, and it is therefore the purpose of the General Staff to present dur-

On page 144 of the same report, Maj. Gen. O. O. Howard, commanding the Division of the Atlantic, again says:

I repeat my former recommendation for an increase in the reward offered for the apprehension of deserters, * * * to remove all real cause of discontent, shorten the first term of enlistment to two or three years, and institute some system by which men in emergency may sever their connection with the service without dishonor to themselves and with justice to the Government.

On page 156 of the same report, Maj. Gen. George Crook, commanding the Division of Missouri, speaking of the crime of desertion, says as follows:

In this connection I would suggest the propriety of shortening the term of enlistment.

On page 173 of the same report, Brig. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding the Division of the Pacific, says:

I would renew my recommendations made four years ago, namely, that enlistment be for three years instead of five, and that worthy men be authorized to reculist in the departments in which they are serving for one year.

This statement is made in his recommendations for decreasing the number of desertions.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before you pass to other reasons that you think are good as objections to the five-year limitation, will you tell the committee what the percentage of desertions has been since the three-year enlistment period?

Mr. KAHN. I will tell the gentleman. After the law was changed, in 1890, the number of desertions was immediately reduced, and the heads of the department commended the Congress for having passed legislation which allowed a three-year

After the enactment of the law of 1890, which permitted an enlisted man to secure three months' furlough after three years of honorable service and then ask for his discharge if he desired it at the termination of his furlough, we find the following results:

On page 63, Volume I, Report of the Secretary of War, 1891, Adjt. Gen. J. C. Kelton says:

This gratifying condition (the decrease in the number of desertions) is due largely to the beneficent and wise legislation of Congress, which is briefly indicated as follows:

"(1) Authorizing enlisted men, under certain conditions, to purchase their release from service or to claim an honorable discharge after three years."

On page 49, Volume I, Report of Secretary of War, 1892, Maj. Gen. J. M. Schofield, commanding the Army, in speaking of desertions, says:

Other beneficent measures, including recent legislation, have also combined to produce a greater degree of contentment in the Army than before existed, and hence to diminish the percentage of desertions.

On page 233, same report, Capt. C. F. McClure, acting judge advocate, Department of Columbia, says:

The large decrease in the number of desertions during the first and second years of service indicates that the "act to prevent desertions from the Army * * *," approved June 16, 1890, as carried into effect by General Orders 80 and 81, Adjutant General's office, series of 1890, is reducing very materially the number of desertions.

The number of desertions continued to decrease for a number of years, and did not increase perceptibly until after the Spanish-American War. The number was comparatively small. After the Spanish-American War the Army was increased in numbers. The desertions began to increase again in 1901 or 1902. If the gentleman will recall, many soldiers who enlisted during the Spanish-American War enlisted for the period of the war, and after the war a condition arose not unlike the condition that existed immediately after the Civil War, in that many soldiers felt that when the war was over they had per-formed their service, and they went home without waiting for the muster out of their regiments. They quit. I believe an examination of the record will disclose the fact that hundreds of applications are now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs for the removal of the charge of desertion, which descriton came about because the soldier was young, and, as he thought the war was over, he could go home without receiving a final discharge. Now, immediately after the Spanish-American War the number of desertions increased again; but they have been steadily declining since then, and last year there were only 2,504 in an Army of a numerical strength of over 75,000. In one of the reports that I have just read it was stated that there were about 10 per cent of the enlisted men deserting every year. That would have been 2,500 deserters per annum if the Army was at its full strength of 25,000 prior to the change in the law in 1901. So the gentleman can see that the number of desertions under the three-year enlistment period | has been infinitely less in percentage than it was under the five-year enlistment period.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WICKLIFFE). Will the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. My colleague stated that the law was changed in,1890.

Mr. KAHN. And then again in 1894. The first change was made

It was August 1, 1894.

Mr. KAHN. There was a change in 1890. I think it was on February 27 that the first change was made. I had intended to explain the matter fully as I proceeded with my remarks, but I will take it up now. In 1890 the law was changed so that it might be optional with the soldier as to whether he wanted to serve the full term of five years or whether he wanted to quit at the end of three years. Under this law of 1890, at the end of three years he was permitted to take a three months' furlough, and if at the end of the furlough-he wanted to continue the other two years of his five-year enlistment he was at liberty to do so, or, if he so desired, he could get his final discharge. It turned out that a very small percentage of the enlisted men took advantage of the opportunity to continue to the full term of five years. They took their final discharge at the end of three years, and when it was found that under the new law desertions were reduced so materially, in 1894 the law was again changed so that the enlisted man was to serve for the flat term of three years. That has been the law ever since.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] yield? Mr. KAHN.

Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. Let me ask you this question: In August,

Mr. PRINCE. Let me ask you this question: In August, 1894, or just prior thereto, the whole matter was thrashed out, and the three year flat enlistment was made the law?

Mr. KAHN. It had been thrashed out, but, as the gentleman will observe, prior to 1894. In the years 1887, 1888, and 1889 all of these department chiefs whom I have referred to, and some of the highest officers of the Army, constantly recommended to Congress the reduction of the period of enlistment, and when finally it was found after the enactment of the law of 1890 that the descriptors were reduced as restable. 1890 that the desertions were reduced so materially, Congress was asked to make it a flat three-year term of enlistment.

Mr. PRINCE. The point I want to ask my colleague is, under whose national administration was it done?

Mr. KAHN. I think the flat three-year-term law was enacted during the administration of Grover Cleveland.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KAHN. I certainly yield to my colleague. Mr. HAY. Can the gentleman state, or will he state, the average desertions for each year?

Mr. KAHN. I can put it into the Record. I have not the figures here. I have them at my office.

Mr. HAY. Have you the hearings here? They are in the hearings.

Mr. KAHN. I have the average rate of desertions, covering a period of many years, and I shall be very glad to insert the matter in the RECORD later on.

Mr. HAY. My recollection is that it will show that the desertions were as large under the three-year term as under the five-year term.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I not only have the figures, but I have a chart which shows the entire record during these periods.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.
Mr. CLINE. I noticed in the report of The Adjutant General that in the year 1899 the rate of desertion was 4.97 per cent.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I understood the explanation for the large percentage of desertions in 1890 and 1899 and 1900 was that

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is mistaken. There were comparatively few desertions between the period from 1898 to 1901. The Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection occurred during that period. The great reduction in the number of desertions commenced in 1890, when the law decreasing the term of enlistment was enacted, and after that the percentage of desertions did not vary much one way or the other until after the period of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. CLINE. I understand the gentleman's explanation of that. But to what does the gentleman attribute the large per-centage of desertions in 1899, which was almost as large, proportionately, as any time in the last 20 years?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is entirely in error. The report of the Secretary of War in 1888 shows that 10 per cent of the Army deserted at that time, and there were only 25,000 soldiers in the Army then. The desertions for the past year were only 2,504, and the Army has 77,000 men in it; so that the percentages are entirely disproportionate.

Mr. CLINE. But the desertions in 1899 were 3.22 per cent and in 1904-

Mr. KAHN. As against 10 per cent before 1890. Mr. CLINE. And in 1892 they were 3.97. But in 1899 the percentage was 4.97.

Mr. KAHN. In 1892 the law had been changed. In 1890 the law was changed, as I said a moment ago. The desertions were very large prior to 1890. In 1890 the enlistments were cut from the five-year period to an optional three-year period, and the soldiers immediately took advantage of the opportunity to get out with an honorable discharge, and the desertions decreased

Now, I must decline to yield further-

Mr. CLINE. I do not want to be tedious, but I would like to have the gentleman's explanation of these percentages

Mr. KAHN. I thought I had given an explanation, and perhaps as I go along I can go into it a little more fully.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact that all the officers who appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs on this question stated that, so far as the desertions were concerned, the length of term made no difference, because all desertions were in the first year?

Mr. KAHN. I do not recall whether they all testified to that fact or not, but I think a majority of them did. And yet I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that I have taken it upon myself to speak to large numbers of officers in the Army, during the past summer, in the Hawaiian Islands, at my own home at San Francisco, and here in Washington, and I have spoken even to retired officers here, and they have invariably stated to me that a three-year term of enlistment will be much better for the Army than the five-year term of enlistment.

Mr. HAY. The point I want to call to the attention of the gentleman was, that with all that experience in recruiting, the officers of the Army say that all the desertions were in the first year. Is that true?

Mr. KAHN. I shall dwell upon that a little later, if the gentleman will possess his soul in patience. In fact, I will discuss that very thing now.

The Adjutant General in his last annual report, that of the year 1911, shows on page 28 that 72 per cent of the desertions occur during the first enlistment; in the second enlistment, 18 per cent; in the third enlistment, 6 per cent; and in the fourth and subsequent enlistments, 4 per cent. He also shows that in the first three months of service 13 per cent of the desertions occur; in the second three months, 8 per cent; in the third three months, 7 per cent; and in the fourth three months, 10 per cent.

It is natural to suppose that many of these desertions are due to the fact that the young men who enlist are not satisfied with the service after they go into it. Homesickness is a prolific cause of desertion. The young soldier enlists, and is frequently sent hundreds or thousands of miles from the place where he was brought up, where his family and friends reside, and after a little while he gets tired of the service or homesick and deserts. It is natural to suppose that many of these young men who stay the full period of three years do it for the reason that after they have been in the service six or seven months, although they are dissatisfied they argue to themselves, "Well, I will stay the balance of my term, which will be two years and a half, and then I will take an honorable discharge." But in all likelihood if the soldier knew that he would have to perform duty for which he finds himself unfitted, or which is not to his liking, for four and one-half years more he would desert, and the percentage of desertions would again increase. do not doubt but that it will again be as large as it was during the former five-year period of enlistment.

Does the committee know how much it costs to apprehend a deserter and fill his place? It costs an average of $138.78 for each one. I shall dwell a little longer on these figures as I proceed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Might not quite a different conclusion be drawn from that which was inferred by the gentleman who made the inquiry [Mr. Hav] as to the reasons why these desertions occurred in the first year? Might it not be inferred that they were mostly in the first year for the reason that after that the soldier would naturally come to the conclusion that he only had a short time to serve, and had better remain?

Mr. KAHN. That is the very point I am trying to make. I contend that many of them who are conscientious in the matter, and who will argue that if they have only two and a half years more to serve before they get an honorable discharge, will stay the two and one-half years, whereas if they are dissatisfied with the service and feel that they have four and one-half years more to serve they might desert.

Mr. CONRY. Is it not also logical to suppose that after an enlisted man has remained for six months in the service he becomes habituated to his surroundings and is more inclined to remain?

The percentages stated in the report of the Mr. KAHN. Adjutant General do not bear out the statement of the gentleman, because the Adjutant General says that 13 per cent of the desertions occur in the first three months. They diminish to 8 per cent in the second three months, 7 per cent in the third three months, and again increase in the last three months of the first year to 10 per cent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am asking this question, because I believe the gentleman has given the subject far more study than I have. What does the gentleman say as to the comment of The Adjutant General in this regard:

The campaign conducted in recent years against the military crime of desertion has been eminently successful. As shown by the official returns, the desertions from the Army during the fiscal year 1900 aggregated 4,993, in 1910 they were reduced to 3,464, and in the fiscal year 1911 they were still further reduced to 2,504, making a total reduction of 2,489, or practically 50 per cent in the last two years.

The desertion rate last year was lower than it has ever been during the last 90 years, with the single exception of the fiscal year 1898, when the prospect of the War with Spain had its influence to prevent desertions. As to the direct cause of this great decrease, this extraordinary as well as gratifying decrease in the military crime of desertion, that for many years was a disgrace to the American Army, is due chiefly, if not entirely, to the systematic and vigorous measures that have been adopted for its suppression.

Mr. KAHN. While the vigorous measures referred to have undoubtedly contributed to the result, I think the statement is somewhat misleading for this reason-

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to get the gentleman's view about that.

Mr. KAHN. As I pointed out, the number of desertions did increase immediately after the Spanish-American War period, but in 1908 the Congress passed a law which materially increased the pay of the enlisted men, and notably of the noncommissioned officers, and, in my judgment, that has operated largely to decrease the number of desertions.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. My time is gradually ebbing away and I have many points still to make, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman think that it would be entirely possible to increase the benefits to the soldier by improving the service, and that that would operate as the real solution to the difficulty rather than anything that depends on the length of time?

Mr. KAHN. The length of time has a good deal to do with it, because the soldier, after he gets into the Army, in many instances finds that he is not fitted for the service. It does not appeal to him. He has probably seen some of those beautiful posters which you see posted up on the dead walls in the large cities of this country, showing two or three well-dressed officers sitting under a superb tree, with enlisted men all around all dressed up in fine-fitting, splendid uniforms, and, I believe, he is informed by this poster that he can go to many parts of the world by entering the Army. Accordingly he tries it. Then, when he finds that instead of traveling about the world he is set to cutting grass and sweeping walks at military posts and is detailed to do guard duty in all kinds of weather, he finds that Army life is not what he expected, and he wants to get out of it as quickly as possible. That is the truth of the matter.

Mr. JACKSON. I agree with the gentleman about the time of enlistment, but I wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not think something could be done to solve the difficulty by way of improving the service?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, that is being considered by the General Staff at the present time, and the General Staff proposes to send to the committee before the termination of the present session of Congress a bill to reorganize the Army of the United States.

Now, some reference is made in the majority report of the committee to the English system of long enlistment. The English system provides for reserves. The majority of the comlish system provides for reserves. nist system provides for reserves. The majority of the committee laud the long service of the English system, but the reserve features, they believe, are abhorrent. What is the long-service system in England? It is seven years with the troops, with the colors, and five years with the reserves. The seven-year enlistment period in England is caused by the Indian possessions. Seventy-seven thousand of England's soldiers are in India.

The statement of Col. Carleton, the adjutant general for recruiting, is that over 50 per cent of the English recruits are under 19 years of age, and the Government can not send them to India at that age. Experience has shown that they become sick and that they are more of a detriment than a benefit, and so the recruit is kept in England from one to two years, and then he goes to India.

Now, Col. Carleton says that the ideal short-service system is the continental system, which provides for two or three years' enlistment in practically every country of continental Europe. These countries are able to turn out a good soldier in two or three years, and it is an insult to the American youth to say that he can not be made a good soldier in three years.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if all the continental countries of Europe do not have a compulsory military system?

Mr. KAHN. True, they do; but for all that their term of service is very low, and when they have served the two or three years required of them the men go into the reserves. So these countries find that they can turn out a useful soldier in two years, and if the country becomes engaged in war he can immediately take up a musket and go to the defense of the

Let me quote Col. Carleton as to the English system. He says:

The short-service ideal is to have large reserves, relatively short terms of color service, and small peace establishments, all calculated with regard only to efficient training in peace and the requirements of mobilization for war. Continental armies, troubled by no considerations of drafts for foreign service, are able to conform to this ideal. But in our army, and even with our relatively large peace establishments, the drafts can not be found if the term of color service is too short, as it was when we had three years' army and nine years' reserve service. When drafts can not be found a demand arises for longer terms of army service and the strength of the reserve is threatened. The interests of drafts and reserves being thus in a measure antagonistic, we have adopted the seven and five years' term—a compromise which we have found best satisfies both.

LONG-SERVICE SOLDIERS.

Attention may here be called to certain facts in connection with the long-service soldiers who have just been referred to. Soldiers who have extended their service to 12 years or reengaged are, from the recruiting aspect of the question, the same as men enlisted for 12 years. Nothing is more natural, from the regimental officer's point of view, than the desire to see such men in the ranks. No one questions their value, provided they are not too numerous. This last, however, is an important qualifying phrase, for it is hardly to be denied that the presence of an unduly large number of long-service soldiers is directly opposed to the true interests of a regiment, since they prevent it from taking its proper number of recruits, and thus affect its drafts and reserve. In extreme cases they make it necessary severely to restrict recruiting even in the regimental area and impair the power of the home battalion to find and the foreign battalion to absorb drafts. Further—and this is important—a long-service soldier fills the places of one short-service man and one reservist, and to that extent hampers the mobilization of the home battalion, which may in consequence find itself passed over when units are being selected for field service, or, if selected, withdrawn from the fighting line for lack of reservists to make good its losses.

No attempt has been made to avoid repetition when it has been thought it may serve to emphasize the close interdependence of the several parts of the system or to show how hard it is to touch one without affecting others. The endeavor throughout has rather been to provide those who have had no chance of acquiring such information for themselves with a plain statement of what must be known if the short-service system and the conditions which govern its administration are to be understood. That such knowledge needs to be more widely spread is clearly shown by criticisms sometimes emanating from unsuspected sources. For instance, it is often urged that recruiting for a regiment should never be seriously checked or, what amounts to the same, that men should always be allowed to pass from the special reserve to the Regular Army at the standards in force for the latter when they enlisted in the former. Or it is said to be an incomprehensible and wasteful policy to force trained soldiers to leave the colors or that there can be no good reason for refusing to permit men to return at any time from the reserve to the ranks or, again, that any man who wishes to make the Army his profession should have the right to do so and serve till he has earned a pension. Anyone who has perseverance to master the contents of these pages, who remembers what our military requirements are, the intimate connection between recruiting, drafts, length of service, and the reserve, and that there are limits to the financial obligations the country is willing to accept, will find it easy to answer these and similar criticisms and suggestions springing from misapprehension of the objects the short-service system is intended to attain. Whatever the imperfections of that system, it can hardly be denied that nothing in our own or any other nation's experience of war can be adduced to prove that we were not right when we deliberately discarded our traditional system in favor of that which gives us an Army stronger and in every respect better suited to our requirements in peace and war than any we ever before possessed.

I believe these few extracts from the report of Col. Carleton, which was printed in volume 1, No. 1, of the Army Review of Great Britain, July, 1911, show conclusively that even in England the present tendency is toward a short service with the colors.

Mr. Chairman, one of the main reasons given by the majority members of the committee for this proposed lengthening of the enlistment period is the great saving in dollars and cents that will be made to the country. I think the chairman of the committee will admit before I am through that his figures are entirely misleading and erroneous.

On page 44 of the committee's report there is a statement showing the amount of annual saving by the adoption of section 2 of the bill as reported. The first item is clothing, $859,107.04 for the Regular Army; and the second item, clothing for the Philippine Scouts, shows a saving of $23,386.56. So that these Philippine Scouts, snows a saving of $25,586.50. So that these two items alone show a saving of approximately $873,000.

I have here General Order 67, which provides the money allowance for clothing for all enlisted men of the United States Army, except the Philippine Scouts, from July 1, 1911, and I have worked out or had worked out for me the actual saving to this country if the five-year enlistment were to go into effect under this general order. It shows that the total clothing allowance per man for 15 years is $495.76. I take the 15-year period because the majority members of the committee in making their calculations also took a 15-year period. The average clothing allowance per year per man is $33.717, under this general order.

Mr. HAY. When was that general order issued? Mr. KAHN. May 25, 1911.

Mr. HAY. After this bill was introduced. Mr. KAHN. Well, this bill was not introduced until the other day, but there were several bills introduced-

Mr. HAY. I am talking about the five-year term.

Mr. KAHN. That was introduced early in May, 1911, I believe, and there were several other bills introduced about that time, the principles of which are now embodied in the bill under consideration. The three-year plan would show that the total clothing allowance of the enlisted man for 15 years is $556.88, an average clothing allowance per man for one year of $37.135. The average annual excess clothing allowance per man under the three-year plan is $3.408. Assuming the strength of the Army at 76,912 men, we have an annual saving on clothing allowance for the Army of $263,116.90, instead of $859,107.04, an error in the computation of $596,990.94. If the other items of the bill can be traced down as this has been traced down, they will show that many of these figures are incorrect and misleading. The same is equally true with regard to the Philippine Scouts. I have worked that out, and instead of saving, as is stated on page 44, $23,386.56, the saving would be $11,693.28, an error of exactly one-half of the amount mentioned in the committee's report. So that you have in those two items alone, as I stated before, over $600,000 erroneously calculated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman from California.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the item of desertions, on page 78 of the hearings held before the Committee on Military Affairs during the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, I find that the estimate of the savings on desertions is based on an assumption that there would be no more desertions or casualties and no more recruits to transport under the five-year plan than under the three-year plan. The item to which I now refer is that of transportation, on page 44; the savings shown in that item are based, according to the statement in the hearings, on the number of desertions. Based upon our past experience with the five-year enlistment plan the number of desertions for the past year would have been 5,618 instead of 2,504, as shown by the report of The Adjutant General. It is estimated that it costs $138.78 to replace each deserter. Then to have replaced the extra number of deserters that we might expect from the five-year plan would have cost the Government $431,-160.92. These figures are probably not absolutely accurate, but they are entitled to as much consideration as the ones given by the majority of the committee which show the saving on transportation, but my figures are actually based on the present cost of supplying men to take the place of deserters and on past experience under the five-year plan.

In regard to the three other items of savings, on page 44 of

In regard to the three other items of savings, on page 44 of the committee's report, I shall not dwell upon them at any length, except to say this: They come under the authority of the Paymaster General of the Army, and Gen. Whipple, when asked before the committee what the reductions would be, said, on page 81 of the hearings:

It is a very difficult matter, Mr. Chairman, to make an exact calculation

That is the truth of the matter. The entire proposition is based on theory, and I apprehend if the theories be put into actual practice the results will be widely different.

actual practice the results will be widely different.

The five-year plan, we contend, will increase materially the expense which we now have for retired pay to the enlisted men. The present bill carries an item of $2,150,000 retired pay for the enlisted men. The pay of the enlisted men themselves is only $15,832,000 and the additional pay for length of service is $1,523,000. So that even as now constituted, the pay for the enlisted men on the retired list is something over 14 per cent of the pay of the entire enlisted force of the Army. We contend that under the five-year plan this amount will be materially increased, because after a man has served a second enlisted term of five years under that plan, he will have been in the Army 10 years, and will then feel that he is too far advanced in years to go out of the Army to take up new pursuits, while under the 3-year-enlistment plan he will have been in only 6 years, and he does not feel too old to go out. He feels that there are still opportunities open to him in civil life, and he does go out accordingly, as the records show. That very matter of reenlistment and retired pay is stated in the report of the committee on page 13, and I want to call to the attention of this Committee of the Whole House the conflicting statements made by the majority of the committee on that very subject. On page 13 we find the report says:

page 13 we find the report says:

The committee, after hearing much testimony, which is fully set forth in the printed hearings, from the most experienced recruiting officers of the Army and from officers who have had long service as troop, battery, and company commanders under both the five-year and the three-year systems of enlistment, reached the conclusion that a return to the five-year system will not materially increase the difficulty of obtaining recruits, but that on the other hand it will materially increase the efficiency of the enlisted personnel of the Army by increasing the number of seasoned and well-trained soldiers in the ranks, by increasing the number of reenlistments, and by diminishing the number of desertions.

I have already referred to the subject of diminishing the number of desertions, and I have shown, I think, to the satisfaction of any fair-minded person that the longer period will result in an increase of desertions. But the committee says that it will increase the number of reenlistments, and that is exactly what we contend it will do. It will increase the number of reenlistments and will add materially to the retired pay of the enlisted men—that is, to the appropriations for the retired pay of enlisted men.

The report of the majority of the committee, however, on page 13, says:

Also, that it will materially decrease the number of discharges for disability and the number of possible pensioners, and will cause no increase at all in the retired list of the enlisted men.

I can not understand this kind of logic. In one sentence the report says that the five-year plan will increase the number of reenlistments, and in the next sentence it declares that "there will be no increase at all in the retired list of the enlisted men." But that is but a sample of the conflicting statements that have been made regarding this subject. It is contended in some quarters that it takes five years to make a good soldier. Why, Mr. Chairman, one of the officers in Honolulu told me that, so far as the work of drilling was concerned, after three years in the service the enlisted men could actually drill themselves without the need of any officers, commissioned or noncommissioned, and I am inclined to the belief that he stated the exact truth

Sir, the proposed economy in this bill under the five-year enlistment period is entirely at the expense of the enlisted men of the Army. In 1908 it was found necessary to increase the pay of the Army, and as a result of that increased pay the officers have stated that the material that is being enlisted is of a much higher character than that which enlisted before—that the personnel of the enlisted man has improved materially. But, in my judgment, this decrease of pay will again cause dissatisfaction in the enlisted force of the Army.

satisfaction in the enlisted force of the Army.

I have figures here, which I will insert in the Record, which show that the decrease of pay to the enlisted private under the pending measure is about 12½ per cent of the amount he would receive up to the time of his retirement, and the decrease to the noncommissioned officer, the backbone of the Army, if you please, the very men to whom you want to pay good salaries in order to keep them in the Army, the rate of decrease of pay, under the terms of this bill, is 15½ per cent, so that it is the enlisted man and the enlisted noncommissioned officer who is supposed to bear the burden of this decrease of the cost of the Army.

A soldier is entitled to have his foreign service count as double time toward his retirement. With the present demands upon the Army for duty outside of the United States, it is believed that considerably more than one-fourth of an enlisted man's service will be performed outside the limits of the United States proper. Assuming, though, that only 6 years out of 24 is foreign service (that would entitle the soldier to retirement), we have the following figures:

Total pay received during 24 years $6, 295. 50

This is a specially undesirable feature. Any such drastic "cut" in the pay of a number of employees, for the enlisted men may be classed as such, must of necessity cause much dissatisfaction. If such measures were adopted in any large industrial corporation it would most probably result in embarrassing situations.

Now there is one other item in section 2 that I desire to speak upon briefly. It is that provision on the top of page 49 of the bill containing a proviso which compels Congress to legislate before any change in the uniform of the Army can be made. That proviso is intended to fix the uniform of the Army so as to prevent change hereafter without the authority of While changes in the uniform have undoubtedly Congress. been too numerous in the past, nearly all the recent changes have been in the direction of greater simplicity and probable economy in the future. In any event, restrictions as proposed by this bill would be going to the opposite extreme, probably more serious in the end than whatever annoyances may have attended the changes in the uniform in the past. Some of the difficulties attending an enactment of this kind may be disclosed

The proposed bill fixes the uniform as it is now. The fourth section of this bill consolidates three supply departments, each of which now has a different uniform, into a new department which now has no uniform. No uniform could be prescribed, and the three different uniforms now obtaining would have to be worn until Congress saw fit to act in this matter again, Furthermore, a service corps is provided for by section 5 of this bill. No uniform is now in existence for this corps. None could be provided until Congress saw fit to act. The merging of the Inspector General's Department and The Adjutant General's Department in the General Staff would create similar uniform confusion.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.
Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman think Congress would have any trouble in fixing the amount of gold braid each man should wear?

Mr. KAHN. No. But why should Congress fix it when it could be fixed by departmental order?

Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman think 392 men could readily agree on it?

Mr. KAHN. Well, in any event, we ought not to have to pass upon it at all. I think it is much better to leave it to the heads of the departments, as has always been the case heretofore. I think Congress should not be called upon to go into these details. It is absurd, in my opinion, to ask Congress to go into these details and say how much a collar should be turned up or down or how much gold braid an officer is to wear on his coat tail. That ought to be done by an order, as it has always been done heretofore.

Now, I want to dwell briefly upon the next section of the bill. Section 3 of the bill relates to foreign-service pay. The chairman of the committee, I think, stated that foreign-service pay is only allowed in the Philippine Islands. I think, if he will look into the matter a little more thoroughly, he will find that he is mistaken. It is allowed for service in Alaska, in the Philippines and Panama, and also to the military attachés of this country serving abroad. Why should not they have the extra pay while serving in the Tropics or in the Frigid Zone?

Take a soldier in Alaska. He certainly is under much heavier expense there than he would be under in our own climate.

The officers in Alaska are undoubtedly under much heavier expense than the officers in the Temperate Zone, and the same is equally true in the Philippines. Many of the officers can not take their families to the Philippines because the climate affects the health of the women of their households. They have to keep up two establishments-one here and one down there. It developed that there are many expenses which they have to meet in the Philippines which do not exist on the mainland, and I apprehend that it would be a bad piece of legislation to cut down the foreign-service pay.

A military attaché serving abroad, if he accepts social courtesies, has to extend social courtesies in return, and his ordinary pay is insufficient to enable him to do so in a manner befitting the dignity of the country he represents.

Now, the last report of the Inspector General of the Army makes some comment in regard to this very matter of foreignservice pay. Col. John L. Chamberlain, inspector general, Philippines Division, says:

Extra pay for foreign service should remain as at present, but double time allowance for same should, in my judgment, be discontinued.

Foreign countries that have troops serving in the Tropics allow the troops while so serving extra-service pay, and I am reliably informed that the large mercantile concerns, both here and abroad, allow their employees in the Tropics extra pay.

I will now take up, briefly, section 4, which establishes a supply corps. We of the minority feel that such a consolidation as is contemplated by this section should be recommended by the General Staff, and should be made to fit in appropriately with a reorganization of the fighting branch of the Army.

Under the provisions of the pending bill the chief of the corps will be a major general during the period for which he is ap-I believe that if he should be retired subsequent to his serving as such chief, he would be entitled to be retired with the rank and pay of a major general, for section 26 of the act of February 2, 1901, is made specifically to apply by the express language of the proposed section 4 of this bill. In the said section 26 of the act of February 2, 1901, there is this language:

And any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff corps or department and shall subsequently be retired shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such corps or department chief.

It is not unlikely that most of the permanent officers now in the corps to be consolidated into this supply corps will reach the position of chief of the corps, and every one of them will, in my judgment, be entitled to retirement with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general. At any event, the language of the section is capable of being so construed as to bring about the result I have mentioned. But if we make this promotion in this bill, it will be but a short time before the heads of the other staff corps will be knocking at the doors of Congress, clamoring for similar recognition, and they would be equally entitled to it. They could produce splendid reasons for the promotions. Take the Medical Bureau. In recent years it has given to the world its wonderful discoveries in the prevention of yellow fever and of that terrible scourge in military camps, typhoid fever. What a boon to mankind has been conferred by this Army bureau. And yet the chief of that bureau is only a brigadier general.

Among the engineers of the Army is Col. Goethals, whose name will go down in history as the builder of the wonderful Panama Canal. He is only a colonel at present, but if he were ever to reach the head of the Bureau of Engineers he could only rank as a brigadier general. And so I might go on through all the various bureaus to show what excellent work they are doing, and possibly to show that they, too, are entitled to similar promotion to that contemplated in section 4 of the

Another condition might arise by creating this promotion that I will refer to but briefly. The Chief of Staff, under the act of February 14, 1903, creating the General Staff, has supervision, under direction of the President, of all the Staff Corps of the Army. By making the head of the supply corps a major general it would be possible to create a condition which would make the chief of the supply corps senior in rank to the Chief of Staff. Gen. Carter, in his testimony before the committee, as shown in volume 3 of the hearings during the present session at page 85, speaking of the possibility of this very condition,

And we have sufficient evidence to show that it is impossible for a chief of bureau who is senior to the Chief of Staff to take orders from him with good grace.

Mr. Chairman, I have not the time at present to go into the reasons for my objection to the provisions of section 4 in the matter of the reduction of the number of officers in the Army by 40 as a result of the consolidation of the Paymaster General's, Quartermaster General's, and Commissary General's Departments, but I hope to discuss that matter fully under the five-minute rule.

Just a few words in regard to section 5 of the proposed legislation—the creation of a service corps.

In computing the cost of the service corps the following items do not appear to have been fully considered: Desertions, discharges for other reasons than expiration of term of service, courts-martial, hospital and medical attendance, physical disability, and pensions. Again, the gratuitous issue of chevrons and stripes for the uniform would be a minor item of considerable import. Travel allowance upon discharge—4 cents per mile from place of discharge to place of enlistment—seems omitted from consideration.

In the hearings on this bill in its original form it was stated (p. 40, Hearings on H. R. 7713, May 18, 1911) that the number of enlisted men on the retired list is less than 4 per cent of the strength of the Army, counting its strength as 80,000 men, and the computation of the cost of the retired list of the service corps was apparently computed with this as a basis. This would give a manifestly erroneous result. Primarily the retirements for the Army at large can not be taken as a guide for the retirements in a service corps of the kind proposed, where undoubtedly many men having started in this career would hold on to it purely for the end of eventually reaching the retired list. But, even admitting that the retirements of the Army at large may be taken as a basis for computation, the 4 per cent suggested does not present the true facts. The strength of the Army until 1898 was 25,000 men. In 1901 authority was given to increase it to its present strength of 80,000. 1898 sufficient time has not elapsed for any retirements of enlisted men not in the Army when it was at a strength of 25,000. The retired list now represents, therefore, not a percentage of 80,000 men but of 25,000 men, and figured on this basis the retired list would represent something like 13 per cent of the strength of the Army.

Moreover, men passing to the retired list pass not so much in the lower grades as the higher noncommissioned grades and draw pay on the retired list accordingly. The last appropriation bill for the Army carried items amounting to $20,583,814 for the pay of enlisted men and $2,249,940 for the pay of enlisted men on the retired list. This item for retired pay is nearly 11 per cent of the total appropriations for the pay of enlisted men in active service. If the retired list represents but 4 per cent of the strength of the Army, then the soldier on the retired list is receiving nearly three times the average pay of the soldier on the active list.

In computing the item of pay as a part of the cost of the proposed service corps (p. 196, Hearings, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) it has been assumed that only 75 per cent of the men would reenlist and serve during the second enlistment, that only 50 per cent would reenlist the third time, and that only 40 per cent will reenlist thereafter. If this be correct, the item of pay would no doubt represent of itself alone a considerable saving. But in considering the efficiency of the proposed service corps it was stated in the hearings at the same time (p. 203, Hearings, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) that it was believed "that they would in a very short time be a much more efficient force than the civilians now performing these duties." This hardly seems likely if 60 per cent of them are changed every nine years.

In computing the cost of rations for the proposed service corps for such enlisted men as were not stationed with troops where rations in kind could be issued, 75 cents a day was allowed in lieu thereof. This is the rate of commutation now authorized by Army regulations for enlisted men under certain circumstances where it is not practicable to issue rations in kind. It is not, however, a matter of law, and may be administratively increased or decreased. Nowhere probably at this time could men of the class desired for this service corps subsist themselves on 75 cents a day. Under some circumstances even now enlisted men are allowed commutation at the rate of $1.50 a day. Increase to this rate in case of the service corps would probably be essential in many cases.

The computations by which a saving is shown in the creation of a service corps of the type considered by this bill may be shown in practically every case to be based on minimum costs that under actual conditions of the service would be largely exceeded.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had the time to go more fully into many items included in the pending legislation. I hope that when the bill is up for discussion under the five-minute rule I will find the opportunity to present some of my objections to those items. But, in conclusion, at this time, I wish to say that I want to see the Army a real force.

We should heed the lessons of the past. All too often we have lamented our unpreparedness for war at the outbreak of hostilities. I believe that if we were to become embroiled in the near future with any first-class power we would suffer extreme humiliation because we are unprepared for war.

The patriotic duty of the hour is not to enact piecemeal legislation, but to reorganize the entire Army from the ground up, and not from the top downward. We are a peaceful Nation. I hope my countrymen may never again become embroiled in war. But if ever the battle flags of the Republic must be again unfurled I hope the Army, for once in our history, will be able to respond "Ready" when the first rumble of the war drum is heard.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to my colleague on the committee, Mr. Tilson.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I first wish to congratulate the chairman of the committee on his excellent work in the preparation of that part of this bill with which we should properly deal here-I mean the appropriation part of the bill. I wish to attest not only to his uniform courtesy to all the members of the minority during the consideration of it, but also to his painstaking thoroughness in going through the various appropriation items; and I have tried to aid and support him, as I have seen him, when in the minority, loyally assist the chairman in the preparation of appropriation bills. I believe this bill to be an excellent one, so far as its appropriation features are concerned, although, in my opinion, there were some cuts made in the estimates submitted to the committee that should not have been made. , In fact, some cuts were made in the esti-mates which I believe will produce deficits before the end of the fiscal year for which we are appropriating-some cuts for which there were no valid reasons given. However, it is not to the appropriation part of the bill that I wish to turn my attention. I desire to speak in the few minutes given me on the legislative features of it.

In the first place, I do not believe that a great supply bill of this character should carry legislative provisions of the kind which this bill carries. It is not the proper place in which to consider legislative matters of this kind, and the Executive should not be placed in the attitude of having to veto a great supply bill in order to stop legislation which he may well deem vicious if enacted into law. There are other ways by which the same thing can be done. We have a call of committees here, which during the present session of this Congress has run its round several times, so that a bill could come up in the usual way and receive consideration in the usual way. In the next place, a bill of the importance of this one—and I refer to the legislative features alone—if a bill containing such features should be on the calendar, it would be worth while, and I should favor the bringing in of a special rule to this House, to have it considered. I am absolutely opposed to considering these matters on a great appropriation bill.

I am not at all opposed to all the legislative features of this bill if they were brought in in a separate bill. I am not opposed to the consolidations here proposed.

Mr. AMES. Do you not think that for the good of the service and the good of the Army, for the proper administration of the military branch of our Government, that any proposed reorganization should be created with the assistance of the department, and not come out of one man who is at the head of one committee?

Mr. TILSON. I think that all assistance that could be had should be had in a case like this, including all that could be gotten from the War Department.

Now, as to the legislative features in this bill in detail. first is the five-year enlistment, which has been so ably treated by my friend from California [Mr. KAHN]. I was absent from the Chamber for a few minutes, but so far as I was in the Chamber I did not hear him refer to the figures used by the committee in its report, showing that the officers of the Army are in favor of the five-year enlistment. I have made some investigations on my own hook, and I am convinced that the figures as presented by the report of the majority of this committee are incorrect and misleading. Not only have we different figures prepared and presented to us by the War Department, which I shall not attempt to go into, but I have my own figures, made during a tour of duty in Texas last summer, when a division of the Army was mobilized at San Antonio. While there I conversed with many officers in regard to the provisions of this bill, which were then being discussed through-out the Army. In order to ascertain as far as possible what the feeling of the officers of the Army was toward this provision, I went among the different regiments and brigades of that division, and in some cases had polled a vote on different points now included in this bill. I submit only one here. In one brigade the vote as to a five-year enlistment showed this result:

Commissioned officers of the brigade, present with the troops, 97 in number. The vote in two regiments of the three disclosed no one in favor of the five-year enlistment, while in the other regiment the colonel was in favor of the five-year enlistment, and with him were 14 officers of his regiment, this being the entire number in favor of the five-year enlistment in the entire brigade. The question was submitted fairly and without any attempt to get an answer of one character or another. I was simply seeking information, as I deemed it my duty to do as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. So I take leave to discount the figures of the committee as to the opinion of the Army on the five-year enlistment.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman question the fact that the figures given in the table are correct?

Mr. TILSON. I question the fact of their being representative of the officers at large. In other words, I am inclined to believe that they were a selected lot of officers.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. those letters myself to 400 majors, lieutenant colonels, and colonels who had experience both with the five-year period and with the three-year period, and those were the replies I received, If it were not for obvious reasons, I would not hesitate to give the names of those officers, and if the gentleman himself wants the names I will be delighted to give them to him.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman really believe that his questions that were sent out to these officers were calculated to bring out full and free answers from the men interrogated?

Undoubtedly; because they had no object on earth in expressing any other than an honest opinion to me. I could not have had any effect upon their careers in the Army

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes, I yield; but this is not my time.

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.
Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman from Virginia on his own responsibility sent out these requests?

Mr. HAY. I did.

Mr. PRINCE. So far as the committee is concerned, they never directed the form of question?

Mr. HAY. No. Mr. PRINCE. And the committee has never seen the replies? Mr. HAY. I am perfectly willing to show the whole correspondence to the gentleman, and he can examine every letter.

Mr. PRINCE. It is given in the report of the committee drawn by the gentleman from Virginia as a result of the proceedings before the committee. I want to show to the Committee of the Whole that the gentleman from Virginia, as the introducer of a separate measure, sent out those letters to get information for his own use.

Mr. HAY. Both for the use of the committee and the use of the House

Mr. PRINCE. And these answers were never submitted to the committee?

Mr. HAY. Not except in a general way. I think I told the members of the committee several times that I had this corre-Not except in a general way. I think I told the spondence.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to say, for the information of the Committee of the Whole, that I never knew of the questions that were answered nor the names of the officers reported who answered the questions, and never saw a report from any of the officers whom the gentleman names.

Mr. HAY .. That is the fault of the gentleman himself. stated to the committee that I had sent out those letters and had received those answers.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, this colloquy is very interesting, but it is also consuming my time, which, unfortunately, is very limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut declines to yield further.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak of another provision concerning which I feel a very deep interest, and that is the matter of promotions as contained in this bill. speak first of the making of the chief of this new consolidated supply corps a major general. If any personal reason could prevail with me to favor this legislative provision, it would be to see the present Quartermaster General made a major general. Among all the officers in the Army I consider him as one of the very ablest and best, and one capable of filling any position in the Army. He always comes before the committee with the desired information in perfect order and at his tongue's end, and gives it fully and clearly to the committee. I should like to see the present Quartermaster General made a major general of the line or filling any other position that he might desire in the Army, because I believe him fully capable of filling it; so that nothing that I shall say here in regard to promotions can be construed to reflect upon anyone personally.

In my opinion, the provision in this bill which makes the head of the supply corps a major general is wrong in principle, and doubly wrong when forced through on a great supply bill carrying appropriations for the support of the Army. In the great War of the Rebellion the man who distinguished himself most as an officer in any of the supply departments was undoubtedly Gen. Meigs. His rank was that of a brigadier general. The number of troops which had to be supplied at that time would make our present Army look like a single squad, so large was the great Army of the United States in the last years of the Civil War. To make the head of the supply corps of our small Army a major general in time of peace is out of all proportion to anything that we have ever done before in the way of confor anything that we have ever done before in the way of conferring rank. It is distinctly bad, it seems to me, from a military point of view, to have the head of the supply corps of equal rank with the highest officer in the Army, who may be called here to serve as Chief of Staff, when the latter, who, under the President himself, commands all the armies of the United States, will be only a major general.

The gentleman does not want to make any misstatement, I know. The Chief of Staff does not command anything, does he, except the immediate officers under him?

Mr. TILSON. I mean he is the right arm of the Commander in Chief and, in fact, practically directs the Army

Mr. HAY. Is he anything more than practically the adju-tant of the President or of the Secretary of War, and does not command a single man outside the few officers in the Staff

Mr. TILSON. It can not be denied that as a military officer he represents the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. AMES. And should be the ranking officer? Mr. TILSON. Yes; and undoubtedly should be the ranking officer.

Mr. HAY. He is nothing more than a Congress clerk, through whom the Secretary of War and the President act.

Mr. TILSON. It is well known that the President is seldom a military expert, and it is equally well known that the Secretary of War is usually not a military expert.

So that the man really at the head of the Army in these United States is the Chief of Staff, and he should be the ranking officer of the Army. If the chief of the supply corps outranks him, it may and undoubtedly will lead to friction, because the chief of the supply corps is permanent, whereas the Chief of Staff comes and goes once in four years.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows that the chief of the supply corps, under the provisions of this bill, is only a major general while so serving, and that his term of service is four years. Of course the President may reappoint him if he wants to, but he is not obliged to do so.

Mr. TILSON. In the case of the Chief of Staff he can not reappoint him; so that as a matter of fact the chief of the supply corps and the chiefs of the departments in the past have been reappointed, whereas the Chief of Staff can not be reappointed.

Mr. HAY. That has been cured by a provision in this bill, so that he can go back into his place in the line without being retired, or reappointed, or going out of the Army.

Mr. TILSON. He does not have to go back to his place in the line, but he may be perpetuated as the head of the supply corps, and as such he may and soon will outrank the Chief of Mr. AMES. And he may have no place in the line.

Mr. TILSON. It is equally bad for the spirit and discipline of the Army for the head of the supply corps to have rank above the other great departments having many more officers. In the supply corps, as provided in the bill, there will be 183 officers, of which 84 are permanent officers, as follows: One major general, 2 brigadier generals, 14 colonels, 20 lieutenant colonels, 39 majors, and 10 captains.

The Medical Department has 671 permanent officers, with no major general and only 1 brigadier general. Likewise the Engineer Corps, with 201 officers, has only 1 brigadier general, while the Coast Artillery Corps, with 20,000 men, has only a brigadier general.

It is most unfortunate of all that this rank should be conferred by legislation carried in an appropriation bill. For a long time there has been a feeling extant in the Army that staff officers, especially those here at Washington, have been unduly promoted at the expense of the line. When far away in the field, doing their duty in the heat or in the cold, it is not reassuring to the officers of the line to note that not even an appropriation bill can pass without promoting somebody in the staff. I know from actual association with line officers in the field that it is the deep-seated conviction of many officers that the heads of the Staff Corps take advantage of their favorable position here at the seat of government to seek promotion for themselves and the other officers of their particular corps or department. It is unfortunate to add to that feeling, as this legislation will surely do.

As illustrating the feeling of which I have spoken I shall here introduce the letter of a very competent line officer on this and other provisions of the bill. The name of the writer is withheld for obvious reasons:

The Hon. John Q. Tilson, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Hay bill will undoubtedly come up for consideration in the present session.

The Army Regulations state that efforts of officers to influence legislation will be noted in their records. I am willing to take a chance on you if you won't tell or let any of William J. Burns's men get hold of this letter.

This Hay bill is simply an example of the piecemeal legislation which the various special interests have gotten or attempted to get through this letter.

This Hay bill is simply an example of the piecemeal legislation which the various special interests have gotten or attempted to get through Congress in the years passed. Stripped of all its verbiage, the first question on cross-examination is, "Who does it promote?" It promotes every permanent staff officer now on the active list to the eventual grade of major general, provided there is no one in their corps who ranks them but is younger in years.

There are a whole lot of objections to this bill, such as knocking off increase pay for foreign service, increasing the term of enlistment, and all that sort of thing. It also provides a service corps, which is a good thing if it can be used by the troops; but, as a matter of fact, it would not be long before the service corps was concentrated at the various division and depot headquarters, making the chief and his staff very comfortable, while the United States soldier would do, as he has done for the past 135 years, all the real work.

The main objection to this bill is that it adds to the already heavy Army appropriation and does not provide a single additional rifle for the firing line. Our Army is absolutely overloaded with all sorts of staff, administrators office men, etc., and desperately shy on 6-foot corn-fed soldiers, with rifles on their backs, in ranks.

Every time I read the War of the Rebellion records I search diligently for a record of where a battle was won or an assault was made by a detachment of chaplains, quartermasters, commissaries, insular-affairs men, recruiting officers, pay clerks, etc. They usually had to resort to the employment of a comparatively ignorant, but highly efficient, soldiery.

As a matter of fact, I don't think that any bill whatever affecting the employment of a comparatively ignorant, but algorithms, soldiery.

As a matter of fact, I don't think that any bill whatever affecting the Army should be considered, except barely enough to feed, pay, and clothe, until there has been a proper adjustment between the fighting and administrative strengths. My recollection was that you inclined to the view that this bill was under present circumstances unnecessary. I hope you still have the same opinion and that you will, as far as you consistently can, enable the Army to be legislated to sound military basis.

basis.

Mr. Kahn's resolution, if passed and acted on in proper spirit, will give the data which will enable your committee to draft a bill making us efficient and inexpensive. Legislation for military efficiency and not for individual promotion is what we want.

Very respectfully,

There is another effect of this consolidation which I do not think is wise, and that is the reduction of the number of officers of the corps. I referred a few moments ago to the present Quartermaster General, and stated how full, complete, and accurate his information generally is. In referring to the reduction of officers in the supply corps, I should like to refer briefly to some of the information furnished by Gen. Aleshire in previous years. I shall refer first to his report made in 1908, when he was seeking an increase of officers for the Quartermaster's Department:

the Quartermaster's Department:

To provide officers of the proper rank for the duties of the department, as above outlined, would require the following: One brigadier general, 10 colonels, 18 lieutenant colonels, 37 majors, and 150 captains. This strength would enable the department to perform all of its duties without the necessity for assistance from officers of the line, is what should be given it with that end in view, and is the least in number and rank of officers with which the department ought to be expected to or can carry on the work devolving upon it in time of peace with the present organization of the Army and require no assistance from line officers. No allowance is made for loss of service of officers sick, on leave, reporting for duty after being detailed, or changing station within the United States and the Philippines, which, especially in the latter, is considerable. The strength of the corps ought not to be less than that indicated.

It is well known that one of the most serious handicaps to thorough training in our Army is having so many line officers detached or practically withdrawn from service with their organizations. Gen. Aleshire was striving very properly to secure enough officers to do away with the necessity for this injurious practice. It would require, according to his statement, 216 officers to effect this very important reform.

In 1909 his request is more modest, only 185 being asked for, but the need for them is still urgent, as appears from the following statement in his report of that year:

The increase in officers will also permit of the return to their proper organizations or the giving of their entire time to their regular duties of 94 officers of the line of the Army now doing the work of quarter-masters, relieving to that extent the complaint against the depletion of commands of commissioned officers through detail to detached service.

A single extract from the report of the Quartermaster General for the year 1910 is sufficient to show that the need for additional officers in that department had not ceased. I quote as follows

III. Sufficient number of officers to properly and efficiently perform all duties of the Quartermaster's Department: From the table on pages 39 and 40 of the annual report for the fiscal year 1909 it will be seen that on June 30, 1909, there were 190 officers on duty in the Quartermaster's Department—96 of the regular establishment and 94 officers of the line.

the line.

As will be seen elsewhere in this report, on June 30, 1910, there were 196 officers on duty in the Quartermaster's Department—96 officers of the regular establishment and 100 officers of the line.

Notwithstanding the fact that the number of line officers on duty in the department on June 30, 1910, was an increase of six over the number in the department on June 30, 1909, there was a shortage of officers necessary to properly perform the duties of the department.

As you all know, in 1911 the importunities of the Quartermaster's Department were partially rewarded by the addition of 30 officers to that department. It is passing strange that if 216 officers were necessary to do the work of the one department in 1908 and 30 additional officers were so much needed last year, that now, after adding the work of the Paymaster General's Department and the Commissary General's Department, only 183 officers will be required to do the combined work of the three departments. Perhaps the officers in the Quarter-master's Department, under the stimulating influence of the promotion gained by the increase of last year, may be able to accomplish an unusual amount of work, but I doubt if that alone would be sufficient.

The truth is it is not expected that the officers of the supply corps will do the work. The milk in the coconut is that the little joker in this bill is expected to accomplish it. That little provision which allows the supply corps to draw off from their respective duties regimental and battalion officers to do the work of officers in the supply corps is expected to do the business. The net result will be that officers in the Quartermaster's Department will retain the rank acquired by reason of the increase last year, the line will have to absorb the 40 officers cut off from the combined supply corps, and a large part of the work of the supply corps will be done by line officers who are much needed with their own organizations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, sometimes we are apt to find fault with the rules of the House which permit the discussion of a wide range of subjects utterly foreign to the bill under consideration, such as we have to-day. My consolation rests in the fact, however, that were it not for that opportunity we might be denied the right and opportunity to express ourselves upon some other subjects which are nevertheless of vital importance and pressing concern. While the subject upon which I shall address the House to-day is as far as the east is from the west with reference to the Army appropriation bill, yet it seems to me that it is particularly apropos just now in view of the action of the Lincoln Memorial Commission a few days ago in deciding, under the authority given it by Congress, upon the plan of a memorial to our martyred President.

I wish to say at the outset that I have no disposition to quarrel with or harshly criticize the motives of the commission. I could not name a more distinguished group of men in respect to their knowledge and fitness for the place than were selected to be put upon that commission. Nevertheless, I beg to differ with them in their conclusions, and to express the belief that their judgment is not only not in accord with the sentiment of the American people to-day as to the selection of a fitting memorial, but is not and will not prove to be in harmony with the views of a majority of this House. In order that in the short time I have I may properly introduce the subject of my remarks, I will read the joint resolution which I introduced late last month:

late last month:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 229) favoring the establishment of a national vocational school as the most appropriate memorial to Abraham Lincoln, and authorizing the Lincoln Memorial Commission to execute plans for the same.

Resolved, etc., That, recognizing in Abraham Lincoln the greatest advocate of equal opportunity for all the people, and in whose illustrious life and achievements are exemplified the highest possibilities of the American youth, the establishment of a national vocational school, in which shall be given, at the lowest tuition possible, practical instruction in the trades and agriculture, is the most appropriate memorial that can be erected to perpetuate his memory; and that the Lincoln Memorial Commission, created by the act approved February 9, 1911, is hereby authorized and directed to use all or any portion of the amount appropriated by the provisions of said act in formulating and executing all plans necessary to give effect to this resolution, subject to the approval of Congress.

We are all familiar with the fact that there are at present two widely different propositions looking to the establishment of a memorial to Abraham Lincoln. As favoring one of them, I will quote briefly from a speech by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Borland], delivered some months ago in this House, advocating the building of a memorial highway to Gettysburg. I wish to show by my quotations from the advocates of each one of these plans—the memorial highway and the immense monu-ment of marble to be erected in the shape of a memorial that they are both wrong, and still both right in their criticisms of each other's projects.

Upon the subject of a Gettysburg highway the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Borland] said in his speech:

from Missouri [Mr. Borland] said in his speech:

I want to remind the Members of this House how many monuments have been completed and unveiled since I have been here in Washington, less than three years: Monuments to Kosciuszko, Pulaski, Von Steuben, Stevenson, Sheridan, Witherspoon, Longfellow, and Shepherd—eight in three years. Now we are to have Christopher Columbus, Alexander Hamilton, and Thomas Jeferson, and no one knows how many more.

The city of Washington will be covered from one end to the other with these monuments. One unfortunate thing about it is that no matter how much money is expended upon them or what artists are employed upon them, in another generation a new school of artists will come along and say they are not true art and should be torn down. If $2,000,000 of the people's money is to be expended for a memorial to Abraham Lincoln, it strikes me that it is wholly inconsistent with his character that it should savor of the pomp of kings. It is entirely out of keeping with our idea of the man. A $2,000,000 pile of stones can neither increase his fame nor exemplify his character. Would it not be a much more appropriate memorial to build a highway from the city of Washington to the battle field of Gettysburg, that field which is immortalized by his burning words as well as by the dauntless heroism of the citizen soldiers of America? Would it not be more in consonance with the character of Abraham Lincoln that a memorial should be built for the use of the people now living than to erect one that would be costly and at the same time useless?

To all of which I agree and subscribe, in so far as the purpose shall be "for the use of the people now living" and "as vital as his immortal spirit." But can such a costly highway from Washington to Gettysburg further sanctify that battle field or increase the fame of those whom it immortalized by such a project? Listen to the words of Abraham Lincoln, who upon that sacred field said:

But in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or

Championing the view of the gentleman from Missouri we have, in accordance with it, the circular letter issued by the American Automobile Association, which, for reasons not difficult to fathom, has taken great interest in promoting this side of the question. It reads as follows:

Sharing in the universal sentiment that the subject of a great national memorial to President Lincoln is one worthy of the most serious consideration, and believing that in these days of multiplied road travel a broad highway would best perpetuate the memory of this great commoner, I am going to ask that you give a careful reading to the accompanying pamphlet justifying the expenditure of the appropriation of Congress for a highway rather than for any other form of memorial memorial.

The American Automobile Association, which comprises the organized motorists of the United States, believes that the plain statement of facts submitted herewith will be of material assistance to you in the conscientious effort to determine what form the Nation's memorial to President Lincoln shall take. The matter is one which has been brought to the attention of Congress on several occasions, and which eventually Congress must decide. You will have to take part in this decision.

Opposed to this we also have a resolution from the Fremont Park Association, which, in part, reads as follows—I will only read that portion of it which refers to the national highway project:

Resolved. That this board strongly disapproves of the proposal to substitute for such a monument in the Capital City of the Nation a roadway to Gettysburg, or anywhere else, which would, in its judgment, be a wasteful and unworthy diversion of the public funds from a noble purpose distinctly national in character, to one comparatively ignoble in conception, unreasonably costly in execution, and missing entirely in its main impression the effect which should be the first requirement of such a memorial.

To that I also heartily subscribe. I wish to say in this connection that I do not oppose properly directed Federal aid in building our highways. While there are two sides to that question, it does seem to me that a rational cooperation by the Federal Government with the different States for building our great interstate highways is eminently proper. But I submit that one of the worst things that could happen to the good-roads movement, which now seems to be sweeping the country, would be to undertake to build a memorial highway to Gettysburg such as is proposed by its advocates.

I have not the time to read the estimates of those who oppose it, but I will say that one runs up the cost, though I believe quite too excessive, as high as $17,000,000 to build this highway, a highway that would be used almost exclusively by the automobilists of the country and of very little practical value, needing constant care and involving a great expense on the part of the Government to keep it in good condition.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. . I will.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman think that these people back of the memorial highway, including the automobile association, are trying to use this money for the purpose of committing the Federal Government to the construction of highways? In other words, are they not using this memorial highway as a starter, an entering wedge, to be a precedent in the future in order to get money out of the Federal Treasury and commit the Government generally to the building of ordinary highways?

Mr. SHARP. In answer I will say that I have heard that intimated several times by Members. I do not know how much truth there is in it. I would dislike to ascribe that unworthy motive to the advocates of this plan, but I will say that if this is true they are most unfortunate in advocating the proposition, because, as I have just said, if they wish to prove the utter failure and folly of Federal cooperation, let them have this highway, which would cost at a fair estimate, I take it, $30,000 a mile for the 70 miles, traversing across valleys, over hills, and into a sparsely settled part of our country, connecting towns of no commercial importance, and serving absolutely no utilitarian purpose.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not want to attribute any improper motives, but still I believe that is one of their main objects.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, as my time is limited, I can not devote it to hearing counter discussions, and I will ask gentlemen not to interrupt me further. One of the estimates, I believe, places this cost at $170,000 per mile. I do not know how correct that is. I have little choice between a project of that character, which signifies nothing of additional glory to the memory of the man to whom it is consecrated and the wasteful extravagance of piling one marble block upon another along the banks of the Potomac, costing an equally large sum of money. Each is extravagant, inappropriate, and an improper waste of the people's money. I advocate a utilitarian purpose for which the $2,000,000 to be expended in this memorial may be used. If you ask whether I have any precedent for the cooperation of the Federal Government in the project which I advocate, I shall point back to 1862, to the Morrill Act. That name, with great propriety, could equally as well be spelled M-o-r-a-l. Senator Morrill introduced the bill, which provided for cooperation of the Federal Government with the governments of the different States in an educational scheme. Let me briefly read that portion, referring to the real object of that statute, in so far as its purpose is concerned. I might say that it grants 30,000 acres of land to the several States for each Senator and Member of Congress to which the States are entitled by the apportionment under the census of 1860, and which may desire to partake of the benefits of the act in the building of public educational institutions.

I quote from the act as follows:

To the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical subjects and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts in such manner as the legislatures of the States may prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

It was only the day before yesterday that Senator Roor, of New York, introduced a bill calling for permission for the erection in the District of Columbia of a building, to be known as the George Washington Memorial Building and to cost not less than $2,000,000, not, however, to be assumed by the Government,

Whereas George Washington, on July 9, 1799, said: "It has been my ardent wish to see a plan devised on a liberal scale which would spread systematic ideas through all parts of this rising empire," and it was Washington's wish to materially assist in the development of his beloved country through the promotion of science, literature, and art, and with the firm conviction that "knowledge is the surest basis of public happiness."

Those words were uttered by George Washington in 1799, but a brief time before his death. They are living words to-day, and I appeal to you gentlemen of this House to observe them Shall we not divert the money appropriated for this purpose, and which the Memorial Commission now seeks to put into another useless pile of marble, and convert it into a living memorial of perpetual beneficence?

To-day, on every hand, the question of vocational education is being taken up by federations of labor, farmers' organizations, and noted educators. The people of the country are alive to the situation that our present educational system does not come up to what it ought to be in order to properly fit the average boy for future usefulness if he is unable to pursue his studies beyond the grammar grade. I will say, in this connection, that it may be a surprising statement to those who have not studied the question, but more than eighty out of every hundred of our school children leave school before they finish the grammar grade. I listened the other day in this House to a most able argument in favor of the establishment of a better banking system. Germany was quoted as the ideal. I again heard to-day, in the discussion of the Army bill, Germany and other European countries quoted as models in military organization. Mr. Chairman, with such precedents before me, may I not say that Germany also takes the front rank of all nations to-day in its industrial educational schools. They are models of practical utility, and sooner or later this country will have to adopt that kind of a system or we will be very greatly distanced in industrial development in spite of our splendid advantage in natural resources. Gov. Foss, of Massachusetts, voices the need of such an educational system in one of his recent speeches, as follows:

Of the social causes of poverty I am particularly interested in two. The first is the comparative failure of our present educational system to give to boys and girls such vocational training as best fits them for the callings which the great majority of them enter. I mean training that will fit the pupils for the so-called skilled occupations and will so equip them that upon leaving school they will have the best possible prospect for future usefulness and independence. In this lack of vocational training we find, I believe, one fruitful cause of many aimless careers which can lead to nothing that is good and must tend to swell the number of ineffectives.

These words express my views. It is a question which is being agitated by earnest men and educators throughout the country. If I had time I would be very glad to quote something from the hearings in the Senate of last year upon the bill S. 4675, which provided along certain lines for national cooperation in educational work, but I will only ask the privilege of incorporating them in the RECORD.

[Statement of Dr. George E. Myers, principal of McKinley Manual Training School, Washington, D. C., at the Senate hearings pertaining to the bill (S. 4675) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades and industry, and home economics in secondary schools, preparing teachers for these vocational subjects etc.] subjects, etc.]

subjects, etc.]

The bill before you for consideration is concerned with the place of the industries in public education. This bill is one of the results of a widespread belief that our public schools have failed, on the one hand, to prepare our youth for successful industrial careers, and failed, on the other hand, to provide our industries with properly trained workers. In fact, public education is under the charge of having robbed and cheated both—our youth by wasting their time, our industries by making them bear the expense of schools engaged in enticing away from the industries as many of the youth as possible and in making others dissatisfied with industrial occupations. It is the purpose of this bill to assist the States to remedy these conditions.

Congress committed itself to the policy of Federal support for industrial education nearly 50 years ago by passing the Morrill Act of 1862. The wisdom of this policy was reaffirmed when the second Morrill Act was passed in 1890, and again when the Nelson amendment was adopted in 1907—measures which distribute to the different States and Territories nearly $2,500,000 annually from the Federal Treasury for the support of public education in agriculture and the mechanic arts. That this money goes to colleges and not to high schools and normal schools does not in any way affect the fact that Congress has committed itself to the policy of Federal support of industrial education.

* * Presidents Eliot, Schurman, and Wilson, speaking from the viewpoint of the universities, have proclaimed that the ultimate aim in education should be to give "every individual a chance to attain a maximum of personal culture and social efficiency according to his intellectual gifts and the strength of his will." They are echoing the demand that Huxley voiced long ago when he named the standard of success in education as "not the survival of the fittest, but rather the fitting of as many as possible to survive."

* * Organized labor, regarded for years as the opponent of trade training in schools, put itself on record in this vital matter through an able commission of leaders in the trade-union movement, who have carefully studied for the past three years the problems in volved in relating to industry the educational training, both fundamental and technical, needed to meet the present situation. It has embodied its findings in the special report of this committee on industrial education appointed by the American Federation of Labor, and has clearly stated the attitude of organized labor and other experts in the field of vocational education toward the problem of trade training. As a broad and statesmanlike interpretation of the labor movement's need and of its real attitude toward education, this document is a startling prophecy of what I am pleased to call "new trade-unions m'— a trade-unionism that cherishes the educational trade-training ideal for American hand-working wage earners, as well as the ideal of an eight-hour day, a minimum wage, and fair contractual relations and conditions for labor. * * *

IStatement of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, at the same hearings.]

The subject of industrial education is much broader than is often appreciated. It means a great deal more than the establishment of another kind of school. It ought to suggest a scheme of education that will make it worth while for all children to remain in school longer, and to provide for the children of the masses and for the great manufacturing and constructive industries something equivalent to what the States are now doing for the children of the well-to-do in fitting them for professional and managerial careers. It must be remembered that the spirit of industrial education is to teach in terms of daily life, and teachers ought to have knowledge of the conditions and requirements of this life—a life largely industrial.

The prosperity of a nation depends upon its industrial and commercial success, and in respect to these success depends upon the training and intelligence of its citizens. It is therefore plainly evident that a national educational system determines its destiny.

I am a strong believer in that old adage that "To learn more is to earn more." * * * *

Mr. SHARP. On March 3, 1791, the city of Washington was established by law as our National Capital.

Mr. Chairman, I sometimes speculate as to what action may be taken by future Congresses if they should choose to turn their attention to considering the question of moving the seat of government far to the westward. With almost daily proposed amendments to the Constitution being thrown into our legislative hopper, ranging all the way from stingily denying our future Presidents more than two terms of office down to changing the date of their inauguration, I have sometimes wondered whether the very sacredness of the Capitol itself will be proof against the desire for changing an established institution. that day when the State of Texas, an empire in itself, with a territory the size of France, with resources capable of sustaining the forty millions of people of which France boasts, with our center of population moving to the westward, and the problem of feeding our people becoming more important—and we can only feed them from the fertile plains of the West—I have sometimes wondered whether the increasing representation from those States will not some day insist that our National Capital shall be transferred to the banks of the Mississippi. When that day comes are we to behold the melancholy spectacle of deserted marble halls and the great monuments we are now erecting left only as remnants of by-gone glories, as now we see the monuments of ancient Rome on the banks of the Tiber, or shall we have two capitals, one reflecting the original glory of Rome itself, the other a sort of a Byzantine annex, moved far to the westward?

In a few days comes another birthday of the martyred President, for whom this proposed memorial is to be built and dedicated; and within a few months will roll around the fiftieth anniversary of the declaration of that immortal emancipation proclamation which broke asunder the bonds of slavery. I not express the hope that, before that time shall come, we shall by action of this Congress be enabled to lay the foundation stones of such an institution to his memory as shall pre-eminently emphasize the principles to which his life was consecrated—that of equal opportunity—and the beneficience of whose work shall be as lasting as the memory of his service?

One thought in conclusion before my time shall close. Outside of the very life itself of Abraham Lincoln and his services consecrated to the perpetuation of the Union there is probably not one single act of his that will stand out so conspicuously for all time as his great speech on the battle field of Gettysburg, and of that speech its concluding sentence. If I may be permitted to paraphrase his language, may I say in behalf of the resolution which I have presented, contemplating the erection of a great industrial vocational school as an appropriate monument to his memory, that such an institution is preeminently "of the people" because it is fairly representative in every sense of the word of their character and needs as an industrial Nation; it is a monument "by the people" because it is a generous contribution by them and authorized to be constructed by them through their chosen Representatives in Congress; and, above everything else, preeminently it is "for the people" because the beneficence of its purpose may be enjoyed by all without restriction. And lastly, may I not say that, as long as "knowledge is still a power in the land," such an institution and its work "shall not perish from the earth." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to my colleague on the committee, Mr. Burke of Pennsylvania.

[Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania addressed the committee. Appendix.1

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Redfield].

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] on the 30th of January made an attractive and forceful speech on certain phases of the tariff question, in which he asked some questions which, it seems to me, are worthy of a definite and detailed reply. And I desire, since my time is very brief, to speak without interruption and in an effort to make plain to this House what the answers are to the questions of the gentleman from Connecticut. I think that actual experiences in matters of this kind are perhaps the best illustrations that can be given.

In the month of October last, on returning from an absence to my office in New York, I found that two orders had been received from our representative in the city of Vienna. goods were sold in the open market, but the point was this: That our representative in Vienna at that time, having begun in a very small way, had never received the lowest prices we quote in foreign markets, those lowest prices being almost identical with or a fraction higher than those we quote in America. This man had never received those lowest prices, and upon his taking these orders, against German and Austrian competition, I wrote him at once that, in view of the fact that he had shown himself able to sell in Austria against German competition, he was fairly entitled to the prices that we give to our foreign agents; and thereupon reduced the price to him 10 per cent, for he had made these sales on the basis of quotations which were 10 per cent higher than those which were regular abroad.

It seems to me, as a manufacturer, Mr. Chairman, strange to the last degree that an industrial people which last year exported a thousand million dollars of manufactured products should need to be protected against anybody to whom they are selling. I do not, I confess, understand why our great manufacturing houses which are selling in every land in open competition with men of all the world can not from that very fact hold our place against them in the open field. I know it is true that

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentle-an what was sold abroad. We do not know what the genman what was sold abroad. tleman's agent sold.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. REDFIELD. I am sorry to say so, but I will have to delay my answer.

It is true that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said that this great export trade of ours was largely due to the Payne tariff law. To my thinking and according to my experience of some 30 years in factory life, it is much more largely due to the skill of American mechanics, induced and rewarded by the existence of high wages. In response to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Ames] let me say the goods sold abroad, in this case, were fans and blowers.

It happened also that in the second week in December I received an inquiry for engines from France. And now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am going to refer to a number of actual commercial transactions. I shall not mention the names of the houses, but I will give to any gentleman on either side of the House in personal confidence the details, the names of the houses, the names of the men, and the prices, so far as they are mentioned.

In the second week in December I received an inquiry from large French manufacturer of machinery for engines, and quoted him a price for 40 engines. I received a cable order for 5 as a sample lot, 1 of each of 5 sizes; and the only confor 5 as a sample lot, I of each of 5 sizes; and the only condition made was that the engines should run three months continuously, day and night, without stopping and without injury. The order was accepted, for that specification is an easy one, and it has been filled. The goods were delivered in Havre at a price corresponding precisely to the American figure, or within a very few cents on a hundred dollars higher than the American figures.

I have before me a copy of Dun's Review for January, 1912, from which I purpose to read a brief paragraph headed "Making a Specialty of Exporting Carriages"

ing a Specialty of Exporting Carriages":

Buyers of standard articles, such as carriages, have not failed to appreciate the fact that the improved facilities of transportation, which make quicker delivery of merchandise and prompter mail service possible, are every year bringing them nearer to the large American manufacturers. As an example of this, the W. H. Murray Manufacturing Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, state that a prospective buyer in the Argentine Republic Chile, or any other remote part of South America will receive a copy of their catalogue within 30 days of the date his letter asking for same reaches them, while in another 60 days the goods will be in his possession. A similar situation exists with regard to Australia. New Zealand, South Africa, and other distant regions, and the result is that the buyer is frequently in possession of the goods much more quickly than they could have been procured from a small local coach builder and at prices from 25 to 50 per cent less.

The gentleman asked. Why do we not put locomotives into

The gentleman asked, Why do we not put locomotives into Germany, France, Russia, and England? I shall address myself squarely to the question.

As regards France, we have put locomotives into that country. A large American locomotive builder a few years ago received an order for 30 locomotives for the Paris-Orleans Railway. A young French engineer was sent here to inspect the construction of the engines and to report upon the results. A similar order, at the same time or in succession thereto, was placed with locomotive builders in Germany and in France itself-90 engines in all.

The French inspector remained here during the construction of the locomotives built in this country. He then went to Germany and to the French works. He made a report to the railroad company, a copy of which is in possession of a friend of mine in this country. His report said that, although the American locomotive builders paid three times the daily wage to their workmen that was paid in Germany, the cost of the loco-motives was substantially the same in the two countries. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the annual report of the American Iron and Steel Association, on page 43, appear these words:

Of the 354 locomotives exported in 1910, 85 were sent to Brazil. 81 to Canada, 44 to Mexico, 26 to the Central American States and British Honduras, 23 to Cuba, 10 to Argentina, 13 to South American States other than Brazil and Argentina, 18 to China, 15 to Japan, and 39 to other countries.

I might mention, as an incident of the exports of manufactures during the year 1910, taken from page 42 of this same report, 30,977 cash registers and 18,866 stationary engines.

As regards selling locomotive engines in England, I presume the gentleman knows-he should have known-that the English locomotive is of a distinctly different type from the American locomotive. The two are unlike in principle.

The American locomotive is built upon the principle of the three-legged stool. By means of equalizing levers the American locomotive is so constructed that it will, wherever it finds three bearing points, like a three-legged stool, bear solidly upon the track. For that reason it is suited to operate on our sharp curves and our rougher roads.

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

Mr. REDFIELD. I can not yield, as my time is too short.

The English locomotive is a machine built in a rigid frame without axles which revolve upon a pivot. There are not bogie trucks, as they are called yonder, upon the English engine. The English locomotive would be useless on our roads. It has been tried and found wanting.

The method of construction of English locomotives and their relative weight make them impossible of service here. would not be bought if there was no duty and the transportation on them was paid. An American locomotive, for like reasons, is not suited at all to English ideas. Over there they still use and build largely the inside-connected locomotives. while here they are all outside-connected. Over there they still use to some degree the single driving wheel on a side, and no engines of that type are used in this country. There is an entire and distinct antagonism of type between the two countries, and that explains in a single breath why we do not sell locomotives in Great Britain.

There are other reasons, one of which is that a locomotive is a very heavy thing to transport, and it would be for that single reason an almost impossible thing to sell a machine weighing 50, 70, or 80 tons, because of the transportation charges, close to another shop_in which locomotives were being built, where these transportation charges all not reason to the second state of the s built, where these transportation charges did not come into effect.

But as regards sales to Germany and Russia, the transportation reason is alone sufficient. We can not afford to pay transportation on locomotives for 4,000 miles, into a country where they are built right at hand, without having to carry that transportation charge, and the tariffs of those countries are, of course, against us. But wherever there comes an even field against the English, German, or French locomotive, there we have met them squarely and fairly and beaten them squarely and fairly. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

At the risk of wearying the House a little bit, I want to establish some of these things, so that they will never more be questioned here. I have before me the Far Eastern Review, published at Shanghai, November, 1909.

On page 241 is a photograph of an American locomotive and train that belong to the Kiangsu Railway.

At the bottom of the same page is found the photograph of a train of cars made at Wilmington, Del. On page 249 is a thirdclass passenger coach made by the Pullman Co., of Chicago; this is for the Chekiang Railway. And on the same page is a first-class passenger coach built by the Pullman Co., of Chicago.

On page 248 is a photograph of a box freight car built by the American Car & Foundry Co. for the Chekiang Railway. On the same page is another photograph of a Pullman firstclass passenger coach sold to the same railway. On page 255 is a passenger coach built at Wilmington, Del. On page 256 is an illustration of a Baldwin locomotive built to run on the Sunning Railway.

On page 280 are four distinct types, and page 281, a fifth type, of different classes, all of American locomotives sold to the Manchurian and Chinese railways.

In the same publication, two years later, namely, in November, 1911, I find, on pages 194 and 195, eight illustrations representing eight different railways, showing eight different kinds of American locomotives running on these roads, and purchased in competition with Great Britain and with Germany.

I now turn to an extract on the same general theme from the testimony taken before the committee on the Taylor and other systems of shop management, showing the experience of an American workman in London:

American workman in London:

Let me tell you my experience. When I got over there I went to the office and handed in your letter and they treated me very nicely; then they took me to the shop and got out a man named Thomas. He was the foreman, or die sinker, at any rate; and then they had my man tell Thomas how many hours each job would take. And my man said: "I went you one better, Mr. Brombacher; instead of adding one-third I added 50 per cent." The employer said: "What do you think of that, Thomas?" And Thomas said: "I would rather see him do it with his hands than with his mouth." That was nuts for my man, and he went through the thing and got right down to dots, and when he got through there was another seance, and when that was over the employer says, "Now, Thomas, what have you to say?" He says, "If you expect me to work the gait that fellow worked I'll chuck the job."

On the same page from the same testimany under outh Mr.

On the same page, from the same testimony, under oath, Mr. Brombacher says-Mr. Brombacher, I may say, is a practical manufacturer and mechanic. The extract reads:

The CHAIRMAN. Is it your idea that American workmen accomplish more in the same time than the English workmen?

Mr. Brombacher. Bless your soul, why, sure. You needn't go as far as England. Go up in Canada. I have sold in Canada units delivered in Canada duty and freight paid and undersold Canadian manufacturers of same engines 5 per cent and got the order.

We had before that same committee only a few days ago a gentleman who has spent some years of his life in manufacturing locomotives, and in answer to the question from me as to what proportion of direct labor cost there was in the modern locomotive, he said 18 per cent. So, in competition there is 82 per cent to come and go on instead of talking about reduction of wages. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I find in the Iron Age, for February 1, 1912, this statement:

The rolling stock of the Central Railway of Brazil consists of the following: Four hundred and twenty-five locomotives, ranging from 45 to 150 tons. * * * All locomotives owned by the Central Railway of Brazil are of American manufacture, built by the Baldwin or the American Locomotive Co.

The second question that the gentleman asked had to do with sewing machines. I sometimes think there is a strangely ordered supervision of affairs which seems to make things happen at unexpected times. I am going to tell in a few moments what happened the evening on which the gentleman spoke in my office. There are more reasons than those stated then why the Singer Co. established great works in Glasgow. A first and a great reason is they must manufacture in Great Britain, You can not own English patents perelse their patents lapse. manently without manufacturing the goods in Great Britain itself. It is for that reason-

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman object to an interruption?

Mr. REDFIELD. I do.

Mr. HILL. I simply wanted the gentleman to make the statement correct, that is all.

Mr. REDFIELD. It is for that same reason that my own concern is at this moment erecting a factory in Canada to manufacture goods in Canada, because, under the Canadian patent law, we must manufacture within the Dominion of Canada, else we lose our patent. I say we must manufacture. We must manufacture or arrange to have the goods manufactured. The goods must be made there. But there are other reasons, among them those of the preferences in favor of goods made in Great Britain, of which I have spoken. There is another very strong reason, and that arises from the spirit which appears in signs which are exhibited all over Great Britain. In every hamlet in the country you read, "Buy British goods." That scheme is worked to the fullest limit all over Great Britain, and is taken advantage of, and very properly so, by English manufacturers. These are sufficient reasons for establishing a factory in Great Britain. They have led me and my associates to establish a factory in Canada.

But I will tell you plainly that, in the statement made by the president of our company to our board of directors as to the reasons for establishing that factory in Canada, the Canadian tariff played no very important part. We are abundantly able to do as Mr. Brombacher did, manufacture goods in this country and ship them into Canada and sell through the tariff.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HILL the evening of the day when the gentleman made his interesting speech about sewing machines. This happened in the presence of three witnesses, and most unexpectedly to me. A gentleman, representing one of the large American sewing-machine companies, called, asking if I could assist him in having removed certain restrictions placed by the District of Columbia upon his goods, and when I took steps to get those restrictions removed, he got fairly confidential with me, though he did not say that it was confidential at all. He said what he did in the presence of three others. I said to him, "What is the lowest price at which you will sell me a sewing machine?" He replied that it was $24. I said, "I do not mean the retail price; I mean a price by the hundred, for manufacturing purposes." He said, "I will sell them to you for $18." I said, "That is a high-class machine. You make a cheaper machine than that."

"Yes, we do." "What will you sell me a hundred of the cheap machines for?" "I will sell them to you for $10 apiece." He then said, "We sell them all over Germany and Russia; they can not compete with us either in price or in quality, and we need no protection." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, finally, I pass to the statement made by the gentleman that the speech which I was so unfortunate to deliver on the 12th of June, 1911, had been "absolutely destroyed and overthrown" by the Tariff Board in their report, and I assert, and at some future day I am going to take the privilege of proving, that every essential principle laid down by me on the 12th of June, and reasserted by me on the 1st of August, is broadly and strongly sustained by the report of the Tariff Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I said at that time that if there were given scientific management-not meaning by that any technical thing, but management which knows its wayconstant and careful study of operations and details of cost, modern building and equipment, proper arrangement of plant, proper material, ample power, space, and light, a high wage rate means inevitably a low labor cost per unit of product and a minimum of labor cost; and I turn to the Tariff Board report and put opposite that this statement from page 15 of Volume I:

Wages are in themselves no necessary indication of relative cost of couction. Frequently it is found that high wages and low labor cost go together.

And also this statement, on page 23:

The productive efficiency per one man-hour * * * show wide differences in efficiency and cost, but indicate in general that the lowest labor costs per pound were in mills paying the highest wages.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Finally, I wish to read this statement of Mr. James M. Swank, general manager of the American Iron and Steel Association, concerning the Republican platform adopted at Chicage, ciation, concerning the Republican platform adopted at Chicage, and with this I shall close, Mr. Chairman:

One objection to the declaration in the Chicago platform above quoted is that the cost of production either at home or abroad is never a fixed quantity, but is always a shifting quantity. The cost of production of any manufactured product varies in all manufacturing countries from year to year and often from month to month, as everybody knows. Shall we have a sliding-scale tariff adapted to these varying costs? If not, what becomes of the Chicago plan? Then, again, the cost of production in one foreign country differs from that in another country, as, for instance, in Great Britain and Germany. Which country is to serve as a guide in the construction of a new tariff—

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. REDFIELD. No; excuse me. [Reading:]

Mr. REDFIELD. No; excuse me. [Reading:]

And, again, in ascertaining the cost of production either at home or abroad, which mill or factory or shop cost sheet is to be taken as a guide in the adjustment of duties—that which possesses special advantages or that which does not?

Another and an equally fatal objection to the Chicago plan of framing tariff schedules is that various devices are resorted to in some foreign countries to effect sales of their products abroad at prices below the cost of production. It is well known that special railroad freight rates are made by the German Government on State railroads to facilitate the sales abroad of German products, and that syndicates exist in that country which also stimulate these sales by sharing the losses entailed in selling abroad at lower than home prices. Are the framers of our tariff to take account of these helps to the foreign trade of Germany or of similar helps to the foreign trade of other countries? What is to be the measure of protection against the dumping on our markets of foreign products so sold or of any foreign products that may be sent to this country to be sold at prices below the cost of production to get rid of a surplus or to meet a financial necessity? The Chicago platform is silent on these questions.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN].
Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, some time ago I introduced a bill (H. R. 12408) the purpose of which is to regulate transactions on the produce exchanges of this This bill, if enacted into law, will confine transac-Mr. REDFIELD: No; the gentleman must excuse me. I country. This bill, if enacted into law, will confine transachave come now to the incident that happened in my office on tions on the exchanges to crop products actually in existence and ready for delivery, fixing proper penalties for violations of its provisions.

At the same time I introduced this bill-July 12, 1911-I knew in a general way the evils of exchange methods, but their enormity was not known to me fully until the closing months of that year.

Only a few years ago a large per cent of the lands and homes of southern farmers were under mortgage. Reduced to poverty by the war, the southern soldier came home to enlist in an industrial struggle full of deprivation and little less terrible in its effects than the scenes of blood and carnage through which he had passed. Cotton, by reason of its climatic adaptability and ready market value, is the natural southern crop, and its cultivation offered the only hope to the southern farmer after the War of Secession. In the history of its decline in price to less than half the cost of production could be written a history of deprivation, suffering, and even want never before experienced by a people of like refinement and intelligence. Northern cotton mills were reaping a harvest. They extended their investments to the South and, North and South, mill interests flourished as never before in the history of this country. Southern homes were swept from their owners and converted into mill profits, and these in turn placed in new mills. Hard as was the struggle with the cotton farmer, it was not without its beneficial results in creating new demand for his cotton. Though many were driven from their farms to seek work in the mills, a better day began to dawn on those who remained on the farms. Increased manufacturing took cotton more and more out of the hands of the speculator, and it began to command a price that gave a profit to the producer. Mortgages, yellow with age, were lifted from southern homes, and peace and contentment could be read even in the lines of the furrowed

These dark days in our history will never be reenacted. Our people have concluded that they are entitled to a part of the profit of their crop. They have built warehouses and have so diversified their crops as to stand the assault of the cotton gambler, and a few of them, at least, will share the profit with him and the mill man.

Determined, then, as a few of our people are, to have a share in the profit on their cotton, the indignation they feel toward a lot of cotton gamblers whose market manipulations have robbed them of millions of dollars' profit on this crop is not hard to understand. The poorer, the more helpless, farmer had been squeezed out and forced to part with his crop below the cost of production. This has already been fed to the greedy bear.
Two years ago, when Messrs. Brown, Hayne, Scales, and others were charged with maintaining a pool to hold up the price of cotton, the Attorney General of the United States had them indicted before a Federal grand jury. And for whose protection? It was done at the instance of a lot of bear thieves who had systematically robbed southern planters for more than 30 years. The indictment alleged that mill men had to pay a fictitious price for their cotton, and many of them were forced to shut down. I know something of the inside history of that so-called bull pool, and I state as a fact that the idea originated with a southern mill president of La Grange, Ga .: that the details were worked out at Greenville, in my own State, and that so-called bull operators were brought in to aid the cotton manufacturers to uphold the price of raw material against the manipulations of a conscienceless band of

As evidence that the Attorney General proceeded at the instance of the bear clique on the exchange, not the character of the witnesses called. Without exception they were representatives of firms who had sold cotton heavily in excess of the supply. And note the further fact that not a single mill man appears in the list of witnesses. At the time the so-called "bull" pool came into existence the future cotton market was a cent a pound or more below the spot market, held down by the bear gambler. The dry-goods merchant wanted to base the price in buying on the future and not the spot-cotton market, and refused to buy except on that basis. This produced stagnation in the cloth market, and it was to eliminate this feature that mill men originated the so-called pool to maintain a parity between the spot and the future market.

But suppose American cotton mills were placed at a slight disadvantage by "bull" support of the market. Can the Attorney General be excused for protecting even them at the cost of millions to American commerce? When we consider that the United States raises 69.9 per cent of the world's supply of cotton and consumes only 24.7 per cent the magnitude of the injury done to American commerce and American business by the effort to depress the price of cotton is apparent. That his act did not reduce the price of cotton at the time more than 2 cents per pound is due to the stubborness with which Hayne, Brown, Scales, and others bought all actual cotton offered, instead of accepting settlement of margins, which is a trick of the trade to sell large quantities of cotton not in existence. Such a decline was confidently anticipated. A week before Brown and Hayne knew that they were going to be prosecuted bear" firm, in trying to get a certain party to sell the market, said:

I know something is going to happen that will cause a break in the market of from $100\ {\rm to}\ 200$ points.

Suppose the break had materialized. The result would have been, on a basis of a 12,000,000-bale crop and at a 2-cent decline, to give foreign spinners about $90,000,000 to save about $30,000,000, ostensibly to American spinners, really to Wall Street gamblers. Will the time never come when Government representatives and officers can see other interests than those that are centered in New York? Is the hard-working, respectable citizen of the United States to be held up by the Government and fleeced under its protecting arm?

The enormity of the Attorney General's act did not fully appear until the present crop was brought into sight.

The world's consumption of cotton, as stated in Bulletin 113, page 23, of the Department of Agriculture, is 21,000,000 bales. On the same page we find the statement:

It appears probable that 14,500,000 bales of American cotton can be absorbed during the year ending August 31, 1912.

In other words, the present crop will barely meet the demand, conditions being normal in other cotton-raising countries. But conditions are not normal in other cotton-raising countries.

In India, for instance, the crop is conceded to be short about 1,500,000 bales, and we have heard nothing of a large crop in any other part of the world. We raise, as heretofore stated, approximately 70 per cent, and this represents, say, 15,000,000 bales. The other cotton-producing countries raise 30 per cent, or 6,400,000 bales. The total, then, will be 21,400,000 bales as against a consumption of 21,000,000. But India, as stated, is 1,500,000 bales short, which, taken from the total supply, would seem to indicate a shortage in the world's supply of the crop of something like 1,100,000 bales of cotton. We need 21,000,000 bales of cotton, we have only 19,900,000 bales with which to supply them. In the face of these facts cotton has been hammered down to 8 cents per pound, 2 cents below the cost of production, by a merciless set of vampires.

Meaning no disrespect, but in criticism of the narrowness of the Attorney General's view and the shortsightedness of his policy, I charge that he, more than all other combined agencies, is responsible for this condition. His prosecution of the socalled bull element of the exchange has driven out competition and made the market a one-sided affair. No single operator can affect prices on the exchange; and no sane "bull" operator would enter a combination while he or his fellows were under prosecution by the Federal courts charged with this very offense. The "bears" may combine at will, but for the "bulls" to combine is in restraint of trade, is an affront to the gentlemen of Wall Street, and proper cause for Government inter-

What a spectacle.

Mr. Chairman, if the Attorney General concludes finally that he can not proceed against "bull" operators, I believe a committee of Congress should make investigation of exchange methods. If it is a fact that millions of bales of cotton are sold annually on the exchange that never had and were never intended to have existence, thereby abnormally depressing its price, then the evil should be eradicated. In the name of common decency, in consideration for the southern farmer, who contributes more to the export trade of the United States than half of the rest of this country combined, this piracy on his products should be stopped. If the cotton exchanges are to be one-sided affairs, dominated by the "bears," it would be infinitely better to abolish them altogether. Congress should know the facts, and, knowing them, should pass such legislation here as will protect the producers of this country.

A normal price for the present crop of cotton would have been 124 cents per pound. Much of it has sold as low as 8 cents per pound. Owing to bear manipulations, aided and abetted by the Government, the cotton producer has easily lost 3 cents per pound on the entire crop, or $215,000,000; and two-thirds of this amount, or approximately $145,000,000, has been given to foreign spinners.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I understand the gentleman introduced his bill some time ago.

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Yes.
Mr. TRIBBLE. Has the gentleman been able to get the Committee on Agriculture to investigate and report his bill?

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. No; I have been able to get no report at all from the committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. They had not investigated that, so far as the gentleman knows, so as to report that bill?

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. They have not, so far as I know. I would willingly accord sincerity of purpose to the Attorney General if, accepting this horn of the dilemma, he did not appear ridiculous in the sight of all good citizens, interested in the welfare of a common country. Perhaps, as a newspaper in my district tersely puts it: "He prefers the hug of the bear to the horns of the bull." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

While I thought the prosecution of Brown, Hayne, and Scales was little less than criminal, since the Attorney General has assumed the responsibility and given the "bears" the benefit of the Government's support, I could see no reason why the "bear" element, who had robbed the producing class of fully $3,000,000 should not also be prosecuted, and to that extent aid in demoralizing their robber band. With this idea in view, I directed a letter to the Attorney General, asking why these men should not be prosecuted. I have my letter to him and his I shall not read them, but will ask leave to print them in the RECORD.

In his reply the Attorney General says if he had evidence of the existence of a "bear" pool he would proceed against it, as he has proceeded against the so-called "bull" pool. While I can not furnish him such evidence as would be conclusive in court, such investigation as I have made convinces me that the evidence against the "bear" and "bull" elements of the exchanges is tangible alike; that the market can neither be boosted nor beared by one man [applause on the Democratic side]; that there are men on the exchanges who operate almost exclusively on the "bear" side and operate in collusion with other "bear operators; that these raids on the market are often planned months before the actual coup; and that the robber band planning them will use every possible instrumentality, including the Government, to carry out their damnable purposes. How many times have they had advance information of the Government reports. Who would deny that they have or have had agents in the statistical departments of this Government? Now, these facts are all known to the Attorney General, and yet he comes up with the prosecution of the "bull" clique in his right hand, and in his left with the lame excuse that he does not know who the "bears" are. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The regular "bear" cotton speculator is as well known in exchange circles as the officers of this Government are known to the people of Washington. I have here in my possession the names of several "bear" firms who will be found on the "bear" side of every important exchange transaction, and they were the immediate beneficiaries of the Government raid on the market two years ago. If the Attorney General will arraign his witnesses in the pending case and call on the parties under prosecution for evidence, and then rake the letter files of the "bear" element, as he did in the case of his prosecution of the "bulls," he will not be lacking for evidence. A "bear" pool was on, which held the future market a cent a pound below the spot market at the very time the Government began proceedings against the so-called "bull" clique, and that very act, as I have shown, gave rise to the so-called "bull" pool, as a defense measure, originating with the cotton mills.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, will my friend permit a question?

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is it not a fact that at the time the Attorney General prosecuted what is called the "bull" raid the spinners were taking cotton?

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Yes; I have just mentioned that Mr. HEFLIN. The spinners were taking this cotton? Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Certainly they were.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not had the pleasure of hearing all of my friend's speech; but has the gentleman heard of any grand-jury indictment of "bear" raids this fall?

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. There have been absolutely none, so far as I know.

Mr. HEFLIN. Since the gentleman called upon the Attorney General has he any reason to think that anybody in the Department of Justice has investigated and reported on a "bear"

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Not to my knowledge. I have heard of nothing of the sort. Of course the interest of the producer was not considered, and it is evident that the Attorney General's assertion that the prosecution was for the protection of the mill interests was at that time groundless. This letter of the Attorney General shows ignorance of conditions that is lamentable or bias that is unworthy an officer of this Government. I give my letter and his reply to the public for what they are worth. [Applause.]

The letters referred to are as follows:

ABBEVILLE, S. C., October 31, 1911.

Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Hon. George W. Wickersham.

Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I note that the case against the Wall Street "bulls" charging them with cornering cotton is still in the courts, and assume that you will push the prosecution to a conclusion.

While I do not concur in the opinion that it was the proper function of the Government to interfere with the enhanced value of a commodity that meant so much for the wealth of this country, I assume that you can justify the prosecution legally.

If, then, the Government had a legal right to proceed against a combination of speculators whose purpose was to force it, it has the same legal right to proceed against a combination whose purpose is to force down the price of the same commodity.

Of the American cotton crop, approximately one-half is sold in foreign markets. A decline of 2 cents per pound means the loss to this country of $60,000,000 and to the southern farmer of $120,000,000. It is certain that "bear" pressure on Wall Street has forced a decline of fully 3 cents per pound in the present market, thereby robbing the South of approximately $105,000,000 and giving it to foreign spinners. This decline has been brought about by the bear element overselling the market, publishing false or misleading statements, and combining to keep buyers out of the market. With no extensive knowledge of exchange methods, I think it is safe to cay that if a combination may advance the market a combination may likewise depress it, and the fact is it is now being done.

Then, should not the Government interpose? If it was right in the former instance it is right in this, and when the wealth of the Nation is threatened and the competency of southern homes is being absorbed by the foreigners, should not the Government at least place the weight of its influence and power with its own citizens? An investigation of "bear" tactics would probably reveal ample ground for criminal action against the leaders, and prosecution would probably dissolve the unfair combination and allow cotton

MR. WICKERSHAM'S REPLY.

Office of Attorney General, Washington, D. C., November 6, 1911.

Hon. WYATT AIKEN, M. C., Abbeville, S. C.

Hon. Wyatt Aiken, M. C.,

Abbeville, S. C.

My Dear Sir: I have your favor of 31st ultimo. I quite agree with you on the general proposition that if cornering a product which is dealt in in interstate commerce for the purpose of increasing its price is illegal, similar cornering for the purpose of depressing its price is illegal, similar cornering for the purpose of depressing its price is illegal, similar cornering for the purpose of depressing its price is illegal, similar cornering for the purpose of depressing of the price is leastly understood. A number of men get together and by their combined means or credit buy up enough of the commodity to control the market, withhold it from sale until the demand for it forces the price to the point at which they are willing to let it go, and thereby impose upon the manufacturer, who must use the product, the burden of an artificial price.

It is not so clear by what process a "bear pool" is organized or conducted, and I have no evidence in this department of a tangible character which enables me to form the opinion that any designated individuals have combined to depress the price of cotton below its normal figure. Moreover, it is not quite clear in my mind how such a "bear pool" can operate to restrain interstate commerce. I suppose the method by which such a combination would operate would be to throw upon the market at a given time a quantity of a commodity in excess of the demand, which would result in its being taken only at prices which the purchasers thought would enable them to sell at a profit.

I don't at all know what the practice is among the cotton growers in your State, for instance, respectfulg the sale of their product. When I last had occasion to examine the question, which was a few years ago, the crop was pretty generally sold to the cotton factors before it was picked, the price being based upon the prevailing price of the previous year, and increased or decreased according to the ratio between the crop produced in the country the preceding year a me any detailed information available to you, going to show the existence and operation of any combination formed for the purpose of depressing the price of cotton.

In the proceeding against those engaged in the so-called "bull cotton pool" which the Government brought a year or so ago, the United States circuit court in New York held that "corners" were illegal and immoral, but that a combination formed to corner and enhance the price of cotton did not operate in restraint of interstate commerce, even though, as was alleged in the indictment, the necessary effect as well as the intended purpose of the combination was to increase the price which the spinners had to pay, and, as a matter of fact, by so increasing the price a large percentage of the spinners had refrained from manufacture and had thereby been restrained in commerce among the several States. An appeal from the judgment of the court, sustaining a demurrer to the essential counts of the indictment, has been argued in the Supreme Court of the United States and is now under consideration. If the court shall decide the essential question involved and not let the case go off on a technical matter of pleading, we may have some light which will be of aid in the enforcement of the law against other combinations of a like character. But, aside from that, the greatest difficulty I should have in dealing with the case you mention is what I have outlined above.

[Mr. BULKLEY]

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of inquiry, recently transmitted to the House a letter on the subject of the distribution of the mobile Army of the United States, and in that letter he recommended the immediate abandonment and sale of 18 Army posts, to be followed later by the abandonment of 7 more definitely named posts, as well as several others to be eliminated after a careful military study of the relative advantages of existing posts.

The mobile Army within the United States is now distributed among so many widely scattered posts that economy of administration is impossible. There is an excessive waste in the cost of transportation of men and of supplies of all kinds, many of the posts being extremely remote from advantageous markets. waste in transportation alone is believed to exceed $2,000,000 a year. There is also great waste in the cost of maintenance, because most of our Army posts are beautiful parks with great expanses of lawn and miles of roads, sidewalks, water systems, and sewers to be maintained at public but without commensurate public benefit, and certainly with no military benefit whatever. The annual saving which would result from concentrating the mobile Army into seven or eight large posts located in centers of supply is estimated by the Secretary of War at more than $5,500,000, or about one-fifth of the entire cost of the mobile Army.

Here is, indeed, an opportunity for a large economy in our annual Army appropriations, but the economy is possible only through a radical change in the arrangement of Army posts, a change which would involve the abandonment of many posts now in fairly good condition, and at the same time an initial expense in establishing or enlarging the posts which may be selected for permanent occupation. In this connection, the annual report of the Secretary of War calls attention to the fact that $94,000,000 have been invested in Army posts, exclusive of posts in the Philippine Islands. It would be a bold proposition to suggest the abandonment of so large an investment. But, fortunately, no such proposition is involved in the concentration plan outlined by the Secretary in his recent letter. To make this clear let us analyze the $94,000,000 investment and determine what part of it would be unaffected by the proposed concen-

More than $3,000,000 represents cost of posts already abandoned, so that the investment in occupied posts is only about $91,000,000. Of this about $1,000,000 is invested in military prisons, $2,250,000 in Army hospitals, and $500,000 in the Military Academy at West Point. Posts in outlying Territories—Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico—represent an investment of over $2,000,000, and three and one-half millions is invested in supply and remount depots and headquarters. Posts and fortifications of the Coast Artillery have cost about twentyfive and three-quarter millions. Adding together these invest-ments which would not be affected by the concentration we find that in all $35,000,000 must be deducted from the $91,-000,000 invested in occupied posts, leaving a total of $56,000,000 invested in the mobile Army posts which would be involved in the concentration plan.

The plan proposed by the Secretary of War contemplates the retention for special purposes of certain posts outside of the seven or eight main posts in which the bulk of the Army is to concentrated. Forts Oglethorpe and Riley, according to the program, would be retained as Cavalry posts, and Fort Sill as a school of Artillery and musketry fire. It is recommended that garrisons be maintained at Forts Bliss and Huachuca to patrol the Mexican frontier, and at Fort Myer for escort and ceremonial duties in Washington. These six forts represent an investment of eight and one-half millions of dollars.

Fort McPherson, which cost $1,000,000, and Fort Sam Houston, which cost three and a half million, are definitely recom-mended as permanent posts. Either Fort Lawton or Vancouver Barracks, or both, should be retained, says the Secretary, and one or both of the Presidios of San Francisco and Monterey. Either Fort Sheridan, Fort Benjamin Harrison, or Columbus Barracks will be selected for permanent occupation, as will at least one post out of a group situated in Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa. Assuming that in these doubtful cases the selections are made so as to save in each case the post representing the largest investment, Vancouver Barracks, the Presidio of San Francisco, Fort Sheridan, and Fort Leavenworth would be chosen for permanent occupation. The aggregate cost of these is eight and one-half millions. It is suggested that Forts Omaha, Crook, and Des Moines are so near Fort Leavenworth that all might be retained and used together as a group.

These three last-named forts cost nearly $3,000,000.

The total aggregate cost of the mobile army posts which would thus almost necessarily be retained is $24,500,000. Deducting this from the $56,000,000 invested in posts now occupled by the mobile army leaves $31,500,000, which is about the cost of the posts which would ultimately have to be abandened in order to carry out the plan of concentration.

There should, perhaps, be a brief explanation of what this $31,500,000 investment means. It is simply the total cost of land and construction work in those posts which ought to be abandoned for the sake of economy and effectiveness in the Army. This cost figure does not give the slightest hint which would help one to make a guess as to the actual value of the property to-day. In some cases the land on which posts are situated has increased in value since its purchase, and in many cases the land cost the Government nothing, so that there can be no doubt but that the land on which these posts are situated could be sold for much more than it cost. On the other hand, a sale would show a heavy loss on the construction work, both because of ordinary depreciation and because of the unsuitability of many of the post buildings and works for any other purpose. For all practical purposes the real cost of making the proposed change in the distribution of the Army would be the cost of the necessary additions and improvements to the posts to be retained, minus the selling price of the abandoned posts. As yet I have seen no data on which an intelligent estimate of this cost could be made. It is quite conceivable that the difference might actually be in favor of the Government, as it is probable that little, if any, real estate would have to be bought to effect the concentration. In any event it is safe to say that the cost of making the change would be saved in the course of a very few years.

Great as would be the economy made possible by this concentration plan, and important as economy is in these days of extravagant Government expenditures, the money saving is still of far less importance than the increased military effectiveness which would result from concentration into larger posts. If our Army is merely a force of police or constabulary, then $90,000,000 a year is far too much to pay for it. And if it is to be made a competent army, able properly to defend the Nation in case of war, then it must be so distributed as to permit of its being trained and disciplined in the tactical units which must necessarily be used in modern warfare; that is to say, in brigades and divisions.

On the necessity of concentration in larger posts in order to provide for the proper military training of the Army, let me quote here from the testimony of the Chief of Staff before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department:

Committee on Expenditures in the War Department:

Gen. Wood. The scattered condition of our Army has rendered instruction by officers in command of large bodies of troops practically impossible, except on the rare occasions of joint maneuvers with the militia. The great objection to the small post, from an economical standpoint, is that it requires practically the same machinery as a large post, and from a military standpoint it is undesirable, as it tends to inefficiency because of the small size of the garrison. A relatively large percentage of the men are occupied in what we call police work—that is, the repairing of roads, walks, the general cleaning up of the posts, and duties incident to the preservation of grounds and buildings—and the detachment of a large percentage of the men from each organization for this work, thereby reducing the number present for practical military instruction, is not only discouraging to the officers, but discouraging to the men. You take a battalion post, for instance, with companies of 65 men each; a company commander who can get out for drill more than 25 or 30 men is fortunate. The result is that both officers and men lose interest in their work.

It is extremely difficult to simulate, with a small number of men, the presence of the full organization, and military instruction loses interest and becomes at times almost impracticable because of the small number of men present for the work. This is the general effect of small garrisons on military instruction. There is also another military feature of the small garrison which is very objectionable, and that is the small number of officers present, which does away to a large extent with progressive work; there is not that competition and interchange of ideas and emulation which is found in the larger garrison. So it can be stated, as a general proposition, that the small post is not only undesirable from an economic standpoint, but it is also undesirable from the standpoint of straight military efficiency.

The distribution of the mobile army in 49 widely scattered posts is at once inconsistent with economy and unfavorable for the development of military efficiency. Indeed, a force so distributed is not and can not be an army in the modern sense.

A modern army is a force of trained infantry, supported by field artillery and cavalry and assisted by certain special services which are concerned with the details of field engineering, communication, supply, and sanitation. There can be no prospect of victory in war unless the company and regimental units are welded into a properly coordinated and disciplined fighting machine before meeting the enemy. The Army of the United States is an aggregation of excellent soldiers, without proper coordination, and so distributed that effective team work is absolutely impracticable.

The armies of all other civilized nations are organized and distributed with a view to securing team practice in time of peace. A modern army, like that of Germany or Japan, will pass from the peace status to the war status without any change in organization or administration. With them the war teams and the peace teams are the same. Our Army, on the contrary, if war comes, must abandon a peace organization, which has no relation to war, and must take up a war organization which is not and can not be tried out in peace. Most of our higher officers must al andon onerous and absorbing peace duties, which involve no preparation for war, and must take up war duties for which they can have no practical preparation in peace. Nations like Germany and Japan and France not only use the same teams in war and peace, but they play the same game in war which they practice in peace. We must not only change the teams, but must begin playing a new game.

Organization and distribution are closely connected. sums of money are to be expended in training an army in time of peace, it is of first importance to distribute the Army so that it can be trained. This means concentration. It is not necessary that the whole Army be concentrated in one place; various considerations make it desirable to distribute the force in several groups, but it is absolutely imperative that each of the several groups should be an effective unit of instruction. Each group must therefore be a force of not less than a brigade, comprising all arms in which the essential idea of teamwork can be developed—infantry, cavalry, field artillery, engineers, signal troops, and sanitary troops, in their proper proportion to each other, and such a group must be habit-ually administered, disciplined, and instructed as a team. It is not essential that all of the troops in each group should be in the same post, but they should be so stationed that they can easily be assembled by marching; otherwise the essential subordination of the individual arm to the team will be impossible.

The present distribution of the mobile army is absolutely inconsistent with this idea of distribution for effectiveness. The Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery within the United States comprise not more than 27,000 men. Yet they are scattered in 49 different posts. In ro post is there more than a fragment of a team, and in no post are the three arms combined in proper proportions for tactical instruction. Nor is there a single group of posts so situated that their joint garrisons can form a tactical team by a reasonable march of concentration. It is obvious that a force so distributed is not an army in the sense that it has or can have proper training, and that the present distribution is as unfavorable for military effectiveness as it is for economical administration.

The history of the development of our Army during the past 25 years shows a steady evolution toward concentration into larger bodies of troops. Twenty-five years ago our Army was small and it was scattered, more or less necessarily, in many small posts, a large number of them garrisoned by only one company. With the end of Indian troubles and the settlement of the far West the necessity for large numbers of small posts ceased to exist, and after the War with Spain several battalion posts and a few regimental posts were established. Within the last five years the number of regimental posts has been increased and three brigade posts created. Yet there is no adequate provision for the joint action of Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery. The brigade posts of to-day mean simply large bodies of troops, sometimes comprising only one arm of service, or possibly comprising all the arms in improper tactical proportions. There is no post to-day which has a garrison as large as a brigade with all the arms of the service in their proper proportion.

The result of this system is that we have numerous more or less efficient units, which in case of emergency would have to be put hurriedly together to form a fighting machine. It requires no argument to show the fallacy of such a system. However efficient the independent units, it is quite impossible that they should all work together efficiently in war unless they had had the opportunity of practicing together in peace.

The smallest military unit which would in war include all arms-Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, and technical troops-is a division, comprising approximately 15,000 men. The military systems of England, Germany, France, Russia, and Japan provide for many such divisions, which are actually in being, as distinguished from our divisons, whch exist only in theory. All these powers assemble their divisions from time to time for military training. This is not done in our Army, and it was only with the greatest difficulty and after a delay which would have meant disaster in actual war that we were able to mobilize a single division, with its equipment, on the Mexican frontier last year. Not only were we unable to as-semble a single division fully equipped and ready for action. but such had been our military training that there were many officers in that mobilization who had never even seen a brigade of troops, much less a division.

We have but to examine the military preparation of either France or Germany to see what a really prepared nation does for its defense. Along the frontiers of these countries there are certain strategic points well fortified. Back of these, in proper strategic position, ready to move to any point on the frontier where aggression is attempted, we find not one but many divisions. And there are on file war plans which would put these divisions in motion at an instant's notice.

With us the coast fortifications take the place of the frontier forts of France or Germany, and they are well prepared to perform their functions in war. But it is obviously impossible that the whole of our long coast line should be so fortified as to prevent the possible landing of an enemy; and unless the mobile Army shall be concentrated in tactical units at strategic points from which troops can be hurried forward to any place where an assault might be made, we really have no system of national defense in the light of modern military practice. To oppose proper military concentration on the ground that it involves the abandonment of the fruits of ill-advised expenditures in the past or because of any mere local interest is to take a most short-sighted view of one of our greatest national problems, for unless we provide for national defense in a true military manner we shall be throwing good money after bad and exposing to needless risk the lives of thousands of our citizens who believe and have a right to believe that Congress is making every proper provision for the national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I now yield seven minutes to my colleague on the committee, Mr. Anthony.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute of my time to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] for his courtesy. In reply to the statement of the gentleman from New York, in which he said that the reason the Singer Sewing Machine Co. located in Glasgow was so as not to invalidate their patents because of the English law and that that of itself was a sufficient reason, I will say that the English law was not enacted until 1908, and I was in Glasgow in 1895 and the factory was there then and they were employing 5,000 people. That was 13 years before the re-strictive patent law went into effect. I just now telephoned the Patent Commissioner, and I find that it was enacted in 1907 and did not go into effect until January 1, 1908, and for years and years before that the factory at Glasgow was in full opera-

I stated the other day that we were not exporting locomotives to Europe, and the gentleman cited shipments of 359 locomotives last year, nearly all of which went to South America and other nonmanufacturing countries. I have just telephoned to the Bureau of Statistics, and they said that last year not a locomotive went to England, Germany, or France, but that one went to Austria. I will leave the facts as they are. plause.1

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. An-THONY] is recognized.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, during the present debate on the Army appropriation bill there has been afforded opportunity for criticisms of our Regular Army. These criticisms have come from two sources. They have come from men within the Army, men who are really friends of the Army, but who are criticizing it and calling it inefficient in order to lay the groundwork for a demand for a larger army. And, on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, these criticisms are coming from a class of people who are trying to disparage our Army for political reasons, and I simply want to make a general observation here that in my experience—and I have been familiar with the United States Army for the last 25 or 30 years-I know it has never been at a higher state of efficiency both as to officers and men than it is to-day. [Applause.] It is my belief that with all the vast amount of money that is expended through the various bureaus of the War Department that there is not a dollar of that money but that is honestly expended. At the beginning of this debate the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm] made some rather broad assertions in regard to the lack of business ability at the War Department. He made use of the expression:

In other words, the more the committee investigated-

Meaning the Committee on Expenditures in the War Depart-the less of business methods is discovered in the War Department.

He also said:

There has been no one before this committee, no officer connected with the War Department, who will assert that prior to the appropriations for 1909 and 1910 there was anything approaching a system of business methods in the department; but, as a matter of fact, it would appear to have been all but chaotic.

I want to say in answer to that, Mr. Chairman, and for the reason that at the head of one of the bureaus of the War Department there happens to be a distinguished officer who is a citizen of Kansas and once a resident of my home town, that there is at least one bureau of that Department against which this charge does not lie. There is that bureau of the War Department, the Bureau of Ordnance. for which it can be said that it has exceeded commercial enterprise in private life in the accuracy of its business transactions and the splendid results which have been brought to the Government. That bureau, under the able administration of Gen. Crozier, expends about $11,000,000 of the annual Army appropriation, and it is a fact that in every article furnished for the Government, manufactured by the Government, at the great arsenals and manufacturing establishments under that bureau, is produced at a less cost than the same article can be produced for in the commercial walks of life. I say that it is a rank injustice to make a broad charge of that kind against a department or a bureau of this Government, and I do not desire to allow it to go unchallenged. [Applause.]

For the information of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and for the information of this House I want to say that the statistics show, for instance, that in the manufacture of the various parts that go to make up the equipment of a 3-inch gun at the Government arsenal the cost of the 3-inch gun carriage is $2,500.60. The lowest purchase price of the same carriages from manufacturing concerns was $3,398, a saving of 35.3 per cent. In the manufacture of limbers, a part of a gun carriage, the Government cost was $689. The cost when purchased by private contract was $1,568, or a saving to the Government of over 127 per cent. In 3-inch caissons the cost at the Government arsenal was $1,128.67, and the cost by contract was $1,744, or a saving to the Government of 54 per cent.

The cost at these Government arsenals of the manufacture of .30-caliber ball cartridges, of which the Government makes about 70,000,000, was $26.95 a thousand. The cost to the Government of the 7,000,000 which it purchased from commercial manufacturing concerns was at the rate of $35.80 a thousand, or a saving to the Government of 32 per cent on those which it manufactured itself.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I will introduce into the RECORD a letter written to the chairman of the Committee on the Expenditures in the War Department from Gen. Crozier, in which the attention of that committee was called to certain inaccurate statements, which so far that committee has not deigned to notice:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, Washington, December 22, 1911.

Hon. Harvey Helm, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
DEAR SIR: I have read with interest your speech in the House of December 16 relating to the busines methods of the War Department, and note a series of statements of the tenor of the following, which are quoted: "In other words, the more the committee investigated the less of business methods it discovered in the War Department." Also, "There has been no one before the committee—no officer connected with the War Department—who will assert that prior to the appropriations for 1909-10 there was anything approaching a system of business methods in the department. As a matter of fact, it would appear to have been all but chaotic."

2. I wish to enter a respectful denial of these general statements in regard to the department of the military service of which I have the honor to be the head, and, moreover, I invite your attention to the fact that you have made these general statements concerning the entire War Department without examining any officer of the Ordnance Depart—ment in regard to them, or, as far as I am aware, indicating that you desired any evidence in regard to the methods used by that department in conducting its business. I ask you to read the following quotation from my annual report of a year ago, which bears directly upon this subject and upon the efforts which I had previously made to prevent the misapprehension, in regard to this department at least, under which ""The statement has been rather frequently made during the past year that the Government's methods are not economical, and considerable stress has been laid in the public prints, and even in Government publications, upon the alleged fact that very little is known about the actual cost of articles produced in the industrial operations of the Government, and that millions of dollars might be saved annually if these operations were conducted with businessike efficiency. The Ordnance Department has not been specifically included in this statement, but neither has it been specifically excluded, and the department shares in the general charge of loci nustries. So far as this department is concerned, the charge of loci nustries. So far as this department is concerned, the charge of loci nustries. So far as this department as yexamination or close knowledge of the administrative methods while has followed. For many years past special attention has been given by the department to the system of accountability under which its funds are expended and to the insurance that only the amount allotted for each particular manufacturer shall be expended upon the object for which the allotment is made. A detailed and comprehensive system of keeping track of the labor cost of all work done and of the material used is, and has been, in practice, and the results are accurate and reliable. In addition, in all statements of costs and in the price of the plant, depreclation, payment of officers and enlisted men, etc., which private manufactures must take into account and which it has been rather the fashion to assert that the G

WILLIAM CROZIER, Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

In the pending bill is a legislative provision which appears to me to be an unfair discrimination against a class of the most efficient officers in our Army. It is that section of the bill pro-viding that cadet service shall not be counted in computing the pay of officers and the length of service for retirement.

The counting of service as a cadet at West Point in computing length of service for pay and retirement is the only method of computing time that is fair and just. Any other method would select a class of officers from the Army and discriminate against

The proposed law declares that service is not service; it might as well propose to call white black.

When a cadet enters the Military Academy he takes and subscribes to the following oath:

I. A B, do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States and bear true allegiance to the National Government; that I will maintain and defend the sovereignty of the United States, paramount to any and all allegiance, sovereignty, or fealty I may owe to any State, county, or country whatsoever; and that I will at all times obey the legal orders of my superior officers and the rules and articles governing the Armies of the United States. (Sec. 1320, Rev. Stat.)

This is, in substance, the oath taken by every officer and enlisted man who enters the service. Not only this, but the cadet, when he enters the Military Academy, enlists as does an enlisted man, for he signs an agreement; he enters into an engagement with the Government to serve for eight years; and the Government is now, by refusing to accept the resignation of graduated cadets, holding the cadet to this agreement.

By section 1326, Revised Statutes, the cadet is liable to be tried by court-martial the same as any other person coming under the purview of the Articles of War. And frequently he is tried and punished according to these articles and the custom

It is claimed that the cadet is educated by the Government, while the officer appointed from civil life must educate himself at his own expense. No statement was ever farther from the truth than this. The examination that must be passed by the cadet to enter the Military Academy is quite as severe as that taken by the officer who comes into the service from civil life. If we try to put these two classes of officers on an equality, then the officer appointed from civil life should be required to pass an examination in all the subjects that the cadet has mastered. This would be preposterous, for men can not be found in civil life to accept commissions in the Army who can pass such examinations.

As a matter of fact, the cadet service is hard service, usually the hardest service performed by the officer during his lifetime. If the Government does not get a proper return from the money spent on the cadet, then West Point as an institution should be abolished and officers obtained from civil life to the exclusion of all others.

But the truth is that the work at the Military Academy is so difficult that many if not most of the officers of the Army who enter in other ways have not the mental ability to compass it, and they go all through their official life rendering service inferior to that of the graduate because of lack of mental capacity.

When the civil appointee to the line of the Army joins his company he knows nothing of the service. It takes at least four years for him to learn, from the enlisted men under him and from the officers over him, how to perform his duties to a degree of thoroughness so that he can be intrusted. During these four years he gets in pay $6,800, in quarters allowance $1,100, besides an officer's heat and light allowance. The cadet who enters the Military Academy at the same date as the civilian is appointed receives in pay during the four years $2,400, and in allowances the cost of the upkeep of half a room at the Military Academy.

The civilian appointee has thus far cost three times as much as the cadet, and it is proposed by this bill that this cadet upon graduation, who is four years behind the civilian appointee in rank, shall lose the benefit of his cadet service in counting for pay and retirement.

It may be claimed that officers of the Medical Corps have to attain as high a standard of learning as the graduate of the Military Academy. Possibly this is so, but if we are going to equalize the positions of officers who graduate from the Military Academy with those who enter the Army as medical officers, then let them draw the same pay after the same periods of commissioned service.

But look at the laws and records as they now stand. medical officer enters the service as a first lieutenant. His pay is $300 more than the graduated cadet. In three years from the time that the medical officer is commissioned he is made a captain and his pay is $700 a year more than the graduated cadet, and the allowances make the disparity of the positions still very much greater. An examination of the Army Register will show many officers who served over 9 years as second lieutenants; it will show that the average time required to reach the grade of captain by all officers of the line is about 15 years, while the officers of the Medical Department appointed from civil life by law reach that grade in 3 years.

But even after these medical officers get their commissions they can not say that they have educated themselves, because they are sent to school usually before going out to take up any duties as medical officers. While they are in attendance at duties as medical officers. While they are in attendance at this school they do not get the pay and allowances of a cadet—which are just enough to support him—but, rather, they get $2,000 a year with quarters, heat, light, and horse allowances of a first lieutenant mounted.

If service as a cadet operates against an officer because he is going to school, then let the same apply to all schools, and give all officers attending an Army school cadet pay and allowances.

Paragraph 458 of the Army Regulations gives a list of the schools in the Army. The following schools are for officers who, while in attendance, perform no other duties, just as do

The Army War College, Washington, D. C.; the Army Staff College, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; the Coast Artillery School, Fort Monroe, Va.; the Engineer School, Washington, D. C.; the Army Medical School, Washington, D. C.; the Army School of the Line, Fort Leavenworth, Kans; the Army Field Engineers' School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Why discriminate against the United States Military Acad-If you wish to reduce the pay of officers of the Army, do not single out a particular class and unjustly discriminate against them.

Section 7 of this bill affects not the Army alone, but the principle of counting cadet service affects the Navy pay also. Is the Navy Committee of the House committed to a reduction of the pay of naval officers? Surely they must be if they vote for this bill, for it will not be possible to apply one principle to the Navy and another to the Army.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Mr. HELM. I am very sorry that I missed the statement of the gentleman. I just came on the floor, and I would like to be advised, if it is not trespassing upon the time of the gentleman, as to what the charges were.

Mr. ANTHONY. I regret very much that I have not the time. I have only a few moments remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ANTHONY. If I can get time from the other side of the House I would be very glad to continue the discussion. If the gentleman from Kentucky can secure it I would be glad to

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HELM. I yield to the gentleman five minutes. [Laughter.]
Mr. ANTHONY. I accept the time, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Kentucky controlling the time?

Mr. HELM. No; but I ask unanimous consent. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that. Mr. PRINCE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince] is recognized.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for the manner in which he has prepared the purely supply portion of this legislative bill. I also wish to say publicly that he has well presented his side of the contention in this legislative bill. However, I can not agree with him as to the provisions of the purely legislative portions of the bill.

He takes the position that there ought to be a five-year enlist-We take the position, on the other hand, that the enlistment ought to remain as it is now, namely, a three-year enlistment.

There are two schools of officers in the Army. One believes in making of the Army a permanent military professional personnel of enlisted men. They believe that a fighting man should be a machine. They want to enlist him and want him to stay there during his term of service, and finally put him upon the retired list. Now, the small Army that we have, if it were made up of the class of men they want to make it up of,

would be wholly inefficient to conduct a great war.

The other class of officers believe that the men should be enlisted for three years, and that, aside from the noncommissioned officers, these enlisted men should go back to the body of the people and take their places as citizens in the great affairs that belong purely to the civil portions of our country.

Now, I have listened very attentively to the discussion along these lines, and I wish to say that at one time in our history we had a three-year enlistment, and then at a later time we had a five-year enlistment, and still later the term of enlistment was put back to three years again. Finally, in 1894, the question came up again for settlement. It was settled then in favor of a three-year enlistment. That was at a time when the gentlemen on the other side who are there now were in the majority and had control of the affairs of this Government, and Mr. Cleveland was President of the United States. Officers recommended at that time that we should go back to the flat three-year enlistment. It was then and there agreed upon, and since 1894 and up to this time we have been operating under a three-year enlistment instead of a five-year enlistment.

Now, let me read, briefly, here what The Adjutant General says about these enlistments. I think he puts the case very well. His statement is found on page 14 of the majority report:

I think men will be more likely to reenlist under the five-year than under the three-year system. At the end of three years a man has not become fairly weaned from home folks and home affairs, and home folks have not become weaned from him, but are constantly importuning him to come home, and at the end of three years he has not yet become fully adapted to the discipline and restraints of the military life; but at the end of five years all this is different. The home ties have been weakened; the young soldier has gotten over his homesickness; home folks have become reconciled to his absence; the Army has become a home to him; he has begun to realize the advantages that it offers him, and its discipline and its restraints now bear lightly upon him.

If that is the purpose—to take him and make him a fighting machine, to stifle the feelings of home in his breast and make him a fighting instrument pure and simple—then I say, go on with your five-year enlistment. If that is what you want, go on with it.

There is one of your highest authorities-The Adjutant General-who says the home ties are broken, the home feeling is destroyed, the milk of human kindness is driven out of the man, and he is a mere machine, to do fighting with and to remain in the Army.

What is our policy? Not to make him a mere fighting machine. It is to educate him as a soldier, and then let him go back to the body of the people as a trained and a good, lawabiding citizen. Thus he becomes a part in the civic affairs He is there to train his fellows and to give them the benefit of his military education. It is a hundred per cent better for this country to have 10 men enlist for 3 years and 9 of them go back to the body of the people, thus having 9 men who have had military service, than to have 1 man in the military service permanently, with a 30-year enlistment in the Army.

It is alleged that we will reduce the expense of the Army by five-year enlistment rather than a three-year enlistment. That is denied. The minority views express this:

It does not secure any economy, if compared with the three-year system over a reasonable period of time, and especially if the three-year system is used without reenlistments, as is proposed by the present administration of the War Department. A comparison over a period of 15 years between the three and five year enlistments shows a balance in favor of the three-year enlistment of over $25,000,000.

Do you want to economize? Do you want to save? Then keep the present proposition of three years and save the $25,-000,000, as against $2.000,000 under your five-year proposition.

What else? The National Guard to-day is a part of the Army, under the Dick bill. Do you want men to enlist in the National Guard for five years? Necessarily it has to be done, in order to put them on a par with the regular establishment and draw the pay and become a part of the reserve line.

My colleague smiles at that and says it is different in different States; but if you want to have a reserve force of fighting quality among the national guardsmen they should be put upon an equality with the enlisted force of the Regular Army.

Now, to nub it up, what is involved here? The one is a policy of making a soldier for five years, and keeping him forever a soldier and no part of the reserve of the country. The other policy believes in having soldiers enlisted for three years rather than five, and have a gradually increasing body of men who have had military experience, as reserves. I do not care whether you pay them or not. They are there in the body of the peo-ple, ready to respond to the colors in case of war. Take the great Civil War. The men who had been at West Point who belonged in the Southland and the men who had been at West Point and belong in the Northland rallied to the colors. Grant was in civil life; McClellan was in civil life; Sherman was in civil life. A long line of distinguished men in the Southland were in civil life. They rallied to the cause and fought under the colors. Do you believe the men who have been in the Army and have taken part as soldiers are less patriotic to-day than they were then?

For that reason and for economical reasons, for the national defense, for the good of the service as a whole, we favor the three-year enlistment instead of the five-year enlistment.

Now, let us go a little further, for I must be extremely brief. I want to discuss these questions under the five-minute rule.

Section 4 of this bill establishes the supply corps. My colleague upon the committee says that the officer in charge is an acting major general. Let us read:

acting major general. Let us read:

The officers of said departments shall hereafter be known as officers of said corps and by the titles of the rank held by them therein, and, except as hereinafter specifically provided to the contrary, the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," are herey extended so as to apply to the supply corps in the manner and to the extent to which they now apply to the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments, and the provision of said sections of said act relative to chiefs of staff corps and departments shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to all offices and officers of the supply corps with rank above that of colonel.

What is that act?

And any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff corps or department and shall subsequently be retired shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowance as authorized by law for the retirement of such corps or department chief ment chief.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. On page 60 of this bill in the last proviso you will find that the part of the law to which the gentleman refers has been changed so that they will not be necessarily reap-

Mr. PRINCE. That is true; but once having been appointed as an acting major general he will be retired as such under the provisions of that law.

Mr. HAY. If he happens to be a major general when he comes to the retiring age.

Mr. PRINCE. Let me read again:

And any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff corps or department and shall subsequently be retired shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowance as authorized by law for the retirement of such corps or department chief.

Now, I may be wrong about it; but I throw that out as my suggestion, and if I am wrong and the gentleman does not want it that way we will correct it by amendment. It is capable of that way we will correct it by amendment. It is capable of that meaning, and if my colleague will change it and correct that inequality I shall be glad of it.

What further? The bill says that the officers now holding commissions shall be put on one list. Let me read:

The officers now holding commissions as officers of the said departments shall hereafter have the same tenure of commission in the General Staff Corps, and as officers of said corps shall have rank of the same grades and dates as that now held by them, and, for the purpose of filling vacancies among them, shall constitute one list, on which they shall be arranged according to rank. So long as any officers shall remain on said list any vacancy occurring therein shall be filled, if possible, from among such officers, by selection if the vacancy occurs in a grade above that of colonel, and if the vacancy occurs in a grade not above that of colonel by the promotion of an officer who would have been entitled to promotion to that particular vacancy if the consolidation of departments hereby prescribed had never occurred.

What does it mean by that? These men are put on one list, one becomes an acting major general and is retired, another is pushed up and becomes an acting major general and retires. How long will it take these men, one by one, if my contention is correct, to all become major generals in a staff, in a corps of less importance than the Chief of Engineers, which is presided over by a brigadier general, in a staff of equal importance to the Chief of Ordnance, presided over by a brigadier general? Now, what do we have? We have a corps and an acting major general to be retired as a major general over which presided during the Civil War a brigadier general who fed 2,000,000 men and who carried on the great war, so far as the Union forces were who carried on the great war, so far as the Union forces were concerned. He was satisfied with the pay of a brigadier general, and it was thought to be ample. Major generals like Hancock, Meade, and Halleck were at the firing line; but here is to be created a major general in a swivel chair doing less work than the chief of other bureaus.

Then what comes? The next move will be to make a major general out of a Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance.

They never level down but always say, "Give us equal rights," in the different bureaus. I am utterly and unalterably opposed to promotion by legislation. [Applause.] I have no objection to any man earning his spurs on the field of battle or in the discharge of his duty, but this thing of constantly promoting staff officers by legislation I have resisted all along, and shall continue to resist it as long as I am able to resist anything.

Now, let us go a little further. They say that it will save money by this five-year enlistment. At whose expense? At the expense of the enlisted soldier who does the work in season and out of season, who marches in sunshine and in the rain, in flood and in storm. He must lose 12½ per cent and the non-commissioned officer 15 per cent, which is taken from his salary; and the supply corps is to be promoted by legislation. To him that has the most he shall receive more, and to him that has the least shall be taken away that little which he now has. Has there been a word on the part of any enlisted man of the 70,000 soldiers that he wants a three or a five year enlistment? The officers want it. Has there come to this committee a word from the men who are affected by the legislation, the man who takes the oath of office as a private soldier and does the work; has he been heard, has the chairman submitted the question to him? Has he been called before the committee? Not a one of them has been heard.

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Has the War Department asked for this legislation?

Mr. PRINCE. As to that I do not know.

Mr. AMES. Has the committee any knowledge of a demand for such a reorganization?

Mr. PRINCE. Of course, there are two ways of looking at that. My colleague on the committee, the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], a very good man, believes that the responsibility for legislation rests upon Congress, and he thinks the War Department is merely to give advice. Others may think they should go to the War Department to first find out what Congress should do. 'There are differences of that kind. I am not going to quarrel with my colleague if he believes along another line.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which position does the gentleman occupy? Does he believe the responsibility is upon Congress, or does he think he should first go to the War Department and find out what they want?

Mr. PRINCE. I would say this to my distinguished friend: I think it is the business of the Member of Congress to introduce a bill and have it referred to a committee. I am in full accord with having the views of the War Department upon that bill, and I do not think it would be at all out of the way to send the bill to the War Department and gather facts, as you would anywhere else, because under the Constitution there are three coordinate branches of the Government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. Under the Constitution the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army, and the Commander in Chief, through the proper officials, should be consulted in connection with the Army. For that reason I take that view of it. Does that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not what the gentleman said. He said there two views-one that the gentleman from Virginia believed the responsibility for legislation rested upon Congress, and that he should act upon that theory. Some other gentleman, he stated, had the idea that they should first consult a department as to what legislation is to be enacted, and then What I desire to know is whether the gentleman from Illinois thought, the responsibility for legislation being on Congress, that Members of Congress should act on their own initiative or whether they should simply be the messenger boys for the departments in initiating and carrying out legislation?

Mr. PRINCE. I think, if my friend will read in the RECORD what I have said he will find that it is an answer to his question-full and explicit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is the question-

Mr. PRINCE. I can not yield any further.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume that the gentleman does not care to be explicit.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I have answered the gentleman, as I have always tried to answer anybody, but I do not think it is fair to reiterate questions that I have already answered. Let us go a little further. As to the service corps, there is a difference of opinion upon that. Here are to be enlisted 5,000 men, noncombatants, a part of the Army. What peculiar position do they hold? They are not soldiers and they are not civilians, but they are subject to order as soldiers in a sense. Do you believe, Mr. Chairman, that you can find 5,000 American citizens who will subject themselves to such a condition as that? Do you believe it? What is it done for? It is to get rid of certain effects that there might be in respect to the eight-hour law. It is to get rid of certain control or lack of control that the officers now have over the civilian, who may or may not be a member of a union labor organization; but when they enlist the eight-hour law can not apply; when they enlist they become hewers of wood and drawers of water, subject to court-martial, subject to the guardhouse, and everything of that kind—a thing wholly foreign to the American Army, outside and away from it. Do you believe you can get men to enlist for that purpose at that pay to mow the lawn, to do the menial work of that kind, not to be a soldier and yet subject to orders as a soldier-men to occupy such an anomalous position in the American Army?

I believe in the clerks that are there performing the duties of clerks and the wagon men performing their duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if the Secretary of War recommended it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. There is no objection from the War Department.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have a very few moments in which to answer some of the remarkable arguments that have been adduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAY. As I understand my friend from California [Mr. KAHN], his principal objection to the five-year term is that it will increase descritions, and he took a very large part of his time in undertaking to explain to the committee that the fiveyear term would increase desertions because, as he said, under the five-year term heretofore desertions had been greater than they were under the three-year term. We had before us three of the most accomplished recruiting officers of the Army; The Adjutant General of the Army, who has charge of the recruiting service; the Inspector General of the Army, and various other officers, and while some of them were opposed to the fiveyear term of enlistment, every one of them without exception stated that the five-year enlistment would not increase desertions; that the bulk of the desertions occurred in the first year of service; and that it made no difference whether the enlistments were for three years or five years so far as desertions were concerned. I think that is sufficient answer to what the gentleman said on that subject. He also undertook to call in question the figures which I have given in this report as to the saving which will be made. The gentleman undertook to say that he had a set of figures which showed that instead of the saving upon clothing being $$71,000 a year it will be only some two hundred and odd thousand dollars a year. The gentleman knows that when the bill was introduced last spring to provide a five-year term of enlistment in the Army that the clothing allowance which is fixed by the President, or rather by the War Department, was such that the figures given in this report are absolutely correct, correct indeed mathematically; but after this bill was introduced the War Department issued an order cutting down the clothing allowance of these enlisted men when they reenlisted, and of course that will make the saving not quite so great as it would have been if the clothing allowance had remained at the same figure it was when that bill was introduced.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Yes; for a question. Mr. KAHN. I simply took the figures from the report accompanying this bill-not the bill that was introduced last spring, but the report of the majority of the committee accompanying this bill-and on page 44 of this report you make the statement that-

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman wants to ask me a question, let him ask it; but if he wants to make a speech I will not yield, for I have not the time.

Mr. KAHN. I want to ask the gentleman if the statement in the report accompanying this bill is correct?

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is correct for this reason: When I reach the item in the bill providing for clothing allowance for enlisted men I propose to offer an amendment increasing it to what it was when this bill was introduced, and under those circumstances the figures will be correct.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman attempts to put back the clothing allowance to where it was, will not my figures be absolutely correct, and will not there be a deficiency instead of a saving?

Mr. HAY. Why, not at all. Mr. KAHN. I think I can I think I can convince the gentleman under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAY. I think the gentleman can not, because I have given this matter a most careful and full study, and I know what I am talking about; and I say to the gentleman that if he is so much a friend of the enlisted man he ought not to sustain the order of the War Department cutting down the clothing allowance of the enlisted man—cutting it ostensibly for the purpose of economy, but in reality for the purpose of discouraging reenlistments. That is what they did it for; and I want to call the attention of this committee to the fact that while gentlemen on that side of the House—Mr. Kahn and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]—are claiming to be the friend of the enlisted man, yet they are advocating a system under which there shall be no reenlistment of the enlisted man, but that he shall go out into the body of the people and become, forsooth, an educator of the people in military affairs, a most impractical proposition and one which can not in any way be carried into

Mr. KAHN. W Mr. HAY. Yes, Mr. KAHN. D Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Does the gentleman recall that either my colleague [Mr. PRINCE] or myself ever opposed the reenlistment of the noncommissioned officer, who is an enlisted man?

Mr. HAY. Oh, no; I did not say anything about noncommissioned officers; I said-

Mr. KAHN. They are enlisted men.

Mr. KAHN. They are enlisted men.

Mr. HAY. Did not you oppose the reenlistment of privates?

Mr. KAHN. No—

Mr. HAY. You did not?

Mr. KAHN. Now, there are certain privates of particular skill whom I think ought to be reenlisted. A great many of the privates I would prefer to see go out at the end of three years.

Mr. HAY. The calculation which the gentlemen have made, and which they make in their minority report, is based upon the idea that there shall be no reenlistments in the Army of the private soldiers, of the soldier who does not get to be a noncommissioned officer. That is the basis upon which they make their calculations, and even upon that basis it is a most absurd calculation, which I have torn to pieces in the report which I have submitted accompanying this bill.

Three years ago when we raised the pay of the Army we had before us the then Chief of Staff and a great many other Army officers, who besought us to take steps to encourage men to reenlist. And in order to do that, in order to meet the views of Army officers, we provided a bonus of three months' pay for men who reenlist and gave a considerable advance in pay on account of continuous service. And the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

PRINCE] supported that proposition at that time.

Now, we have another Chief of Staff and another Secretary of War, who say that men should not reenlist; that only noncommissioned officers should do so, but that the private soldier should not. And we have these same gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from California, now supporting that contention. If there is this difference of opinion between Army officers as to whether there should be a five-year enlistment or a three-year enlistment it seems to me that Congress is compelled to map out a policy of its own, because the officers in the Army do not seem to be able to agree upon this proposition, or upon any other proposition which has been brought before the Committee on Military Affairs. [Applause.] This five-year enlistment will not increase desertion. It will not make recruiting more difficult; it will not destroy or impair the efficiency of the Army, and it will save the people of this country a very large amount of money. And for that reason I am for it.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to his colleague?

Mr. PRINCE. You have told us our position. A year or more ago you were opposed to increasing the pay of the private soldier, were you not? Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRINCE. And you are opposed to it yet?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. You have not progressed any, and I have.

Mr. HAY. I do not see that you have progressed any, in that you want to take away from them now what you gave them.

Mr. PRINCE. We want to leave them where they are.

want the three-year enlistment.

Mr. HAY. Yes; you want to turn a man out when he has been in the Army three years and given that much time to his country, and if he wants to reenlist you say to him he shall not do it. That is your position.

Mr. PRINCE. Ob, no. There are over 16,000 noncommis-sioned officers in the Army.

You are in favor of keeping the expensive men in the Army, the men that cost more, but you do not want to hold

Mr. PRINCE. Do you not want under the five-year term to do so?

Mr. HAY. I want them to reenlist, but you do not.

Mr. PRINCE. You have to have noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HAY. Yes; we have to have noncommissioned officers. Mr. PRINCE. You stated of the noncommissioned officers that only 4 per cent at the end get on the retired list. Now, how much will the percentage be under the five-year enlistment?

Mr. HAY. I showed the other day that the great bulk of men on the retired list were noncommissioned officers, and those are the men you want to reenlist.

Mr. PRINCE. They are the strength of the Army to-day.

Mr. HAY. If they are, how are you going to prepare men to be noncommissioned officers if you do not let them reenlist? How are they to get experience enough to become noncommissioned officers unless they have an opportunity to reenlist?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I forgot to make a request a moment ago. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who desire to do so-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not do that in committee—Mr. HAY. May have the privilege of printing their remarks on this bill for five legislative days after the consideration of the bill has been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. An omnibus request of that sort can not be presented or entertained in Committee of the Whole, but any gentleman who desires to extend his remarks will be permitted to do so unless there is objection.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was unfortunate in not being present a few moments ago when the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] was occupying the floor. I understand that there has been complaint made by some officer of the Army in regard to some general statements that I made at some time in addressing the House in reference to the conditions obtaining and prevailing in the War Department. As I recall my statement, it was that, after an examination, the committee of which I am a member, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, instead of finding a well-organized, business-going concern, operating with clock-like regularity, the further the committee went in its examination the less of business methods it found, and in fact that it found a condition almost chaotic. I understand that the gentleman from Kansas, on behalf of some officer of the Army, was complaining that my remarks were too general and wide and that I hit someone who did not deserve that criticism. If I have done so, I am extremely sorry. It was far from my intention to do so. But in a general discussion or a general statement made in discussing or referring to an entire department it is hardly to be expected of a person to pick out, on an occasion like that, those men in the department who are doing well and who deserve commendation and credit.

I undertook to speak in a general way of the business pre-vailing in the department, and I undertake to say further that I am fortified in that statement by the criticism that was made, coming from an officer of the line, which I presented here on the floor this morning, that notwithstanding the fact that we are expending $100,000,000 annually on our Army the Army is not worth $20,000,000 annually as an efficient fighting ma-That statement, I understand, comes from an officer of the line; and if an officer in the department has taken exception to the general statement that I made, I refer him to the officer who made the statement which I quoted from the Washington Post.

Mr. ANTHONY Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HELM. With pleasure.
Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman give the name of the officer of the Army who made that statement?

Mr. HELM. I can not. I can only say that the article itself states that it is an officer of the line, high up in the official

Mr. ANTHONY. Then all the knowledge that the gentleman has is obtained from a newspaper article? As a matter of fact, this general may be fictitious, for all the gentleman knows?

Mr. HELM. No; I do not think he is fictitious, by any manner of means. This article printed in the Washington Post comes under quotations, and I take it that a paper of the dignity and importance of the Washington Post would not be sending out fake interviews.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Army costs, as the gentleman said in his preliminary remarks, about $100,000,000, and this gentleman states what is true when he says it is not worth $20,000,000 in point of efficiency, does the gentleman believe that this Government is being swindled out of $80,000,000 of efficiency

Mr. HELM. Oh, when you come to the word "swindled," of course I do not mean to say that the Government is being swindled. There is a lack of business management; there is negligence somewhere; there is carelessness on the part of somebody in the handling of the funds that come into their hands.

Now, if the gentleman will pardon me just a moment, I want to read a further statement from the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chief of Staff, Gen. Wood, was present, and in answer to a question by a gentleman on the committee, Mr. Pepper, he said, among other things:

We would like to put up to you a well-organized, definite plan, so you may know what we are at. Neither you nor we at the present time know where we are. It has been a hit-or-miss policy, and we want to get down to something in the way of concentration of troops at definite stations, and we want to give you an organization so that you will know from year to year approximately what your Army appropriation will be, and any additions will be in the way of increase in reserve material for Artillery, or something of that sort, or appropriations for unforeseen contingencies.

In other words, we are as anxious to get together with you as anybody can be and to give you a definite plan of Army reorganization and maintenance, and to avoid what has been almost unavoidable in the past, a more or less haphazard procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HELM. I ask unanimous consent to continue for five

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that an anonymous communication published in the daily papers should be dignified by the indorsement of a Member of Congress when that Member admits he does not know anything about the truth or falsity of the statement?

Mr. HELM. I do not think anybody has charged that the statement is false. I simply give it to the House for what it is worth, as being reported to have come from an officer of the line. If it did not come from him, and if the officer did not give any such statement, of course there is nothing to it. here is a statement from the Chief of Staff before the Military Affairs Committee, saying that heretofore this has been a hitor-miss proposition, which is to all intents and purposes the same statement I made on the floor of the House. I do not pose as a military expert by any manner of means, but I take it that the Chief of Staff, when he goes before the Military Affairs Committee and says that heretofore it has been a hitand-miss and haphazard proposition, and, in fact, Gen. Aleshire stated before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department that appropriations that are asked for from year to year of Congress have formerly been largely a matter of guesswork; they know what they are talking about.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. As I understood the gentleman, in opening his remarks under the five-minute rule, he regretted having made the statement.

Mr. HELM. I regret having made any statement that would be misconstrued by any officer of the Army as directing any criticism to him in a general discussion of the entire War Department. I have not the time to pat somebody on the back, and throw a bouquet at some officer who is doing well. I want to say that the men who have been before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department have exhibited the utmost candor, and have undertaken on every occasion to give the committee the fullest information; and, as I stated before, they seemed to welcome any investigation that is being made of the department, and I can not see why anyone connected with the service, from the Commander in Chief of the Army down, should not welcome such investigations as the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department have been conducting, investigations begun with no intention other than to try by some way to bring about better results in the department. To this extent, as I have said before, if I have unwittingly hit some man when I did not intend anything of the kind, I regret it exceedingly; but it does occur to me that any officer in the Army might see that in a general talk about the business affairs of the War Department, not any subdivision of it, there was no intention to refer specifically to any particular officer. Gen. Aleshire has been before the committee as Quartermaster General. I believe there are expenses in his division of the service that this investigation before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department has benefited. For Gen. Aleshire I have the highest admiration. I think he is a superb I believe he is the right man in the right place. I do not deem that it is necessary, in a general discussion of what is going on in the entire War Department, to take time to when aside and say this, that, or the other thing about Gen. Wood, the Chief of Staff, or Gen. Ainsworth or any other officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingencies of the Army: For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for, and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $25,000.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of line 11, page 1, the following: "That no part of the sum of money appropriated by this act shall be used for the pur-chase of forage."

Mr. HAY. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, this contingent fund, I believe, began in 1909 or 1908. Gen. Bell, I think, stated that the purpose of including the contingent fund in an appropriation billat which time it was only $15,000—was for the purpose of entertaining dignitaries, guests from foreign countries, at the Army posts. Since that time it has been used for almost every purpose and has grown from $15,000 to $40,000, and I am glad to notice that in this bill it is only $25,000.

The reason I have offered this amendment-and I have offered it in good faith-is because if you will examine the letter from the Secretary of War, which he is required under the law to report Congress as to how this contingent fund has been expended, you will find all through that report that there are considerable sums, amounting in the aggregate to quite a large sum, for provender--hay, oats, and coal, and items of that kind.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. After I make this statement.

Mr. HAY. I would like to have the gentleman from Kentucky point those items out to me.

Mr. HELM. They are in the letter from the Secretary of Mr. HAY. The gentleman has the letter in reference to the contingent fund carried in the legislative bill.

Mr. PRINCE. It refers to the wrong bill, and I was just going to correct the gentleman. I have a letter from the Secretary of War about expenditures on account of appropriations for the Army, and the gentleman must have the wrong letter.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, let me explain to the House. have the letter of the Secretary of War transmitting a report of the expenditures on account of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

Mr. HAY. Let me call my friend's attention to the fact that that is for contingent expenses and this is for contingencies of the Army. One is carried in the legislative bill and the other The gentleman has the one in the Army appropriation bill.

that is carried in the legislative bill.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, whether these expenditures are carried in the legislative, judicial, and executive, or the military bill, whether they refer to the paragraph in the Army appropriation bill under consideration or not, the point that I want to bring out to the House is that here you have an appropria-tion in this bill for "regular supplies," in which the Quartermaster General supplies many items that this contingent fund contains. The Quartermaster General supplies the provender and forage for the Army, and here is a portion of this contingent fund used for the same purpose; whether carried in the legislative or in the Army appropriation bill it makes no difference; the point is that they should be united and paid for by one division of the department.

Now, both the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill and this bill have a contingent fund. If you will examine you will see that you are buying large quantities of supplies by means of this contingent fund that the Quartermaster General is charged with supplying out of the appropriation he controls, virtually $7,000,000. Here is a contingent fund carrying $50,000, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELM. With pleasure.

If the gentleman's amendment should be agreed Mr. MANN. to, would it do away with the horses that we now have in the Army, and will we have those that are represented in cartoons that work without being fed?

Mr. HELM. I propose to withdraw the amendment after the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I did not know but that the gentleman had discovered a kind of horse that would work without forage, [Laughter.]

Mr. HELM. Oh, no. The point I want to bring out is that from my limited investigation of the matter here you have several different committees-the Committee on Military Affairs appropriating $100,000,000, the legislative, judicial, and executive committee carrying $2,000,000, and another division of the Appropriations Committee carrying another appropriation for the War Department. My contention and the thing that I want to bring before the House is that one committee, either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Appropriations Committee, should handle all the expenses incident to the War Department. How can the Committee on Military Affairs know what the other committees of the House are doing, and how can the membership know what is going on?

These contingent funds ought to be held down to contingen-Here are enormous funds expended for fuel, for provender, and for other items, for transportation. It is a small matter. It is a mouse track, I admit, but here are several thousand street car tickets. If it comes under the head of transportation it ought to be carried in the regular bill. Why these several contingent funds should be created in every bill, authorizing some man to expend this money as he sees fit, I do not know. I do not charge that it is misspent. I do not say that you do not get returns for the money spent, but somebody ought to be at the head of each of these particular appropriations and ought to control it, and not have everybody buy here and there and everywhere. That was the purpose for which I wanted to offer this amendment, hoping, if possible, to bring to the attention of the committee in how many different forms these things come up for action by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

Army War College: For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery, office, tollet, and desk furniture, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals, printing and binding, maps, police utensils, employment of temporary, technical, or special services, and for all-other absolutely necessary expenses, including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk of division for superintendence of the War College Building, $10,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the word "ten" and insert in Heu thereof the word "nine."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, there is a mistake in that amount. The Book of Estimates calls for $9,000, and through some mistake it is made $10,000 in the bill. I do not suppose we want to give them more than they ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will he considered as agreed to. There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE CHIEF OF COAST ARTILLERY.

Coast Artillery School, Fort Monroe, Va.: For incidental expenses of the school, including chemicals, stationery, hardware; cost of special instruction of officers detailed as instructors; extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than 10 days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in line with their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; office furniture and fixtures, machinery, and unforseen expenses, $10,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in line 12, on page 4, the more

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in line 12, on page 4, the word "unforeseen" is spelled wrongly, and I ask unanimous consent that it be changed and properly spelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I desire to say to the gentleman from Virginia that if we consider the next item in the bill I shall desire to have more Members present than re now present.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend that I wish he would allow us to read the next item of the bill.

Then it would have to be read over again. Mr. MANN.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why?

Mr. MANN. Because I would not want Members to vote upon that without having it read. I have no objection, if the gentleman desires, to having it passed over temporarily.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the only change in that is that the appropriations for aeroplanes have been cut $50,000.

Mr. MANN. I am aware what the change is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can save a lot of trouble by taking it out on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order.
Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I thought we could put in a little time this evening in debate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may desire to discuss this before an empty house, but I do not. If the gentleman should read that item I would have to have a quorum present. I am perfectly willing that it should be passed over temporarily, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. HAY. Suppose we pass it over without prejudice, temporarily. I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, should like to ask the chairman of the committee why a change was made in the spelling of these instruments of war?

Mr. HAY. It was changed by a vote of the committee. Mr. MANN. They could not spell the other word, I suppose. Laughter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think I can explain. Mr. MANN. Well, that has been passed over. Mr. SLAYDEN. Very well; if it was passed over, we will let it go.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $15,832,000: Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriation for the pay of officers and enlisted men shall be paid to any officer or enlisted man in active service for any period of time lost by him on account of diseases which are the result of his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that in a matter of this sort, which is, I think, of doubtful value, that it would be better to try it for a year than to insert it as permanent law in the bill.

Mr. HAY. Well, does the gentleman indicate that if it is not made permanent law he will withdraw the point of order? Mr. MANN. I would not make the point of order or be opposed to making the experiment.

Mr. HAY. Well, I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Make it "no part of the appropriation in this act.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. HAY. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the word "hereafter," in line 7—
Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, and I suggest inserting after the words "enlisted men" the words "in this act."
Mr. HAY. It will read, then, "That no part of the appropriation for the pay of officers and enlisted men' Mr. MANN. "In this act."

Mr. MANN. "In this act."
Mr. HAY. Strike out the word "the" and insert the word "this"; that no part of "this" appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it applies to other appropriations besides this particular one.

Mr. MANN. It should be that no part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of enlisted men, and so forth. After the word "appropriation" insert the words "in this act."

Mr. HAY. And, Mr. Chairman, I want to amend page 7, line 1, by inserting, after the word "no," the words "officer or enlisted man shall be entitled to receive pay, nor shall any," so that it will read "that hereafter no officer or enlisted man shall be entitled to receive pay, nor shall any part of appropriation in this act for the pay of officers and enlisted men," and then strike out the word "shall" in line 2.

Mr. MANN. I suggest the gentleman should let that go over until he can get it fixed up properly. If he puts in the provision which the gentleman suggests it ought to be provided only for the fiscal year 1913, because otherwise it would be making a permanent law under that language. Perso will say to the gentleman I do not think this will work. Personally I

Mr. HAY. Well, I can only say about that that the Surgeon General and the officers of the Army, who have given this matter very careful consideration, have recommended it very strongly

Mr. MANN. I understand they are trying to seek a solution for a problem which is insolvable.

Mr. HAY. They believe—of course it is not a matter that can be discussed with the necessary amount of freedom on the floor of the House-but I may say to the gentleman that they think if this is enacted into law that these men who now do not go to a physician or a surgeon until it is too late will be forced to do so by this provision.

Mr. MANN. I think it will force them to go to somebody outside of any Army surgeon at all.

Mr. HAY. They have a specific which they say cures abso-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia offer an amendment?

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed without prejudice, to be returned to later. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the committee to return to the preceding page 6 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I am entirely willing to have pending if the gentleman wishes the committee to rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the amendment which the gentleman wishes to offer?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it is an amendment to page 6, after the word "dollars," in line 22, to add the following:

Provided, That hereafter no pay or allowances shall be paid or allowed to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached, for duty of any kind, for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

I am willing to have that amendment pending and will be glad to have it pending. I think it corrects an evil in regard to the administration of the detail system.

Mr. MANN. Is it not directly in conflict with some of the later provisions in this bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think it is, Mr. Chairman. Mr. MANN. I understand the amendment which the gentleman desires to offer makes no exception whatever.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it specifically is confined to the limited class, and has special reference to details.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman there are some exceptions made in time of emergency and in time of war, and his amendment-

Otherwise, it is already provided for in the Mr. MANN. bill, practically

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think it is provided for in the bill,

I will say to the gentleman. Mr. HAY. In time of war.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly, in time of war. It says: "Unless specially authorized by law."

Mr. MANN. I know. The gentleman knows personal legislation is not favorably considered by Congress, and ought not to be. Mr. SLAYDEN. This is in no sense personal legislation.

Mr. MANN. It would be if we especially provide in the law for one particular man.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not intended to apply to one man, and

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but to authorize it by law would hereafter require it to apply to a particular man—au-thorize a man to remain on detached duty for more than the time specified.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that the law specifically says that details shall only be for a specific time, and in support of that law, following it, is a regulation of the War Department which says:

When at any time an officer has served less than two of the preceding six years with his corps or arm of the service, he shall be ordered to join said corps or arm of the service, unless on detached service which under the law can not be so terminated.

I do not intend to press this amendment now, but I would like to have the privilege of returning to that. I was engaged in conversation at the time we passed that paragraph and lost my opportunity.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask the gentleman if that includes officers who are doing service in the bureaus here?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It includes officers who are liable to detail, not applying to exceptions that are provided for by law

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman know how long these officers have been detailed?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I have a document here from the War Department which shows details have run from 5 years, which is more than the law authorizes, up to more

Mr. COOPER. And some of them, I have had it said to me, are officers comparatively young in the service, and who have received promotions during their service, while older officers—

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will consent to let this amendment be pending, I think we can have some illuminating discussion on this subject to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] desire to have the request stated to the committee?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. When the question is taken I will make my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the committee shall return to the page indicated, the said amendment to be pending and to be taken up hereafter.

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object if with that permission there is given a right to reserve point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.
The CHAIRMAN. The right to reserve a point of order to be submitted as a part of the request?

Mr. MANN. I did not understand the gentleman to request that the amendment be passed and come up at another time.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a part of the request that the amendment be pending and be taken up hereafter.

Mr. SHERLEY. And a point of order reserved on it. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order reserved on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. MANN. When will this come up? Mr. HAY. It will come up after the Signal Corps provision. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Oldfield, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of important business.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the

H. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED. The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4651. An act to amend section 171 of the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (S. DOC. NO. 299).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a series of joint reports made by officers representing the insular Government of the Philippine Islands, the Army and Navy of the United States, for the purpose of formulating plans for the construction and operation of a system of wireless telegraphy for the Philippine Islands.

In view of the fact that no commercial companies have installed wireless stations in the Philippine Islands up to the present time and that the needs of the insular Government, of commerce, and of the Army and Navy of the United States for the wireless telegraph have now become urgent and are steadily increasing in importance, and in view of the additional facts that wireless signals will greatly add to the safety of the shipping of the China seas and will be of paramount importance to both the Army and Navy in time of war, it is considered highly advisable that an official system of wireless telegraphy be installed with as little delay as possible in these islands, and that the difficulties which would arise should commercial and Government stations be hereafter installed which are not in harmony with a well-considered plan may thus be avoided.

The report of this board is approved by me and urgently recommended to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1912.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Virginia will withhold his motion for a second, I would like to state that I think some of the gentlemen have left the Chamber under the impression that the gentleman from Virginia was going to make a request for leave to print.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have five legislative days in which to print remarks pertaining to the Army appropriation bill after the consideration of the bill is concluded.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia mean all gentlemen or all gentlemen who have spoken on the bill?

Mr. HAY. All gentlemen who have addressed the Committee of the Whole on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken or shall speak on the Army appropriation bill shall have five legislative days after the passage of the bill in which to print remarks thereon in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL,

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Ennolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for support of the workhouse of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 9, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of South River, N. J., between Bissets and Old Bridge (H. Doc. No. 520); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Cape Lookout, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 528); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor transmitting a statement of expenses incurred in regulating immigration for the year ended June 30, 1911 (H. Doc. No. 523); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for enlarging the power plant of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (H. Doc. No. 522); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting statement of the official emoluments of officers of the customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911 (H. Doc. No. 524); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of expenses for collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, showing the number of employees and the salaries required for each collection district (H. Doc. No. 526); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the president of the Georgetown Gas Light Co., submitting to Congress report of that company for the year 1911 (S. Doc. No. 296); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of deficiency in appropriation for rent of buildings under control of the Treasury Department for the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 527); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of committee appointed by the Treasury Department to investigate the feasibility and cost of erecting a power plant in the District of Columbia, to furnish power, heat, and light for certain public buildings, and recommending favorable consideration (H. Doc. No. 525); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19342) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to isolated tracts of public land, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 312), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred sundry bills of the House, reported in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 19721) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, accompanied by a report (No. 309), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18773) granting a pension to Ida M. Hoffman; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 15765) granting an increase of pension to Evelyn Barnette; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon,

The Chaplain, the Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be graciously near to us, O God, our heavenly Father, as we draw near to Thee in spirit and in truth. - Help us to seek first Thy kingdom and Thy righteousness. We are weak; Thou art mighty. Impart unto us strength. We know but little; Thou art wisdom. Impart unto us wisdom. We are selfish; Thou art gracious and kind. Make us magnanimous to all with whom we come in contact; and so may Thy kingdom come in all our hearts, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4745. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Paulina (Oreg.) National Forest; and

S. 1697. An act granting certain lands to school district No. 44, Chelan County, Wash.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4745. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Paulina (Oreg.) National Forest; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1697. An act granting certain lands to school district No. 44, Chelan County, Wash.; to the Committee on the Public

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Labor I move to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of Senate bill 252, a bill to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand this motion is not debatable. The SPEAKER. That is true.

It is affected or not affected by the fact Mr. ADAMSON. that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has already entered upon the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is within the province of the House to discharge a committee even if another committee has started in to investigate the subject matter of the bill concerning which a change of reference is sought to be made.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary

Mr. ADAMSON. My inquiry was whether it would be affected by that fact.

The SPEAKER. It might affect the vote of individual Members if they knew of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Not the point of order?

Higgins

Sulloway

The SPEAKER. No.
Mr. ADAMSON. Is it in order for me to state that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has instructed me to resist the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The SPEAKER. It has already been stated, substantially. The gentleman can not escape it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, is not this the day on which the Committee on Pensions has the precedence?

The SPEAKER. It is; but immediately after the approval of the Journal the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson] rose and moved to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the consideration of the bill which he

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, would it be parliamentary for me to state that the Committee on Labor has already reported and has placed on the calendar a similar bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it would be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson] moves that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 252, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would it not be proper to state that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has already begun the consideration of that bill?

begin the consideration of that bill?

The SPEAKER. That has already been stated. Debate is not in order. This is the bill to establish the child-labor bureau. Those in favor of discharging the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of this Senate bill and of sending it to the Committee on Labor will say "aye," those opposed "no."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Peters) there were—ayes 46, noes 49.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 113, answered "present" 8, not voting 96, as follows: YEAS-175.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GUDGER. Mr. Speaker, much has been said to mislead the public touching the recent pension legislation. Many exaggerated statements have been put in circulation and I deem it proper at this time to state the exact facts, so that the country may have a clear understanding in regard to this proposed legislation.

Mr. Sherwood, one of the leading Democrats from the great State of Ohio, introduced a bill into the lower House of Congress which afterwards became known as the Sherwood bill. No braver Democrat stands upon the floor of the House than Mr. Sherwood, for in Ohio a Democrat is always in the minority and has a constant fight to maintain and advance his political convictions.

The Sherwood bill was referred to a Democratic committee and considered for months along with several other pension measures of like character, and finally, after, months of laborious investigation, this Democratic committee reported the Sherwood bill unanimously and recommended its passage.

The Democratic leaders in the House thus made the Sherwood bill a privileged measure, going even further by agreeing to consider it as the first general bill at the regular session of the Sixty-second Congress. The report of the committee was, in effect, that this legislation would equalize the allotment of pensions on a service basis, recommending that the amount be fixed at from fifteen to thirty dollars per month, according to length of service, and that the entire appropriation carried by the bill would be less than $28,000,000, and that it would, to a large extent, do away with the much-abused system of special pension legislation and make a uniform law that would be just to all.

As a matter of fact, 9,600 special pension bills were passed during the Sixty-first Congress. Many of these bills gave from thirty to fifty dollars per month. This class of legislation gave preference often to those who did political work, and those in greatest need failed to obtain a hearing.

It was further urged by this committee that this bill would render unnecessary the great army of special detectives and agents, and that many special pension boards would be abolished, thus saving large sums to the Government.

Mr. Underwood, from Alabama, one of the most prominent men in the House, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, made this statement in a speech in the House of Representatives-facing the Republican side, he said:

You knew that the Democratic caucus had pledged itself not to go into general legislation and also had pledged itself to report a pension bill to this House, and notwithstanding that, you put these motions on the Calendar to block the consideration of other business. The House has acted as it pledged itself to do on a pension bill.

So it will be observed, first, that the Democratic caucus pledged itself to report a pension bill; second, a Democrat is the author of the bill; third, a Democratic committee unanimously reported the bill; fourth, a Democratic majority gave the bill the right of way; fifth, the Democratic leaders supported the bill, including Speaker CHAMP CLARK and JAMES T. LLOYD, chairman of the Democratic national congressional com-The bill was passed; a majority of the Democrats voted for the bill. Out of seven Confederate soldiers who are now Members of Congress five voted for this bill, and their honesty of purpose and patriotism can not be called into question; also, the entire delegation of three Southern States voted for the bill. Therefore, this bill being urged as a Democratic policy and having confidence in the leadership of my party and in their wisdom, I surrendered my own personal views to their judgment.

The wide distinction between a party policy and an individual preference is obvious to all thoughtful men. It must be admitted that in the carrying out of the policies of a great national party at times an individual must surrender his personal judgment and be governed by the leaders and the majority of his party.

I have given the facts connected with the report and passage of this bill in detail, so that a fair-minded public can form its own judgment relative to the entire situation as it then appeared to me.

It is alleged by some who opposed the bill that a more careful investigation will show that the amount carried by the bill is much greater than the estimates made by the committee. If this is so, then the committee is responsible. If I had had such information at the time, I should have voted against the bill, although pending as a Democratic policy. In the language of my party's platform, I favor a fair, "liberal" pension to deserving bona fide soldiers who saw actual service, but not one dollar for that class of men whose only service consisted in terrorizing peaceful communities by unlawful acts.

At the beginning of this Congress it was recognized that no important legislation proposed by the Democratic Party would be permitted to pass the Senate and receive the approval of the President. The Sherwood pension bill has been pigeonholed by a Republican Senate. In other words, it will never be seriously considered by the Senate.

The Republican Senate has agreed to report the McCumber pension bill as a Republican policy, which is based on service and age combined. Such a bill will meet, as it justly deserves, the opposition of all conservative men, based, as it is, on that indefensible principle of making age a large element in governing the amount of pension of each soldier. The machinery necessary to administer the McCumber bill is such that millions of dollars would be required in the employment of clerical force, and I shall vote against that bill.

I am opposed as much as any man to the increasing of this already too large pension burden. I am on record as voting to strike from the pension roll the names of all pensioners who have renounced allegiance to the United States and taken up their residence as citizens of other countries, which would save $1,000,000.

I favor a sharp pruning knife to be used in striking from the roll that class of men who are not entitled to a pension and who did not see actual bona fide service, but who have obtained a pensionable status by fraud. By the application of justice in equalizing our pension list and striking from the roll those not entitled to draw a pension, the Government could reduce the present amount now paid many million dollars. would not injure those deserving a pension.

After mature deliberation, I frankly state that if I had followed my own personal views on this question, I would have voted against the Sherwood pension bill. This vote was a mistake in following a party policy rather than my own personal judgment. It is that mistake made by the best and wisest men of our country at times; every man makes mistakes; no man

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on page 25, line 3, I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "thirty." This man is now drawing an old-age pension of $15 He is a confirmed invalid and I submit that the advance to $20 is not what it ought to be. The claimant is William Dodds, late of Company H. Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Rop-DENBERY].

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is another of the special pension bills, similar to the bills which were passed about two weeks ago, and similar to others that we are advised will be brought in here about every change of the moon. These special bills increase existing pensions in almost if not every instance. I am interposing no objection to fair treatment of the old soldiers or their widows and dependents. It can not be urged that these special bills are giving pensions to needy, deserving, disabled, and unfortunate soldiers of the Civil War and their dependents who are not now receiving pensions from the Government. The persons mentioned in this voluminous report accompanying this bill are beneficiaries who at this time and for several years past have been granted, allowed, and drawing pensions from the Government. They are not instances in which special legislation is sought and needed in order to extend to them consideration as dependents or soldiers of the late, now far gone, Civil War. They are at this time pensioners of the Government under existing statutes and are receiving pensions as such. This special bill is merely the operation of special legislative machinery whereby the Pension Committee hears and considers pension propositions and exceeds and goes beyond the existing statutes providing pensions in the various cases. They are raised from $3 to $20; they are raised from $12 to $30; they go from $15 to $40 and to $60. These pensioners are no more deserving of this favoritism than thousands of other pensioners on the list, if, indeed, any deserve or need this increase. It is a species of favoritism, it is a species of privileged legislation whereby one soldier or the widow or the dependents of that soldier is, by the activity of a Member of Congress, given $50 a month, $60 a month, whereas a like deserving case will go on year after year as the recipient of an $8, a $10, or a $12 pension. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this class of legislation is in the face of the general pension bill already passed. Let passage of such bills continue here at this session of Congress, at the next session of Congress, and at the next session of Congress, and by the time the Sherwood bill or the Sulloway bill or some other general bill is enacted all the favored number will be drawing each month $40, $50, and $60

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, my request for leave to extend remarks is not to indulge in observations of my own which are not actually delivered upon the floor. It impresses me that, while these special pension bills bearing marks of discriminating favor to special pensioners are being passed, the pronounced views of a very distinguished ex-Union soldier may be appropriately confided to the permanent records for the thoughtful consideration of Members of Congress. I make reference to Gen. Charles Francis Adams, who gave nearly four years of service to the Union, covering almost the whole period of the Civil War. Gen. Adams has lately contributed three very instructive articles, showing great research, by publishing the same in recent numbers of World's Work. I do not assume that the statements and opinions of this distinguished ex-Federal Army officer will be accredited to a spirit of prejudice or actuated by motives of sectionalism.

I now quote literally extracts from the introduction written by Gen. Adams as prefatory to the article hereinafter inserted They are submitted as being peculiarly applicable to the pending legislative favoritism. Gen. Adams, one of the comparatively few surviving commanders of the Union Army, under his own signature, writes as follows:

The subject matter discussed in the following paper is momentous, reaching down, as it does, to the very base of our American institutions—the purity of the constituencies. The fast-developing pension system is nothing more nor less than the initial step in what will, and at no remote day, surely become an established policy of general bribery and corruption. At present, in dealing with the subject, Members of Congress and others are either shortsighted or foolish enough to say that, though the amount expended is large and steadily increases, it will be but for a brief time. In 10 years the veterans will all, or nearly all, be dead; the thing will then stop of itself.

Nothing of the sort will occur. On the contrary, it is vastly more probable that 10 years hence the pension roll of this country will be $300,000,000 a year than that it will be less than it now is. What has hitherto been done in this way, or is now being done, is merely the entering wedge. It is so safe, as well as so personally inexpensive, for mbers of Congress to buy votes with the public money.

The order of future events will proceed somewhat as follows: We now have a "veteran" pension system affecting, on an average, about 2,600 voters in every congressional district north of the Potomac and, with a few exceptions only, in all of those west of the Mississippi. The parties openly and avowedly bid against each other for that vote—Democrat against Republican. It already involves an annual disbursement of about $400,000 a year in each congressional district. Under the proposed "dollar-a-day" largess measure this amount will be increased to about $600,000 a year in each district. Next in order will be the volunteer officers' retired list, involving an annual expenditure of about $15,000,000—$50,000 on an average in each district. Next come the widows and dependents of the "veterans," involving an amount impossible now to estimate. If fixed at $20 a month, as proposed, it will probably be $100,000,000 a year for an indefinite future period and affect a number of households not easy to calculate. That the "old militia men and teamsters and telegraphers and the other men who did so much for the Union cause" should now be given a pensionable status is next urged. And why not? They also have votes in congressional elections!

The system thus fairly inaugurated, the next move, already agitated, is to pension the civil-service officials. These are some 300,000 in number, or about 700 in each congressional district, which, added to the 2,600 already referred to, makes an aggregate of 3,400. Behind that comes the old-age pension system and other gratuity projects of which echoes from abroad and suggestions at home already reach us.

It is not too much to say, therefore, that on the road we have now fairly entered and upon which by leaps and bounds are so rapidly advancing, within the next 15 years the annual pension disbursements of this country will amount not improbably to five hundred millions, representing over a million of annual gratuities paid out in every congressional district, affecting no less than from resenting over a million of annual gratuates pressional district, affecting no less than from 5,000 to 7,000 voters therein.

Under the system hitherto in vogue in this country of progressive pensions—that is, annual increases promised by candidates for office—it is not too much to say that at a not remote period the Government will thus at each election be practically put up at auction. Each congressional candidate will travel through his district, hat in hand, promising to be more liberal in the way of pensions, etc., than his opponent. "Codlin's the friend, not Short. Short's very well as far as he goes, but the real friend is Codlin—not Short!" The result of such competitive election bidding any disinterested citizen can with no considerable difficulty work out for himself.

The writer has frequently been asked why, in face of the apparently inevitable, he assumed the not inconsiderable task of preparing the following papers. His reply is simple. Having himself done military duty in the Civil War for a period little short of four years, his sole object is, in so far as may be in his power, to bear witness against what he considers and what many others consider one of the most individually demoralizing and politically debauching acts of which record exists, and altogether the most ill-concealed and unblushing piece of political jobbery, corruption, and bribery as yet to be found inscribed in American annals. Nor is any end to it yet in sight!

Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General, 1865.

WASHINGTON, January 1, 1912.

Mr. Speaker, I now submit the three courageous articles of Gen. Charles Francis Adams, with his accurately prepared and instructive appendix thereto. The truth of statement of facts by him can not be controverted; whether the prophecies made by him are to be fulfilled remains for Congress to determine and for the future to disclose.

SPARE AT THE SPIGOT AND SPILL AT THE BUNG—THE MODERN PRACTICAL OBSERVANCE OF A POLITICAL MANDATE LOOKING TO A WISE, EFFICIENT, AND EFFECTIVE ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS WITH A VIEW TO A RETRENCHMENT OF EXPENDITURES—CAMPAIGN PROMISE AND CONGRESSIONAL PERFORMANCE—THE CARCASS AND THE VULTURES.

GRESSIONAL PERFORMANCE—THE CARCASS AND THE VULTURES.

The publication known as the Congressional Record is an awkward as well as an enduring fact; and with it at hand for ready reference by political opponents, habitually to reconcile utterances and votes of a wholly contradictory tenor, involves on the part of the average Member of Congress recourse by no means infrequent to a fineness of distinction bearing close resemblance to bare-faced sophistry. So gross is this, indeed, as at times to seem indicative of scant respect for the intelligence of those, constituents or otherwise, to confuse and deceive whom it is designed. A somewhat striking illustration of this commonplace is now apparently in order for January, 1912, an illustration to be writ large and in dollars—in fact, in the scores of millions of dollars.

monplace is now apparently in order for January, 1912, an illustration to be writ large and in dollars—in fact, in the scores of millions of dollars.

The special session of the Sixty-second Congress, convened in April last, adjourned on the 25th of August. Called in advance of the regular date of meeting to consider and act upon the proposed commercial pact with the Dominion of Canada, Congress, in so far as was practical, confined its action to the business immediately in hand, attempting no general legislation; but at its closing session Mr. Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama, the official and recognized leader of the dominant party in the House of Representatives, made a statement in regard to the economies in national expenditure so far effected as a result of the incoming of the political party of which he was the mouthpiece. The amount was not considerable; in fact, as national expenditures go, it was trivial. In Mr. Underwood's own language, "the total saving in money as a result of the enforcement of Democratic policies during the present session of Congress is $308,836.67." But he then went on further to say that "a determined effort will be made to effect proportional savings in the administration of the Government in every department"; and he added: "This House is pledged to reform the administration of public affairs and to retrench public expenditures. * * Not a dollar will be appropriated which a careful investigation does not demonstrate should be expended in a wise, efficient, and effective administration of public affairs."

The program to which Mr. Underwood thus committed his party was excellent as well as pronounced. The effect, however, was somewhat impaired by a subsequent remark of ex-Speaker Cannon, to the effect that he believed "the country will not approve the waste of time over the saving of cents here and there when the great affairs touching expenditures that aggregate nearly a thousand million dollars are neglected"—and he might have said "ignored."

The saving referred to by Mr. Und record. Meanwhile, throughout that seedon there was, from its bedinerion to tend, in spite of the assurances and commitments, an undertone curiously and distinctly ominous so far as any reduction of the aggregate of public expenditures was concerned—an undertone most suggestive of the ancient adago as respects saving at the spitot and wasting at the bumphole. While a jealous and watchid eye was kept the control of the cont measures had been denied, was an effort to get some slight recognition for their services."

The Sixty-first Congress expired on the 4th of last March, and the Sixty-second Congress met a month later. The House of Representatives of the old Congress had been strongly Republican; that of the new was as strongly Democratic. This House had, moreover, been chosen in an outspoken spirit of protest against the extravagant and even reckless scale of public expenditure alleged to have been indulged in—a scale necessitating most onerous taxation. Thus the popular branch of the Sixty-second Congress was chosen under a distinct mandate—the inauguration of a system of economical reform. The cost of living, already excessive, was manifestly increasing, and a halt was accordingly called to an era of inordinate and extravagant public profusion. With an eye to this mandate, the committees of the new House were in due time appointed. Over those committees Democratic chairmen presided; Democrats predominated in their membership. Among the committees thus appointed was that on Invalid Pensions. If met and at once proceeded to the work assigned it—that of a reformed and economical administration involving far the largest single item of national disbursement.

As a result, it may be assumed, of full and deliberate consideration it at last, on August 19, reported what must be taken for its idea of an improved economical substitute for the so-called Sulloway bill, that measure which had so narrowly failed of passage by the previous Congress. Of this bill—the Sherwood bill—more presently. Meanwhile, through some parliamentary legerdemain unnecessary to consider, another measure was already before the House. This was known as the Anderson bill and was a measure of the character usually known as a "blanket bill." That is, it provided for an indiscriminate and large increase of pensions under provisions of the most sweeping character, including not only veterans of the war but the widows of deceased soldiers and sailors; and it was estimated that, if it became a law, it would increase the draft on the Treasury by some $50,000,000 a year—in other words, raise that draft in the aggregate to the two hundred million mark. This bill, it was alleged, had been, so to speak, "sneaked" into its position on the calendar; and the charge, which was apparently advanced in numerous papers, led, on the 31st of July, to a somewhat unseemly altercation on the floor of the House between two Members, both from Ohlo—Gen. Sherkwood, the chairman of the Committee, the introducer of the bill. Mr. Anderson, a member of the Committee, the introducer of the bill. Mr. Anderson, asserted that, though he might have "sneaked" in his bill, he at least did not "sneak into the corridors and fail to vote when the bill came up for action," thus intimating that the chairman of the committee, claiming paternity of another measure, had in this way sought to evade responsibility. Passing by these amenities of debate as immaterial to the main issue, it is not necessary for present purposes seriously to consider the so-called Anderson bill. It would, however, be difficult to suggest anything in its favor. Crude and slovenly

Over the head of the Democratic House, about to fulfill its mandate of economy, this bill now hangs.

In the report which accompanied this bill much space was, for appearance sake, allotted to an enumeration of economies to be effected thereby. The measure itself is framed on the basis of what is known as the dollar-a-day pension bill, first introduced by the chairman of the present committee, Gen. Sherwood—"Old Dollar-a-day Sherwood, as he likes to have himself designated—then a newly elected Member, early in December, 1907. Reintroduced in December, 1909. It was pending before the Committee on Invalid Pensions up to the end of the Sixty-first Congress. In the report now accompanying its appearance in a new and perfected form much emphasis is laid upon the fact that during the preceding year the Government had paid out over $700,000 for medical boards and special examiners. It was now proposed that these boards, to a certain extent barriers against abuse, were to be done away with as being no longer required. This was a measure of economy! Furthermore, it is stated that during the previous year $300,000 was paid out for special pension examiners, nearly all of which, it was argued, could now be saved and the money paid direct to the soldiers. A second barrier against abuse done away with in the name of economy! A further "economy" feature was that under the sweeping provisions of this measure the Pension Bureau would be in a position largely to reduce its office force. Over $1,000,000, it is claimed, now spent in salaries could thus be saved and paid direct to the soldiers. And yet, even while advancing this argument, those who advance it know perfectly well that the measure they are advocating will increase the work of the Pension Bureau for years to come, necessitating a large addition to its clerical force if the avalanche of claims which pour in is to be disposed of within any reasonable estimate of the lifetime yet remaining to the "decrepit" and "halting" pension claimant. But it is so throughout! The ut eral" pension legislation are conceivable only by those who make a study of the Record. The audacity of assertion, plainly contradictory, exceeds belief.

Without repealing any existing pension law or in any way modifying, restricting, or changing the laws or rules governing the payment of present pensions to the inmates of national soldiers' homes, the so-called Sherwood or dollar-a-day bill seeks to provide that every soldier who served in the Civil War, no matter where, when, or how, for the period of 90 days should receive $15 per month for the remainder of his life; every soldier who served 6 months, $20; every one who served 9 months was to get $25; and he who served 1 year or more, irrespective of his present age, was to receive $30 per month. All these payments, it is to be borne in mind, were to be made to men who suffered no wound or injury during their term of service nor incurred therein any physical disability. Such are already cared for by virtue of other legislation. The payments now provided were to be a pure gratuity, based upon the fact that the recipient, at a period nearly 50 years ago, performed some sort of military service for 90 days or 6 months or 9 months or 1 year or more. Upon the theory that all the money to be appropriated should go to soldiers in distress, a provision was added that no ex-soldier enjoying a net income of $1,000 a year or more should draw any additional pension under the provisions of this act. The word "additional" here should be noted. It is a word of much significance in this connection.

While this bill was being drafted and was still in committee, it was referred to the Pension Bureau for the usual estimate of the cost likely to be entailed thereby should it become a law. The Pension Bureau refused, however, to make the called-for estimate, on the ground that, owing to the section which excluded soldiers with a net private income per year of $1,000 or more, no data existed upon which an estimate could be based. Thereupon the committee proceeded to make an esti operation of the bill was not likely to exceed $20,000,000. But, as the great mass of the claims are necessarily acted upon during subsequent operate back to the time the claim was filed, it is not unsafe to estimate that for the second year the during the claim was filed, it is not unsafe to estimate that for the second year the during the claim was filed, it is not unsafe to estimate that for the second year the during the claim was filed, it is not unsafe to estimate that for the several periods of service prescribed in this measure $450,000,000. The several periods of service prescribed in this measure of pensiones, critical the agreement of the several periods of service prescribed in this measure of pensiones. seem incredible.

The question therefore naturally suggests itself, Why is such a system continued? And much more, how has it come about that the extension of such a system is not only proposed but is so sure of passage that, can it once be brought to a vote, action can be forestalled only by recourse to parliamentary expedients? To anyone who makes a study, even a superficial study, of existing conditions, the answer is obvious. Much has been heard of late of the trusts and of great trade combinations which control legislation, greatly to the public detriment, while more conducive yet to private emolument—"predatory wealth," the phrase goes. It is safe, however, to say that there is to-day in Washington, or in the world, no influence which, in its power to break down opposition and to bring about the legislative results it desires, is at all comparable to the influence which has grown up and become organized under the existing United States pension system. That system disburses eight score millions a year. Wherever disbursements on any account run into the millions the opportunity for what is known as "pickings" can not but exist. To that rule no exception can be found. The Commissioner of Fenalosis, in his report for the year ending June 39, 1210, sites at more than 25,000 recognized attorneys practice before the bureau. During the year 1909 more than 822,000 of public money was disbursed among them. He further states that there was a marked increase in the amount of attorneys' fees and the state of the provisions there are an anaked increase in the amount of attorneys' fees and, due year. Every "blanket" act implies an enormous increase of attorneys' fees. A most fair-faced and plausible, but altogether deceptive clause from time to time appears in these acts, to the effect that no money under the provisions thereof shall be paid to attorneys. The clausa the case of possible beneficiaries under the various pension laws after the Spanish War. "On the return of the Army from the Philippine Islands most of the troops were mustered out in San Francisco." In Advance of their crivia at that point the pension attorneys of Washomeet the returning soldiers. According to the language of the soldiers advance of their crivia at that point the pension attorneys of Washomeet the returning soldiers. According to the language of the soldiers themselves, the rival agents beset them at once, importuning them to flet their chains for pensions without delay. To the bewildered youth, whether an invalid or not. The hospitals had to be guarded against these torneunors masquerading as friends of the invalids." In the case of a single regiment composed of officers and men of exceptional physicatory of the control of th gressional district.

For reasons that at once suggest themselves, no considerable opposition to this indiscriminate but unequal distribution of public money has as yet been made by the representatives of the Southern States, though, in addition to their share of the heavy burden of taxation imposed generally by the national pension payments, each of these States supports a local system making provision for the disabled and necessitous yet living among those furnished by it to the armies of the Confederacy. Incidentally, it may be observed that some of those Confederate pension measures, as respects administration as well as the measure of relief furnished, might well afford material for congressional study. Carefully framed, while assisting the deserving and needy, they do not hold out temptation to fraud or actively stimulate and foster mendicancy. For instance, under the pension law of South Carolina there is a provision that property sufficient to produce $75 in the applicant's own or his wife's name debars a possible beneficiary from receipt of a pension. Furthermore, it is credibly asserted that in the Confederacy the veteran "who possesses even a moderate competence, who has sons or daughters able to provide for him, would regard it as a humiliation to be offered a pension by the State."

to be made good.

The communities, local and otherwise, then combined; enlisting agencies were established, and men sold themselves and were bought and delivered singly and in lots at so much a head, like cattle. It was a wretched system, cowardly, wasteful, inhuman; but, under it—and it was pursued for three years—men were quoted much as bullocks at Smithfield, a fair average valuation being, say, three to six dollars a pound, the only difference from the Smithfield basis of dealing being that quality was not considered. Anything went!

Needless to say, the material forwarded to the front under such a system—the bogus conscription system—constantly deteriorated. In the army this was notorious; notorious not only to everyone who held a commission, but to every man in the ranks called upon to associate with those forwarded under guard to fill up the war-worn battalions. Desertion and "bounty jumping," having become a caling, were reduced to a system. As the war went on the "recruits," recent importations from Europe or picked up in the slums and from the gutters of the great cities, were notoriously looked upon by the veterans of 1861 with averted eyes—objects of contempt; they were treated with scant consideration. Yet these, "the cankers of a calm world and a long peace," to a large extent constitued what are now known as "warworn veterans," glorious heroes," and "worthy patriots."

To one who personaly recalls the events of that struggle—its hard, realistic, and mercenary features—the present-day utterances concerning it are a constant source of amused astonishment. In skimming over the columns of the Congressional Record, such can not but marvel at the amount of cant and fustian—nauseating twaddle, perhaps, would not be too extreme a term—deemed useful properly to tubricate the creaking district machinery. Any detailed recurrence to the facts and evidence is, however, apt to be denominated "muck-raking" and denounced as such. Perhaps, however, a brief reference in this connection might be permitted to such standard authorities as Mr. James Ford Rhodes's History and Secretary Gideon F. Welles's Diary, Mr. Rhodes would inform the guish, however, a brief r more than one year—besides the private soldiers' pay of $16 per month with clothing and rations.

"The bounty in the country of New York was more than that generally paid throughout the country, although in some districts it was even higher." As respects the "bounty jumper." the inevitable product of such a system, Mr. Rhodes next says: "The provost marshal general stated in his final report that 'a man now in the Albany penitentiary, undergoing an imprisonment of four years, confessed to having jumped the bounty 32 times.' It was stated that 'out of a detachment of 625 recruits sent to reinforce a New Hampshire regiment in the Army of the Potomac, 137 deserted on the passage, $2 to the enemy's picket line, and 36 to the rear, leaving but 370 men." (Rhodes, vol. 5, pp. 430-1.)

Recurring next to the recently published diary of Gideon F. Welles, President Lincoin's Secretary of the Navy, the following is from the report, written down at the time, of a species of council of magnates held at the White House, September 1, 1862, before the war was yet 18 months old: "* * In these remarks the President concurred, and said he was shocked to find that of 140,000 whom we were paying for in Pope's army only 60,000 could be found. McClellan brought away 93,000 from the Peninsula, but could not to-day count on over 45,000. As regarded demoralization, the President said, there was no doubt that some of our men permitted themselves to be captured in order that they might leave on parole, get discharged, and go home. Where there is such rottenness, is there not reason to fear for the country?" (Diary of Gideon Welles, vol. I, p. 117.) Later on, as is well known, Andersonville put an effectual stop to that familiar game; but it went briskly on at first. Lincoin and his advisers called it "rottenness"; but now they differentiate it in Congress as only a form of nostalgia! The poor lads, fresh from their innocent homes, labored under such an uncontrollable desire to get back to their mammas and the vine-covered cottage, that the good boys, though a bit guileless perhaps; but, all "heroes" now, every one, without discrimination, is to have for life a dollar a day pension money?

Historically speaking, it is a fact not to be denied that the bounty-bought material constituted a large percentage of the whole Civil War levy—how large it is impossible to say; but it certainly sounds strange to the ears of those personally cognizant of the facts, and is, to say the least, an incorrect use of language to assert that those men enlisted without "thought of emoluments, pay, or pension." They did nothing of the kind; nor were they "patriots" either then or now. They sold themselves for bounty money; and they got it? Simply and avowedly mercenaries, they were constantly referred to by the older and more reliable as the "seven-dollars-a-pound fellows." As food for powder, such were paid at the time all, and more than all, they were worth. And to the truth of every word of this statement any officer who had, during the last two years of the war, charge of recruits on their way to the front—and there were many such—can bear testimony still. The great difficulty of preventing these "patriots" and "worthy soldiers" from deserting the moment they had handled their bounty money was one of the problems of the service. Then, far more battle-scared than now battle-scared, they are indiscriminately pensioned as "disinterested heroes"!

Much the same tone of reckless exaggeration is noticeable in the references made to the present condition of those who served. It is little less than a libel to speak of them as a class as prematurely old, or decreptit, or unable to support themselves, or as dependents, or as a band of virtual paupers. As a mass they do not in any of these respects differ from the great body of other American citizens. It was asserted in the recent congressional debate referred to that there are some 800,000 or 900,000 of these men still surviving. This again was a gross exaggeration. There are in fact somewhere in the neighborhood of half a mi quite as sufficiently provided for as the average American. Two years after Cromwell's Puritan army of the British Commonwealth was disbanded, following the Stuart restoration, in 1660, the Royalist office holder, Samuel Pepys, wrote in his diary, "Of all the old army now you can not see a man begging about the street; but what? You shall have this capitain turned a shoemaker, the Heutenant a baker, this herewer, that a haberdasher, this common soldler a porter, and every man in his apron and frock, etc., as if they never had done anything else." And much the same might have been said of the earlier emistments of the Civil War during the years that immediately followed its close. Then the politicians and pension-mongering vote-buyers got after them, with the usual demoralizing result. Even then they were and are as other American citizens; and surely it would be a libel on the average of American citizens; and surely it would be a libel on the average of American citizens; and surely it would be a libel on the average of American citizens to assert that the greater part of them, or the necessaries of life without assistance from the public. Those who composed the bone and sinew of the Army of the Union were in these respects certainly not below the American average. To assert of them, as has been asserted in Congress, that 36 per cent of them would be paupers if they were not pensioners—a grotesque perversion of facts—is remote from the truth.

So also as respects deserters, toward whom, judging by the RECOM, a most lenient congressional disposition exists—"amending" or "correcting" the record, the wise call it. Bills to effect this result—in other words, bills seeking by legislative action to set aside court records—are introduced by the score on every private-bill legislative day. All duly referred, they were formerly acted upon by committees so carelessly, and consequently so favorably, that the thing grew to be a scandal. The committees were finally notified that the President would feel obliged to veto suc

now; and, in altogether too many cases, the recipients of "liberal pensions" 1

But, in gentle and kindly extenuation of this terrible but ineffaceable record, it is sometimes urged that the number was largely, if not in greatest part, made up of men who, having served faithfully until hostilities ceased, then disappeared, or failed to report back for duty, because of their eagerness to return to their families and to civil life. That some such cases occurred is indisputable; but they were only rare exceptions. As any company or regimental officer who served in that war knows and will testify—Gen. ISAAC R. Shekwood, of Ohlo, for example—those men who, having served in the war, served it out, were not indifferent whether the word "deserter" was then inscribed against their names on the last regimental muster roll. Proud of what they had done, they wanted honorable discharge. Beyond this the deserter forfeited his pay and emoluments; he forfeited transportation to his home. The plea in extenuation just stated shows, in fact, only the simple-minded ignorance—the charitable disposition perhaps—of him who advances it. Those who witnessed what was probably the most notable display of the nineteenth century—the review of the Union Army at Washington after the close of hostilities—can not but retain a distinct recollection of the occasion and of the character and bearing of the men who figured in it. How many of those who there tramped in review before President and Commander in Chief is it supposed subsequently deserted, without pay and transportation, in their eagerness to get back to their families and homes? Safe to say, not one!

eagerness to get back to their families and homes? Safe to say, not one!

But, as matter of history, the deserter was, in the Army of the Union, referred to with scorn and treated with continuely; and anyone who commanded either a company or a regiment will now bear witness that those who deserted from it were almost invariably of the scum and dregs thereof. As a rule their absence unaccounted for was better than their "Present" at roll call. One and all, they then deserved to be shot; now, by act of Congress, they are pensioned by the score. More extraordinary still, not infrequently a suggestion has been heard on the floor of Congress to this effect: "Isn't it about time to let up on the deserters?" As respects such, the "blanket" pension bill is unquestionably convenient. Nor was it with undue strength of speech that Mr. Underwood, the leader of the majority in the present flouse, recently referred in debate to a measure of this description, which it was proposed to introduce out of the regular order, as "a bill to pension deserters who have had the charge of desertion removed by this House; to pension men who were never within 500 miles of a firing line; men who did not serve over 30 days in the Army." And when his attention was called to the fact that the particular "blanket" bill then in question provided for a somewhat longer period of service, he answered, with a manifest sneer: "Yes; it says 30 days instead of 30 days."

days."

It remains to consider the measure of remedial constructive legislation manifestly called for to meet such conditions. One of those who last winter participated in the House debate on the so-called Sulloway bill truly observed that if our national pension system policy were "tested by the pension policy of any civilized government in history such a measure as that then proposed [the Sulloway bill], ignoring the cardinal factors of merit and need, could never stand. The country has already gone too far in the pension policy in confounding the deserving with the undeserving, and the stupendous expenditures for unworthy cases is sure at last to imperil the cause of the deserving. The time has come when our pension policy is tending to pauperize able-bodied men and restrict the funds available for really needy soldiers and their dependents." The facts thus stated are indisputable, but before considering the remedy it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the cause of the scandal and abuse.

once pronounced excellent; its further application was proposed. So the next year a bill was prepared and submitted, generalizing, but in moderation only, the exceptional case. Presented May 7, 1906, and referred to the Committee on Military Claims, this measure, strictly limited, had a most plausible sound. As such it appealed. In fact, as soon became apparent, it was only the second blow upon the wedge inserted the previous year. Under this bill, Fifty-ninth Congress, Document No. 489, reported June 13, 1906, it was proposed to create a special roll to be known as the volunteer retired list. A place upon this roll was limited to those 70 years and upward of age, who had, after an actual Civil War service of two and one-half years, attained the rank of major general or brigadier general of Volunteers, or who, being field officers of volunteer regiments, had been brevetted major general or brigadier general. Eligibility to this roll was very properly extended to all who, without reference to the length of their service, having attained the above rank, had in the line of duty sustained injuries of a specified character. Those on the roll were to be entitled to three-fourths pay on the scale received by officers of like rank in the Regular Army. A somewhat imperfect list was prepared, assumedly containing the names of 191 persons reported as possible beneficiaries under this act should it become law. The passage of the act would, it was stated, involve an annual expenditure of about $550,000; not, for the end in view and under the conditions set forth, a considerable or unreasonable addition to an annual pension appropriation exceeding $150,000,000.

At first glance the measure commended itself. The length of service rendered, 30 months: the rank achieved, that of general; the age attained before becoming eligible as a beneficiary, 70 years; serving as guaranties, all established limitations. Here was honorable recognition and resonable reward for exceptional service, long rendered. It soon became apparent, howev

Congress, it made no progress; and so, gradually assuming new shape it at last became thoroughly comprehensive—so to speak, broad-bot-tomed. The age limit disappeared; the length of service was reduced; one after another every grade of commissioned officer was included in its scope.

A little "logrolling" was also at this stage expedient. The consideration and passage of the measure could tacitly but most advantageously be combined with the consideration and passage of another "blanket" measure in favor of the enlisted man, a measure affecting, it was said, 800,000 beneficiaries and adding $55,000,000 to the pension payments. This was business. In 30 States of the Union the two measures would, if combined, prohably affect an average of $3,000 beneficiaries in each congressional district; and, while it was probably affect an exclusive and influential voters in each district, yet they were active and influential voters.

In its final shape, and so accompanied, the original bill of 1906 had thus assumed a wholly new aspect. The measure as now framed applied to all ever having held a commission in the Civil War Volunteer Army, without regard to age, provided only that the entire term of service of the proposed beneficiarly had exceeded six months. In other words, every individual who had received a commission during the Civil War and had served half a year or more, whether as enlisted man or officer, at the front or in the snug retirement of a recruiting office, was placed for the remainder of his life on the retired volunteer officers' pension roll, with two-thirds pay, quite irrespective of whether he had received injury during his period of service, which had to a degree already been provided for under other legislation, and without regard to his extraneous means of support. And set fairles had, our ingities period of military service, been the recipients of larger salaries than had ever subsequently come their way.

The innocent-looking, strictly limited measure introduced in 1006 had thus in 1910 become "blank rank and file has been secured. That has the right of way. In the form it now bears the volunteer officers' bill is plausible. Nevertheless, this measure as is fi now passed will in all human probability appear to be merely another stage of the Hawley-Osterhaus wedge. Once it becomes law the cry will be raised, "Way his discrimination between the work of the Civil War commissioned officers already less than 70 years old the Civil War commissioned officers already less than 70 years old be removed, until finally all distinctions between the volunteer retired list and the Regular Army retired list would cease. Such cases as the following her immerous to specify, are on record and the control of the contr aries. The argument for economy through dispensing with effective administrative work is merely a cover for a public expenditure fraudulently profuse.

Publicity and the consequent purging of the roll being then first provided for, the next step would be to prepare, in the light of the experience of 50 years, a definitive and comprehensive measure understood to be of a final character, covering all possible cases and classes of cases, both ordinary and exceptional. It is useless to argue that such a measure is difficult of preparation. All the material necessary for framing it must have been accumulated, and is now in the hands of bureaus and officials amply competent to frame a measure accordingly. It only needs that they should be set to work. That the ordinary member of a Committee on Invalid Pensions is not qualified, or in any respect competent, to prepare so complex a measure is obvious. He has not the knowledge of precedents and statistics, nor could he devote to the framing of the bill the necessary amount of time and thought. It should be prepared to his hand, taking the place of one of those slip-shod "blanket" measures so discreditable to legislators, but which committees seem always ready to accept and report.

The course now to be pursued by the honestly sympathetic but yet conscientious Congressman would thus seem tolerably plain. When the next bill providing for an indiscriminate increase of pensions is proposed he should not oppose it as a measure of relief to the "worthy soldier" and "veteran," but, objecting to its form, he should ask that it be referred back to the committee reporting it, with instructions to prepare a bill of a definitive character, understood to be final, as well as comprehensive, covering all cases which a century's experience has shown likely to arise; the same to be reported as a substitute for the last pending specimen of "blanket" legislation. After all these years and in the face of such an accumulation of experience, involving more than four thousand millions of publ consideration.

Finally, a comprehensive measure, understood to be definitive, and as such doing away with all necessity for future congressional action, having been prepared, it would remain to provide the administrative machinery necessary to its effective working. This should not be difficult. It was, in fact, clearly pointed out in the debate on the Sulloway bill by Mr. Payne, of New York. The committee in its report had complained in terms already referred to of being hopelessly overworked; it was unable by utmost exertion—"day and night" put forth—to dispose of more than 1 in 50 of the cases referred to it. In reply, Mr. Payne said that if the committee was not able to reach all these "distressing cases" he wished to point out to them that by "enacting into general law the rules which they enforce when bills are brought before that committee, giving the administration of it to the Pension Bureau, they would, relieve the committee of the consideration of nearly all bills of the pension bureau, they would relieve the committee of the consideration of nearly all bills of the pension of the two houses, under which they are reporting special bills, and give the Commissioner of Pensions athority to grant pensions in active the Commissioner of Pensions at the control of the Pension Bureau, and the first than the control of the pension bureau, and the first than the control of the pension bureau, make not the arms and expensive machinery of the Pension Bureau, maker on the arms and expensive machinery of the Pension Bureau, maker on the arms and expensive machinery of the Pension Bureau, maker on the arms and expensive machinery of the Pension Bureau, maker on the arms would millions be saved anounly to the Government which it now that the pension bureau, maker out the arms would millions be saved anounly to the Government which it now the pension of the pension bureau, maker of the pension bureau, the pension of the pension bureau, maker of the pension bureau, the pension of the pension bureau, the pension of the pension and the pension of the pension and the pension of the pension are to be found in the Riccord of the pension are Obviously, a somewhat excessive premium on immorality; but it, also, meant votes. Furthermore, he advocated the extension of this beneficent system to cover all the militia of the war period, who, though "never technically mustered in the property of a retention of his presence in the National Connell Chamber."

It is a business as a political factor in a single district—ex pede, Herculem. In the absence of a detailed statement it is not possible to specify the aggregate number of pensioners, or the number of pensioners of each description, resident in the district in question. The average number in each district of the State which the Member in part represented is fall behind the average, it is not unfair to assume that one-half, at least, of those receiving pensions were "veterans" and would be beneficiaries under the provisions of the measure then pending. The average number of pensioners, making it $30 a month. The net result would be that pending measure, making it $30 a month. The net result would be that gratitious disbursement among the voters of an additional sum of $17,000 a month, a similar sum being already disbursed, or $200,000 per annum in addition to the $200,000 provided by existing law. The pirrality received by the Member in question at the last election was $2,500 in a total vote of 46,000. Comment is unnecessary; the interence surgests itself.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a misapprehension on the part of some gentlemen on this side of the House with reference to the sort of legislation that is reported out from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I have heard the gentleman who has preceded me a number of times on this proposition, and he seems to miss entirely the intention of this committee when it reports out the bills of the character which it reports. I served for four years on that committee, and I know from actual experience whereof I speak. I have known many cases having great merit that did not come under the general pension laws of the country that should have received assistance by reason of special legislation that were rejected by the committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. ANSBERRY. You may.
Mr. TRIBBLE. Is the gentleman a member of the committee at the present time?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I am not at the present time, I regret to Mr. TRIBBLE. You are not at the present time?

Mr. ANSBERRY. No; but I can say for the committee—Mr. TRIBBLE. Have not you been present here and have not you seen gentlemen rise and move to amend these bills by striking out $35 and inserting $70?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I have.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And by striking out various amounts and increasing the recommendation of the committee as shown by the bill. That has been done this morning. Did not you hear it?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not know; but I will wager— Mr. TRIBBLE. Did not the gentleman hear the amendment put in this morning by the gentleman from Illinois increasing, on the floor of the House, from $15, as recommended by the committee, to $30?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I did not; but I will wager that if the gentleman investigates he will find that it is a meritorious case; in fact, one of unusual merit.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Did the committee investigate and consider it?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I said I was not a member of the committee, and do not know; but I imagine they did.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If that committee investigated that case why did not they report that amendment instead of a gentleman rising on the floor and offering the amendment?

Mr. ANSBERRY. This committee, as I was about to say, acts as a court of equity on pension legislation, and they have more business than they can possibly attend to, and the gentleman doubtless appreciates the fact that the cases they are called upon to investigate are made upon affidavits of physicians and neighbors of the applicant, and that an affidavit is an inadequate way of expression. It is next to impossible to describe a man's true physical condition by an affidavit, and occasionally the papers are gotten up by an inexperienced man, and this frequently accounts for some of the difficulties which confront the committee, and the committee, not being infallible, occasionally makes a mistake, and then the Member who introduced the bill asks the House to correct the error.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Was there a court of equity to pass on the amendment introduced by Mr. Sulloway increasing a pension from $35 to $70 on the floor of the House?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Of course, the members of the committee which the mistaken and you wight he mistaken are approached.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Of course, the members of the committee might be mistaken, and you might be mistaken, or any other Member of the House might be mistaken.

Mr. TRIBBLE. They had that case before them?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I suppose so.

Mr. TRIBBLE. He introduced his amendment raising it from $35 to $70 by amendment to the bill on the floor of the House, and no member of the committee objected, although the committee investigated the claim and reported $35.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Why did you not object to it? You were here. Why did you not object when your objection would have amounted to something, and not now?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I did oppose it. I have spoken and voted against all increase-pension appropriations of this session of Congress

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield? I ask just a minute's time to answer the gentleman as to the amend-

Mr. ANSBERRY. I will ask my colleague to get time in his own right. I am sure he can get it, and I have but a minute or two left.

I want to say that the legislation of this committee is misunderstood, because I think the gentlemen who have spoken on the floor of this House in opposition to it have failed to investigate the cases concerning which they raise question about. They do not understand the rules of that committee. think that a member of the committee or a Member of this House who wants a special bill has but to introduce the bill and go down before the committee and get it allowed. If he had as many applications for special legislation as I have, he would understand that is not the case. I have a hundred special cases which I would like the committee to investigate and pass, and doubtless other Members are similarly situated. This committee passes upon legislation, as I said before, that can not be allowed under the general pension laws and the strict rules of pension legislation at the bureau. I wish we could have had more of special legislation. The men whom I have been able to take care of in my district by special legislation are men who can not be helped by the Bureau of Pensions under existing law, and in most every instance are men who should have received more than the $24 or $30, and in one instance $72, that they did receive. I am tired of hearing the carping criticism of men who do not understand the pension proposition, particularly the special legislation that is passed upon by the committee of this House. Procure a copy of the rules that govern the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and you will find them all too strict, and if my critical colleague, after studying them, finds them too liberal he will be the first person who has ever given them serious study who reached that conclusion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say for the benefit of the gentleman over here who objects to this bill that there are times when the committee offers amendments on the floor of the House. But they are made in this way: A Member of the House introducing a bill furnishes the proofs and the proof goes before the special examiner who writes up these claimsthe gentleman detailed by the Pension Bureau to do this work. He makes his recommendation, and from him it goes to our committee, and when our committee takes it up and considers it we act upon his recommendation and make a report at a certain rate. Sometimes following that report we have information that a soldier who has been given a rate of $24 or $30 a month has probably had a stroke of paralysis and requires the constant and continuous attention of another person in caring for him, and in view of that fact we come in on the floor and ask that the rate in this particular case may be increased. In the bills to follow there are two cases of that kind, where the committee, after considering information coming to us since the report was made, will ask that the rate fixed in the bill be I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] that no bill comes before this House until it has had careful consideration by our committee, and if any Member of this House thinks he can get a bill through our committee without first showing us that his applicant is worthy of our consideration, let him try it. Every bill coming before the House receives careful consideration by the committee, and after the committee has acted, if further information reaches the committee that the condition of the soldier has grown worse, to the extent that he requires the constant care and attention of another person, we come in on the floor and ask that the rate be increased.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is it not a custom in this House for a committee, when it reports a bill from the committee, to stand solidly and resist any amendment that may be offered to the bill? Is not that the rule followed here every day?

Mr. ADAIR. If any Member of this House has a bill such as I have referred to in my remarks, he should come to the committee with it, and if we believe-

Mr. TRIBBLE. You do not answer my question. You can answer it yes or no. Is not that the custom of the House?

Mr. ADAIR. It has never been the practice of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is it not done here every day? Mr. ADAIR. It may be the custom with other committees,

Mr. ADAIR. It may be the custom with other committees, but not with this committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does not the same rule apply to the Pension Committee as applies to others? Have we reached the stage in pension legislation that Members can rise and increase special pensions on the floor of the House and no investigation of the merits of the case and no member of the committee or no one else rise to object?

Mr. ADAIR. I am speaking of the committee of which I am a member, which presents this bill to the House. What want is to do justice to the soldiers of the Civil War, and if it can be shown to our satisfaction that a claim in this bill is deserving of greater consideration than we have given it the committee is willing and anxious to reconsider the matter, to the end that justice may be done. All amendments offered are committee amendments and have been carefully considered.

What we want is to do justice, and that is what we propose to do. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon this bill and amendments thereto to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question upon the bill and amendments to its final passage

Mr. MANN. What is the bill, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. The pension bill, H. R. 18954. The question is on ordering the previous question.

During the reading of the bill, Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard the debate indulged in here during the last few minutes in relation to the methods pursued by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I have had an average length of service in the House, and I have had more than an average amount of work with the Committee on Invalid Pensions. want to say in behalf of that committee and each of its members, both as constituted in this Congress and in Congresses heretofore since I have been a Member of this House, that I do not believe there is a more painstaking committee serving the House than the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

I have had many bills rejected by the committee because those bills did not present that element of merit which the committee demanded. I want to say, too, that it has been very seldom that I have ever introduced a private pension bill without myself knowing the facts upon which the bill was predicated and the relief asked. The fact of it is, I have been into the homes of nearly every man for whom I have ever introduced a private pension bill, and I believe, with the exception of three or four instances, of every man for whom a private pension bill has been received by this House at the pension of the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension below the pension bill has been received by this House at the pension below the pension bill believe the pension below the pension private pension bill has been passed by this House at my request.

My complaint against the committee is not on account of its inefficiency, but because of the very great deliberation exercised by that committee at a time when many of the old soldiers of the country can not stand so much deliberation and consequent delay. Why, sir, during this Congress and since the recess I have had to notify the committee to strike from its bills three different cases in which favorable reports had been ordered because the men for whom the bills had been introduced had died. I had appealed to the committee and urged prompt action. I had told them the conditions surrounding these unfortunate men, but the committee, in its care and in its great deliberation, demanded further proofs, and more proofs, until the claimants answered a summons from on high and their names had to be stricken from the bills.

I have no complaint, however, Mr. Speaker. The Committee on Invalid Pensions ought to exercise the care which, in my has always characterized its deliberations in these matters. But I say in behalf of the present Committee on Invalid Pensions and in behalf of the former committee which performed such arduous and such valuable service under the chairmanship of my good friend, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Sulloway], one of the best men, as I believe, in this House-and I say this without any effort at flattery, a man whose heart is not surpassed in its largeness by anything on earth except his own stalwart stature [applause]-in behalf of all the members of these committees, that in my opinion their work deserves and ought to receive a cordial indorsement of Members on both sides of the House, and so far as I am concerned they have always had it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The pro forma, amendment will be considered withdrawn.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend pages 15 and 16 by striking out lines 23 and 24, on page 15, and lines 1 and 2, on page 16, the claimant being dead.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Burke].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend pages 15 and 16 by striking out lines 23 and 24 on page 15 and lines 1 and 2 on page 16.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend page 19 of the bill, in line 13, by striking out the words
"twenty-four" and substituting therefor the words "thirtysix." This increases the pension of Frank Church to $36.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, in line 13, strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee I move to amend page 24, line 3, by striking out the word "twenty" and substituting the words "thirty-six." This increases the pension of George S. Bristol to $36 a month.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, in line 3, strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed. On motion of Mr. Burke of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the item on page 5, beginning with line 7, office of the Chief Signal Officer, be read.

The CHAIRMAN. That was one of the items passed over temporarily yesterday, to be taken up to-day.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the item.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons and airplanes, including their maintenance and repair; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $325,000: Provided, however, That not more than $75,000 of said amount shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of airplanes and other aerial machines.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, on page 5, in line 23, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "seventy-five," so that it will read "$375,000"; and in line 24, on the same page, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, in line 23, strike out "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five." In line 24, page 5, strike out "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Virginia will agree to the amendment.

Mr. HAY. I will not. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, last year when the Army appropriation bill was reported to the House it contained no provision whatever for ariships or airplanes, as they are called in this bill. I brought the attention of the matter to the House at the time, and the House provided an increase of the appropriation of $125,000 to be devoted to that purpose.

My proposition at first was to increase the appropriation $250,000, to be devoted to the subject of airplanes. By agreement in the committee at the time the amount was reduced to $125,000, and that amount was agreed upon by a practically unanimous vote.

In the progress of the world the methods of warfare have materially changed. Originally it was probably carried on by the aid of clubs and rocks, afterwards by spears and swords and bows and arrows and catapults, until we came to the old-fashioned firearms, and now to-day modern firearms.

I have not the slightest doubt in my own mind that the methods of warfare will be entirely changed in the course of not many years by the use of air craft of some kind. Just what form they will take, of course no one can predict; but when we remember the tremendous advance that has been made in all branches of science within the last few years it must be patent to everybody that the navigation of the air has only begun, and no one can predict or foresee the remarkable advance which will probably be made. We spend in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 here on the Army and another $100,000,000 or $125,000,000 a year on the Navy, and I venture to predict that before my time shall end the present method will be out of date by the use of air-navigating vessels or ships of some kind. If that should be the case—if we are maintaining an Army and Navy as a sort of insurance against war-certainly we ought to keep up to date or in advance of others in new methods which may be used in warfare. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is not a large sum of money, and if by the expenditure of $125,000 a year we are able, when the time comes, to have command of the air, it will be worth all the armies and navies you have, as now constituted.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay], endeavoring to reduce expenditures-and, in the main, I agree with him in his effort—has, in my judgment, gone too far in this particular. We can afford to lead the world in the study of air navigation; but, so far from doing it—although we were the originators of the aeroplane—we are falling behind those nations with whom we would come in conflict if we had a war.

Prof. Langley, who outlined the scientific ideas which finally resulted in the construction of an aeroplane by the Wright brothers, was the father of air navigation, and ought to be followed up by the country providing for the future methods of war so that we may have not only the instruments of future wars but the men familiar with them.

I stand with the gentleman from Virginia on a good many propositions in this bill, but it is a great regret to me that he thinks it is necessary for him to reduce this appropriation. will be far better to reduce any other appropriation in the bill and increase this. I do not believe the country desires that our study and investigation of air navigation shall be restricted or curtailed in the effort to save a paltry $50,000. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation to which the gentleman from Illinois refers was reduced by the committee largely by the statement made by the Chief Signal Officer, Gen. Allen, as to the amount expended from last year's appropriation, and also upon the statement made by him that the manufacture of aeroplanes was in its infancy. The committee believed that it was not the part of wisdom to buy a lot of what might become in the very near future useless machines.

Now, Gen. Allen said that he has left at the present time $72,000 of the appropriation which was made last year. said that they desired to purchase aeroplanes sufficient to have a fleet or flock, or whatever you call it-Mr. AMES. Covey. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. A fleet of 19 or 20 aeroplanes; 20 was what they desired. They have 7 now, and with $72,000, which they already have, they can purchase 12 more, which would nearly make the number they say they ought to have. I asked him how much it took to maintain these aeroplanes, and he said up to the present time they had expended $18,000 for maintaining So that we are making a very liberal appropriation for the maintenance of these aeroplanes and for the purchase of all the aeroplanes that the Chief Signal Officer of the Army says they want to carry at this time.

Now, these aeroplanes only cost $5,000 apiece. That is the uniform price, I believe, and they can with this appropriation buy enough to make up the 20 which the Chief Signal Officer says is what they want, and they will have a sufficient appropriation to maintain them after they are bought.

Therefore I can see no reason why we should now increase this appropriation, which, upon the showing of the Chief Signal Officer, is amply sufficient to do what they want to do. I am entirely in sympathy with the idea that if we should be so unfortunate as to have a war we should be ready with aeroplanes or any other fighting machines that may be necessary to contend with any other country. But I do not want the Government to go into the purchase of machines which, according to the statement of the man best informed on the subject, may become obsolete and useless in two or three years, when we shall have to reject them and purchase new machines. these reasons I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read a memorandum from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

When was that memorandum made?

Mr. HAY. When was that memorar Mr. PRINCE. On February 6, 1912.

Since the hearings and since the bill was reported? Mr. HAY.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire if that memorandum is made by the Chief Signal Officer? Mr. PRINCE. It is.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. After the hearings were had?

Yes; after the bill had been reported. Mr. PRINCE. Mr. AMES. Why should we not have light at any time?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the committee know about it or just the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not think the committee knows anything about it. That is why I want to read it, that the Committee of the Whole will have knowledge of it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I mean the Committee on Military

Mr. PRINCE. No; the Committee on Military Affairs has not

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Not even the chairman knows anything about it?

Mr. PRINCE. No; it is a memorandum that I say came from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, and the chairman knows nothing about it, as far as I know. It is as follows:

FEBRUARY 6, 1912.

The estimate for the Signal Service of the Army, including aviation, was $375,000. This amount was reduced to $325,000 (see line 23, page 5, Army appropriation bill), leaving available for aviation purposes only $75,000. The item of $125,000 for aviation purposes last year was placed in the bill by Congress on its own initiative on the floor of the House, and it is believed that this amount of money is a very conservative sum to spend for this purpose. Out of the appropriation of $125,000 for the current year the Government will be able to purchase and maintain 16 aeroplanes, and it is estimated that an equal number could have been purchased out of the appropriation of $125,000 asked for this year.

If the appropriation is reduced to $75,000, we would be able to purchase and maintain 8 more machines, giving us a total of only 24 machines in service at the end of June, 1913.

In view of the importance attached by all other nations and the tremendous progress made by them, it is considered imperative that we have at least the same amount as last year.

J. Allen.

J. ALLEN, Brigadier General, Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The chairman of the committee stated that the science of aviation is rather in its infancy, but enough is known of these flying machines to make us aware that they are rather fragile, and that a current of air which can not be seen by the aviator until he enters it is apt to catch one of them and cripple or destroy it at any time. In view of the fact that so many accidents have heretofore happened and are apt to happen in the future in the manipulation of aeroplanes, does the gentle-man think it would be advisable to continue with such a few on hand as would be available if this amount is not increased?

Mr. PRINCE. I think it is better to follow the suggestion of the Chief Signal Officer, whose letter I have just read, and I hope that the Committee of the Whole will do as it did one year ago-restore the amount as indicated by the amendments that I have proposed.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois and Mr. AMES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is a member of the committee, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we ought to know how the gentleman stands on the amendment. Of course, if the gentleman is against the amendment, I am willing that he should have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course all of this debate, strictly speaking, is out of order.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the rule is going to be invoked? If it is invoked now, it will be all the rest of this Congress

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Oh, no; that is merely the suggestion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the committee will grant this small increase in this appropriation. The art of aeronautics is in its very beginning. It is true that the Chief Signal Officer said before the committee that up to date the amount of money expended for the maintenance of the few machines he has is only $18,000, but it is also a fact that the engines used to drive these machines have a very short life, the best machines having a life guaranty of only 100 hours. It will be a question of only a very short time in running before these machines will necessarily have to be replaced in their most expensive parts. The art itself has to be developed. In-dividuals can not do it alone. What better arrangement could we have than the Government making a small appropriation of $125,000 where individuals can not contribute to the development of the art. I think the Government should do this. The problem to-day is not the problem of flight. That has been demonstrated beyond peradventure. The problem to-day is the problem of equilibrium, balance, and safety in descent, automatic stability. How are you going to develop these things except through the knowledge that comes through actual experience, and such knowledge is hastened by the aid of the Government? Granted, individuals are experimenting with the hope of success. A great deal of money is being expended throughout the country, and a great many individuals are putting in their little pile and losing it; but to develop the art, to keep abreast of other countries, to secure some material progress in aviation and the results to be desired, it is absolutely necessary that the Government lend a helping hand, and a generous hand, not a niggardly one. These machines that Gen. Allen now has I hope will be obsolete in a year, obsolete because of information gained by the use of them. How else can the art be developed? Invention does not come by leaps and bounds. It is a gradual, slow progress, through experience alone. It is not a conception offhand. It is the result of study, thought, and experience with the actual machine, and the more machines the Government can afford to have and use, and the more numerous the opportunities for individual experience, the faster and more sure will be the development of the art itself.

We had at one time congressional antagonism to the telephone and telegraph. How much better, how much more far-sighted it would have been if, instead of poking fun at the inventor and calling his dreams visionary, there could have been some substantial financial assistance by the Government toward developing the art of the telephone and telegraph long before it was done. In this case we have to keep abreast of the times. Submarines have brought new problems in naval de-fense and warfare; flying machines to-day have brought entirely new possibilities with regard to military attack and defense. The other countries of the world, the great nations of the world, are spending millions of dollars annually on this proposition and we haggle over some $25,000 or $30,000, $125,000 in all-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

· Certainly. Mr. AMES.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How long, in the judgment of the gentleman, who, I believe, has had experience in the manufacture of machinery, how long, in his judgment, would it take to construct a machine?

Mr. AMES. Does the gentleman mean to equip a factory? SLAYDEN. Well, what sort of equipment will be re-Mr.

Mr. AMES. Oh, the equipment is very simple; the one thing we are seeking is light of what kind of a machine in type and detail and how to build it. The operation of building is comparatively simple. They could be turned out at the rate of 100 a day in six months.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will put my question in this way: How long does the gentleman think it would take in a case of emergency for us to provide 50 or 100 of these machines?

Mr. AMES. The gentleman is assuming that we know what kind of a machine to supply.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am assuming we will supply the most advanced type we now have.

I suppose the factories that are making them Mr AMES. now can not turn out more than one a week, but they could be easily arranged to turn out 100 a day if there was a demand for that number.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not a complex machine, I understand, except the engine.

Mr. AMES. Not at all. The problem now is to get machines that will keep their equilibrium, so that the aviator does not have to think about keeping his balance any more than he does in an automobile on the ground.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hope they have found it.

Mr. AMES. The time is coming, but it can only come through experience, and you can get experience through the use of the machines which the Government buys.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If I may be permitted a remark, it seems to me what we need now more than machines is an increased number of people who are trained to the use of such machines, for in case of need we could quickly supply the machines, but they are useless without experienced people to operate them. Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, every flight made by an officer or individual in this country brings out and develops something new through sheer experience, and through actual flight comes the only way by which experience may be had. I hope that farsighted wisdom, farsighted economy will grant this amount for the purpose of developing the art of aviation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I very much agree with the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, who has spoken upon this question, and also the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the importance of this work, because I believe it is of great importance to the future efficiency of whatever warfare may unfortunately come to this country. But I do not believe it is the duty of this House to expend a large amount of money where it seems to be unnecessary. This appropriation, as I observe, gives $150,000, or nearly so, with what is remaining from the appropriation of this year.

Mr. MANN. That will be spent before the 1st of July.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The very purpose for which they wanted $125,000 will be expended in the appropriation which remains, as stated by Gen. Allen before the committee, because he says that they expect to purchase machines with the $72,000 that remains from this year's appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Last year I presented figures showing why the House should appropriate $250,000 which they thought they could profitably utilize.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; I remember the gentleman's statement and I am very much interested with the gentleman from Illinois in this subject, but it has occurred to me in view of these facts, and it is really a matter of experimentation now, that when given all they asked for, according to the statement of Gen. Allen before the committee, not in view of the letter which later comes in to a member of the committee, it seems to me he should have made more specific his wants before this committee instead of coming in later and asking for the con-sideration of a memorandum made to one member of the committee.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not know whether it is the policy of the heads of the department to communicate with certain members of the committees in reference to the appropriations or not after they have testified and after the matter has been fixed in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that a Member of the House has a right to get information?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. He has a perfect right to get information, but it has occurred to me that this is somewhat in variance with the statement of Gen. Allen before the committee, and so I could not understand it.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?
'Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. PRINCE. I wish to put the matter fairly. This communication did not go to the committee. I asked for it myself. asked the department to give me a memorandum of items that they thought were cut below the required needs of the service, and I asked for this information myself. It was after the hear-Gen. Allen reported through the proper authorities, that gave me the information as a Member of the House. It is true that I had the right to ask for it, and it is true he appeared before the committee, and this information I have obtained was since his hearing before the committee. I want to put that fairly and in that shape; that is all.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not want to misrepresent the gentleman, but what struck me as peculiar was that Gen. Allen should apparently seem to change his opinion here to the gentleman from Illinois after he had testified before the commit-

Mr. PRINCE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois (continuing). And the committee knew nothing about it.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. A careful reading of this testimony, it seems to me, would give that sort of impression, because he goes on to state-

Mr. PRINCE. What volume is it? They are not indexed.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This is volume 2, page 526.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 10 minutes additional, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Two minutes will be all that is

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I observe that Gen. Allen said here in one place that they needed $125,000, when asked that question, because, he said, the remaining amount would be sufficient up to the 1st of July, but he goes on to state that these additional machines, in order to bring the number up to approximately 20, would cost about $60,000. In this letter he talks about 24 machines which he desired. That is one discrepancy. Then it occurs to me that, according to this statement, that he has had sufficient money, or would have, to maintain these machines for the next year.

I voted for the appropriation last year, but it occurs to me that we ought not to force more money on the department than it is able to use. Congress ought to have some right of judgment in this matter, it seems to me.

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. AMES. When Gen. Allen appeared before the committee, as you will find in the testimony there, he had but little information about the life of some of the best engines, and since the hearing and since he has made the statement he tells me he is surprised to learn how short lived the engines were.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Has Gen. Allen given that information to the Committee on Military Affairs, or certain members of the committee?

Mr. AMES. It was a casual conversation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Do you not believe that it was the duty of Gen. Allen to communicate additional information to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. AMES. It may have been; but if some one goes to him for information it might be that he has had additional light since he was before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Foster] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois voted and worked with me last year to put the appropriation in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And the department had not asked for it?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is what I am stating, namely, that Congress ought to have some discretionary power in the

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says now that he thinks we ought not to give them more than they ask for. Does not the gentleman think it was wise that we put that item in the bill

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; I agree with the gentleman;

but after we have gone ahead a year—Mr. MANN. They did not ask for it-

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And after they have said, "Now, this is about the amount of money we need," why should we go and appropriate more?

Mr. MANN. Last year they did not say they wanted it. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No. That was a request or in-struction by Congress made to the War Department, to take up the experiments. Congress had the right to do that. It was proper that it should do that,

Mr. MANN. They had previously taken up the experiments. In fact, they cut out last year the estimate of the aeroplanes because of the effect of the so-called Smith amendment. Now, this year, under the skillful questioning of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hax], whose duty it is to ask questions so as to force the Army officers to keep down just as closely as possible to the earth on their expenditures, so that they can get along, they admitted they could get along with the amount-I do not know exactly the amount-but practically they could get along without anything. But Congress having given them the money last year without their asking for it, does not the gentleman think we ought to exercise as much judgment now as we exercised then, regardless of what they say?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It is a question with Congress, now that the work is started, to say, "Now, you use more of this money." Last year it was a question of starting this matter. This year it is a question of giving them more money than they think they can judiciously use. There is a definite distinction and a difference.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not quite correct in saying that last year the question was of starting the experiments. The Army did start them in the first place. It was a question of abandoning the experiments which the Army had started. Congress, not the War Department, determined that we would not abandon the experiments.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; but there had not been authority given the department for this sort of experimenting with aeroplanes until last year.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they had purchased the Wright machine for $25,000 under authority granted by Congress. The gentleman himself no doubt witnessed the experiments out at Fort Myer with pleasure and with profit.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I did. Mr. MANN, Those were the experiments and demonstrations that actually put aeroplanes on their feet, so to speak. I think we could reduce the expenditures for military purposes many million dollars a year if we could by experiment and practice devise and perfect successful machines for the practical navigation of the air.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the gentleman think we could reduce the expenditures for the Army with such rapidity that we would be able to cut off the appropriations entirely from the Army, and that war would be carried on solely by aeroplanes, which would make it so impracticable to carry on warfare, as we understand it now, with aeroplanes flying around, that we would have to go and join hands with Dr. BARTHOLDT and bring about the disarmament of nations and the discontinuance of war? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Who would think of carrying on war to-day with rocks and clubs or arrows and spears, or merely with swords and flintlock guns?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I am not sure that that would not be a better plan than to try experiments to invent machines and guns and other deadly implements of warfare so that each nation can see how many more people it can kill than the other one in the shortest space of time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not believe in the policy of equipping our Army with clubs and allowing the armies of our antagonists to be equipped with modern firearms and up-to-date munitions of war?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No, sir; I would not permit the other army to be equipped with modern firearms and weapons and ours with rocks and clubs.

Mr. MANN. That is the situation we will be in before long, judging from present tendencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 23, after the word "and," strike out "25" and insert "75"; and on page 5, line 24, strike out "75" and insert "125."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PRINCE. A division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 31. Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HAY and Mr. PRINCE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 42

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of no quorum present. The point is well taken. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called; that on the roll call a quorum of the committee appeared, and he reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. Saunders in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 24, strike out "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty-five." $\,$

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PRINCE) there were—ayes 63, noes 78.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HAY and Mr. PRINCE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 74 ayes and 102 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment to page 6, line 22, that is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after the word "dollars," in line 22, add the following: "Provided, That hereafter no pay or allowances shall be made or allowed to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law."

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if, as I believe, that amendment is in order, it necessarily would be so under what is known as the Holman rule. It is a limitation upon expenses and determines that there shall be a penalty, so to speak, for an infraction of the law.

If I may be indulged by the House for a few minutes in explanation of the amendment, I am inclined to believe it will meet with very little, if any, opposition. The law of February 2, 1901, known as the Army reorganization act, contains this paragraph:

All officers so detailed shall serve for a period of four years, at the expiration of which time they shall return to duty with the line, and officers below the rank of lieutenant colonel shall not again be eligible for selection as any staff officer until they shall have served two years with the line.

That is the important section of that great act that put into operation what is known as the detail system, concerning which nearly the entire Army is agreed that it makes for efficient administration and for the development along stronger and better lines of the Army of the United States.

Now, if it does do that, if the enforcement of the act will accomplish these things, it is desirable that it should be rigidly enforced. But that it has not been is amply proven by the report made by the Secretary of War to the President of the Senate in document No. 288, in which it is set out that there are 179 officers who have had more than 6 years of continuous There are 39 officers who have had more than 12 years detail. of detail service away from the organization in which they were commissioned. It is true that some of these officers in the 6-year period are also in the 12-year period. Some of them are in flagrant disregard, as it seems to me, of this statute. have a few of them marked here, and the whole document I commend to the attention of the House, if it is at all interested in this question of the enforcement of the military laws.

As I open the document, I find on page 30 an account of the service of one officer who has been commissioned for 10 years and 3 months, during which time he has served only 1 year and 3 months with the command in which he was commissioned. On page 33 there is the record of one officer who has had a total amount of service of 10 years and 3 months, only 9 months of which he has served in the organization in which he was commissioned.

Now, if it be true that the detail system is sound, and sound because it will send officers to serve with their regiments and their companies, that law ought to be enforced, and there should be no such cases as are reported here by the Secretary of War. There are four exceptions, by special act, four acts authorizing a longer detail than four years. There is, Mr. Chairman, the act that details an officer with the road commission in Alaska. I think it is very proper that that officer or some officer should be continued in service with that commission, that he should be a man familiar with the work, and a man who has it continually before him. We have good results from that exception to the law in favor of the service on the Alaskan Road Com-

Another exception is that in the case of the officer detailed to serve with the Ordnance Corps. The act approved June 25, 1906, reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That details to the Ordnance Department under the provisions of the act of February 2, 1901, may be made from the Army at large from the grade in which the vacancy exists, or from the grade below: Provided, That no officer shall be so detailed except upon the recommendation of a board of ordnance officers, and after at least one examination, which shall be open to competition.

It was recommended by the committee and enacted by Congress, after an urgent appeal by that most excellent and capable officer, Gen. Crozier, who convinced the committee that it ought to be done in the interest of the service.

Another one of these exceptions, Mr. Chairman, is in the case of an officer detailed for service in the Insular Bureau, and still another is in the case of officers detailed for service with the Philippine constabulary. Outside of those four excep-tions, officers are detailed under the terms of law to four years' service in Washington, or elsewhere, and then sent back to their commands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the law has been violated. Longer and illegal details have been given. The law ought to be respected. It should be enforced. It is possible to evade it, and it is evaded in practice, and that should not be the case. This amendment that I have offered merely proposes that when violated in the case of an officer or of officers that there shall be assessed the penalty of a forfeiture of pay. The effect of it will be that there will be no violation of the law. I ask the House again to consider the fact that this Document No. 288 discloses that there are a large number of officers, more than 200, who have been serving away from their companies or regiments, as the case may be, for a period of time very much in excess of that authorized by law, and the fact that this amendment proposes to limit the amount of money to be expended annually, in my judgment, makes it in order to offer at this time

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order. The Chair will notice this amendment is not a committee amendment, and is not offered by the committee. It is offered by an individual Member on the floor, and is admittedly intended to be permanent law, not a limitation upon the appropriation in the bill. It does not purport to be a limitation on the appropriation in the bill, but proposes to make permanent law. The provision of Rule XXI is as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States—

It is very plain that this does not reduce either the number or the salary of the officers of the United States-by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States—

This does not reduce the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States-or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

There is no pretense that it reduces the item of appropriation in the bill. It is not an amendment offered by the committeewhich, being expenditures being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench in a general way. It does not come under the proviso in clause 2 of Rule XXI, and can only be in order either as a limitation upon the appropriation in the bill, which it does not purport to be, or if it reduces the number or salary of officers, which it does not purport to do, or reduces the compensation, which it does not purport to do, or reduces the amount of the appropriation provided by the law, which it does not purport to do.

If the Chair shall rule in this case, overruling the previous chairman at this session of Congress in reference to the Holman rule, and hold this amendment in order, there is nothing that I can imagine that would be out of order. I appreciate the fact that the present occupant of the chair took a decided view in reference to the construction of the Holman rule when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was under consideration in the House, and that the views of the present occupant of the chair did not prevail at that time. I do not believe that the present occupant of the chair would be disposed to introduce into the House that uncertainty which comes from having one chairman on the consideration of one appropriation bill rule one way in regard to amendments, and then having another chairman on another appropriation bill take directly the reverse view of amendments.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two on the point of order. Paragraph 2 of Rule XXI says, among other things:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shail retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

Now, the object is not reduction—the law fixes the salary of officers of the United States, or-

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Now, here is a provision to make permanent law to the effect that if an officer who is by law receiving a certain salary stays over a certain time, that to the extent he stays over that time he shall be penalized and his salary taken from him, and the basis of that and the reduction of salary is an unwarranted act on the part of legislation in the nature of this amendment. Now, on page 406 there is a provision of this nature:

An amendment to a pension appropriation bill providing that no fee shall be paid to a member of the examining board for services in which he did not actually participate is not subject to a point of order under the rule, since, while changing existing law, its effect is to reduce expenditures by decreasing the compensation.

That holding seems to squint at making this provision in order, but that is a case where a person received a fee for services that he never rendered. This is a case of an officer who is a salaried officer, his salary fixed by law, and if the Commander in Chief for necessary reasons permits that man to remain a week or a month beyond the four-year period, that the officer shall be penalized by no fault of his own and his salary taken from him, and this is to be permanent law in the nature of a penalty enacted upon an appropriation bill. It seems to me, if anything, it is clearly in violation of the spirit of legislation, clearly in violation of proper and orderly legislation, and this proposed amendment is such, and I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer a substitute for the amendment, somewhat modified.

Let it be read for information first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment in the nature of a substitute, for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitute for the other amendment?

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman asks unanimous consent to offer this?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentle-man from Texas to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the other amendment and offer this in lieu thereof?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the amendment originally offered by him may be withdrawn and that the one he has sent to the desk may be substituted in lieu thereof for the consideration of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law."

man what his construction of "specifically authorized by law" is?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, as I stated a moment ago, there are four specific authorizations by law-Yes; that is authorized by law; it is not "spe-Mr. MANN.

cifically" authorized by law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There are four classes selected out of the Army at large. After the enactment of the law of February 2, there arose conditions that seemed to make it wise that the detail system should not be applied-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am endeavoring to do so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is restating what he stated before; I appreciate it; but here is a proposition that is authorized by law, and that is what the gentleman stated a while ago. Certain extraordinary details are authorized by law. Now, the gentleman proposes certain cases that shall be "specifically" authorized by law. Does "specifically" mean anything?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think it has a specific meaning.

Mr. MANN. If it has a specific meaning it has a special meaning and not a general meaning, and the word "specific" there, if I can understand the English language, would mean that no detail should be authorized unless the person was named by an act of Congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will par-

Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think when there is a general act saying there shall be no details for a longer period than four years, and then in the practical application of that law, in the administration of the Army, it is found there ought to be exceptions, and those exceptions are provided for in one, two, three, and four cases, that those are specific exceptions.

Mr. MANN. Those are details authorized by law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But the specific detail is not authorized by law. Mr. SLAYDEN. I will not quibble. I shall not insist on the word "specifically." There are special exceptions authorized by law of officers in the Insular Bureau, in the Ordnance Bureau, and officers serving in the Philippine Constabulary and the Alaskan Roads Commission.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, like myself, has had some experience in the construction of statutes by other departments. At one time I drew a proposition, which was agreed to in this House and became a law, which I submitted to a dozen gentlemen. Every one of them said it meant the same thing. It came to be construed by the department of the Government, and they construed it directly the reverse. Subsequently, in another act, I endeavored to correct the mistake, and the same thing happened over again.

That was not very complimentary to Mr. FITZGERALD.

the gentleman's capacity.

Mr. MANN. That is right, but the gentleman from New York was one of the gentlemen to whom I submitted it. [Laughter.] I think the trouble was not the capacity at this end; the trouble was the lack of understanding at the other end. This will have to be passed upon by an auditor and the comptroller. I do not think we ought to put something in there that is liable to make trouble.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, so far as the effect of the amendment is concerned, if the word "specifically" were not in it I think it would still have the same effect.

Mr. MANN. Of accomplishing all the gentleman wants to accomplish. I wish he would strike out the word "specifically."

Mr. SLAYDEN. The whole point, Mr. Chairman, is whether or not the law of February 2, 1901, that provides for the detail system in the Army, shall be enforced, except where otherwise provided by law. I do not see how the word "specificcan be misunderstood in that connection. I would like to test the sense of the committee on it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how the comptroller will rule on it, but I know if I were comptroller and that was in the law I would construe it as mentioning the person or the office spe-"Specific" means specific. It does not mean general."

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if there are any certain specified exceptions in the law; if these four that I have referred to, with a copy of the act in each case, which I had before me at the time, are not specified exceptions to the general law? If they are specified, is not that specific?

Mr. MANN. That is not the way the amendment of the gentleman reads at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, while the purpose of the amendment may be along lines that will make for the enforcement of the detailed system, nevertheless I think if the amendment were enacted into law it would on many occasions work severe hardship upon an innocent officer. The first duty of an officer is to obey orders, and when he is detailed to do a certain thing he must carry out the order which provides for the detail.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman; yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman from California believe that with that specific command from Congress, that specific instruction that the law must be enforced, and enforced under penalty, that any officer authorized to give orders to another will send him to that hardship and to a duty that is not authorized by law?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman does not make allowance for unusual conditions which nobody can foresee. The fact of the matter is a man is detailed to a certain duty. Take the disaster that occurred in the city of San Francisco a few years ago.

An officer is detailed there.

He is filling out the duties of his detail for four years, when, without warning, this great calamity comes along. It is almost impossible to have him taken out of the position which he has been filling for the time being. There may be a lapse of a month or two months or three months before it would be advisable to take him away from his detail, and yet the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, would withdraw from that officer his salary for the period during which he has been overstaying the term of his detail. And, of course, he can not leave without orders. Take the matter of the Boxer uprising, which occurred a few years ago. An officer, detailed there in China, a military attaché, for instance, can not come out of Peking, can not get away and return to his regiment. But you would penalize him, under the terms of this amendment, and take away from him his salary, although he himself may be powerless and unable to help himself.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman himself may anticipate that there will be an occasional earthquake in San Francisco from time to time that will require the service of officers whose details may have expired-

Mr. KAHN. Or there may be a tidal wave at Galveston. Mr. SLAYDEN. In any event it will not last for four years, and there is ample play in the way of time for the detail of officers for that service.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, if there is another tidal wave at Galveston, and a great number of people are killed there, equal to the number killed in the last tidal wave which overwhelmed that city, and with an equal amount of suffering and misery, and an officer happens to be there on detail at the time, it be advisable to take that detailed officer away from there for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly. Mr. FITZGERALD. Would not the assignment of an officer to such a duty as the gentleman has been describing be a detail in the sense here intended?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly. An officer might be detailed to a certain post to do quartermaster work there, and he may do quartermaster work there and continue doing it almost until the time his detail expires, and then, within a few days of that time a great calamity occurs; he can not get away, and the department will not take his detail from him. Does the gentleman propose to penalize him under such circumstances? think, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is ill-advised and should

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted on?

Mr. HAY. I do not understand that a point of order was

Mr. SLAYDEN. The point of order was made on the original amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] is recognized.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. PRINCE. The point of order was made on the first amendment. Then the gentleman asked unanimous consent to withdraw that and offer this as a substitute.

I am inclined to think this is in order, because it is a limita-tion; but at the same time that it is a limitation, it is also in the nature of a punishment of innocent officers who are engaged in the discharge of their duties.

Now, I agree with the gentleman it is quite likely that the detail of officers has been somewhat abused. It would look so from the report. But I think the discussion here in the House and the calling attention to it would let the War Department and the administration understand that we do not take kindly to it. The expressions we have used are in themselves warning enough, and if the department persists in it after this and does not report between now and a year hence, when we come back here to make another appropriation, I would be inclined to favor such a limitation.

But I do not think it is now advisable. I do not think it is I think it will work a hardship and militate against the efficiency of the Army, and militate against officers who are bound under oath to obey and not to question where they are sent or when the time of their detail expires. punishment to many officers of the Army in order to get at a few officers who, I agree with the gentleman, have been for many years separated from their troops by influences that ought not to be tolerated in the War Department or anywhere

I am not in favor of this, but I do think we ought to call a halt now. I say that at this moment it is ill-advised. I think the suggestion and discussion of it is ample warning to the department. If the practice is persisted in of allowing this to be done in the future, I will join with my colleagues in the coming year and favor such a limitation if it is required and necessary. By this discussion we are giving notice to the department of our view. We should not penalize these men and put upon them an injustice. I think the gentleman's amendment is timely in the sense of calling attention to the condition of affairs, but ill-advised and untimely as punishing these men who certainly would be punished by this act.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that as a matter of fact there would ever have to be any assessment or penalty inflicted against these people?

Mr. PRINCE. I did not catch the gentleman's question. Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask the gentleman if he does not think that the law would then be enforced, and that these ghosts that he is conjuring up of a detail expiring while a man is endeavoring to save people from drowning in Galveston when a tidal wave occurs, or who is endeavoring to save some people from burning in a fire or earthquake at San Francisco are mere figments of his imagination?

Mr. PRINCE. In fairness to the gentleman's question, I do not think that I have conjured up any ghost at all. I have tried to speak fairly and candidly and to state my views upon this question. If the law is violated now, have we any reason to say that it might not be violated in the future and the innocent officer suffer, rather than those who have violated the law, by compelling him to remain longer? The punishment will fall upon the innocent officer. I am speaking for him. I am speaking for the efficiency of the Army. I am speaking for the good of the Army as a whole.

Mr. AMES. And for good legislation. Mr. PRINCE. And for what I think is good, sensible, sane

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PRINCE) there were—ayes 58, noes 38.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will not follow the example of the gentleman from Virginia by raising the point of no

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, for the sake of information, will the Clerk please report the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 1, strike out the word "hereafter," after the word "that," and insert, after the word "appropriation," at the end of the line, the words "in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that yesterday afternoon the items relating to pay of officers of the line, on page 6, were temporarily passed.

Mr. HAY. I do not so understand.
Mr. KAHN. I ask the chairman of the committee if he has any objection to my offering an amendment at this time to change the amounts?

Mr. HAY. What is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the paragraph on pay of officers of the line, in order that I may offer two amendments in the amounts.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. MANN. We gave consent to recur for an amendment a moment ago. Does the gentleman understand that courtesies of this kind extend to both sides? On the amendment just now agreed to we went back by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAY. That was passed over yesterday. Mr. MANN. We went back to it by unanimous consent to let the gentleman from Texas offer that amendment.

Mr. HAY. I will not object at this time, but I will object hereafter.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is impartial in his objections no one will complain.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the amendment which the gentleman wishes to offer?

Mr. KAHN. On page 6, in lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "six million eight hundred and ninety-three thousand nine hundred and eight dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven million seven hundred thousand seven hundred dollars"; and in the item of longevity pay strike out, in lines 20 and 21, the words "one million five hundred and twenty-four thousand one hundred and twenty dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one million seven hundred and sixty-seven thousand one hundred and twenty dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] submits a request for unanimous consent to return to the portion of the bill indicated, in order that he may offer the amendment stated. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why did not the gentleman offer these amendments to the paragraph when it was read?

Mr. KAHN. I was not in the Hall of the House at the time. will be very frank with the gentleman. During the general debate I submitted some remarks. One of the gentleman's colleagues suggested that he would like to have those remarks printed in this morning's RECORD, as he wanted to look them over. I told him that I probably could not revise them in time to print them this morning and that I would withhold the remarks until I could revise and extend them. He suggested that it would be better to have them printed immediately, and I left the House in order to get to work on them. That is the reason why I was not here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out, in lines 16 and 17, page 6, the words "six million eight hundred and ninety-three thousand nine hundred and eight" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seven million seven hundred thousand seven hundred."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I fully believe

But I thought there was to be no debate.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I thought the understanding was that these amendments should be offered without debate.

Mr. KAHN. I am perfectly willing to submit it. Mr. HAY. I have no objection to the gentleman having five minutes

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Go ahead.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the hearings on page 540, volume 2, show the statement made by Gen. Whipple, the Paymaster General of the Army, that the pay of the officers and of the enlisted men is fixed by statute, and is capable of mathematical quorum, although I think I ought to.

Mr. HAY. On page 7, line 1, of the bill, which was read yesterday afternoon and passed over temporarily, I move to amend by adding, after the word "appropriation," the words "in this act," the word "hereafter" having been stricken out. computation. I am fully satisfied that if this great reduction is made that is contemplated in this bill that later on there will

The Paymaster General said in the hearings before the committee:

The number and grades of officers authorized by law in the several branches of the line of the Army are provided for in this estimate. The rate of pay computed as provided by the act of May 11, 1908, and the additional pay for length of service is based upon the longevity record of the officers as shown by the Official Army Register. The authorized number of second lieutenants of the line is 963, but it is estimated that the original vacancies to the number of 242 created by the promotions incident to increase of officers of higher grade by the act of March 3, 1911, will not be filled in excess of 150 during the fiscal year 1913. Therefore, the estimate is submitted for 871 second lieutenants of the line instead of 963, the authorized number. This, I think, accounts for the increase there.

Then, Mr. Kloeber says:

So they were not in the appropriation bill for last year, but they are now included in this estimate for 1913. That accounts for the increase. In other words, this is the first time that Congress has been asked to make any appropriation for the 242 additional officers.

Gen. Whipple then says in answer to a question by the chair-

The Chairman. We next have the item of pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay. I see that there is an increase there of over $100,000.

Gen. Whipple. That follows the increase in number of officers, and then we must consider we have a great many officers who will come into their third longevity period in the fiscal year 1913; officers who came in during the Spanish War, in 1898, will in 1913 come into the third period of five years—that will be 15 years' service.

The Chairman. And that accounts for the increase?

Gen. Whipple. That accounts for part of it and the additional officers.

Now, with that statement in view, it seems to me to be perfectly evident that if these figures that were submitted by the department be cut as severely as they have been by the committee, there will be a deficiency beyond peradventure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, it has never been the custom of the Committee on Military Affairs, since I have been a member of the committee, to give the full amount asked for the appropriation for enlisted men or for officers either. Under the appropriation that is carried in this bill, judging by years of the past, there will be ample to pay every enlisted man whatever may be given to him.

Mr. KAHN. But Gen. Whipple says specifically that he did not, in making the estimates, figure upon the full number of officers; that he figured for 150 second lieutenants

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is talking about officers?
Mr. KAHN. Yes; this refers to officers.
Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will turn to page 726 of the hearings he will find that there are now 453 vacancies in the Army, whereas Gen. Whipple is calculating for a full army. As a matter of fact, there are 249 second lieutenancies vacant, the pay of which officers would amount to over $550,000. Besides this there are over 200 more, so that we are giving the full amount here to all the officers who will be in the Army. Some officers die, some are put on the retired list, and I have never known the committee to give the full amount asked for by the War Department. I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman feel satisfied that the conditions of the Army warrant the reduction of over $800,000 from the estimate?

Mr. HAY. I do, because not only are there these vacancies that I have referred to, but in one item of the bill, if it is adopted—and I do not think there is any doubt about it—referring to the cadets at West Point, it makes a reduction of $243,000 more.

Mr. KAHN. Did not Gen. Whipple say that he did not estimate for the entire strength of officers allowed at present?

Mr. HAY. He said that the War Department directed him to make a cut in some estimates, but whether or not he cut in this particular I do not know

Mr. KAHN. He said he did in the hearings before the committee.

Mr. HAY. Whether he did or not, I think that the reduction provided for in this bill with the number of vacancies that I have referred to and the item with reference to the cadets at West Point, make the cut in this bill very reasonable.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman think that with the statement of Gen. Whipple that he took for his estimate on the longerity pay of officers the list in the Official Army Register, would indicate that the reduction

Mr. HAY. Is the gentleman talking about the retired pay now?

Mr. KAHN. I offered an amendment to both sections, one for active and the other longevity, and Gen. Whipple says that in estimating for the longevity pay he took the list of the Official Army Register.

Yes; and a great many of those retired Army Mr. HAY. officers died during the year.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but many will go on the list again, as he says, by reason of the fact that many officers who were appointed during the Spanish-American War will now get their 15-year-period pay.

Mr. HAY. But the 15-year period refers to longevity pay of active officers, and not to those upon the retired list.

gentleman is mixing up his figures.

Mr. KAHN. No; I think not.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in regard to a small verbal change. I call his attention to the fourth word in line 19, on page 6. The word "to" is used there, and I ask the chairman if it should not be the word "of"; whether it should not read "for additional pay of officers for length of service," and so forth?

Mr. HAY. No; I think it means additional pay to officers. I think that is correct.

I think that is correct.

Mr. TILSON. In the paragraph above it is "pay of officers." and in the paragraph below it is "pay of enlisted men."

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman will observe that it is additional pay to officers, which is in addition to what they get in the former paragraph.

Mr. TILSON. It is only a small matter, but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in all the bills heretofore the language has been "of officers" and not "to officers," even in regard to additional pay.

Mr. HAY. Is the gentleman sure of that?

Mr. TILSON. I have the act of last year before me.

Mr. HAY. I see the difference between the bill of this year and last year is to pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with the current monthly pay. This is for additional pay to officers, and the words there, I think, were suggested by the War Department and taken from this.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another amendment yet to be acted upon, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "one million five hundred and twenty-five thousand one hundred and twenty" and insert the words "one million seven hundred and sixty-seven thousand one hundred and twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak to the amendment?

Mr. AMES. I desire to speak to the amendment. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to say in a remark a moment or two ago that he hoped this amendment would prevail.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. AMES. I do not mean this amendment, but I mean this section as it stands, cutting off longevity pay.

Mr. HAY. This section does not do it. The section to which I referred is the last proviso in the bill.

Mr. AMES. Oh, I beg pardon. Then I do not wish to speak to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay for length of service, $1,535,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, at the end of line 8, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be 10 regiments of Cavalry, and no more, in the United States Army, and that the officers who shall be rendered supernumerary by this reduction in the number of Cavalry regiments shall be retained in service and shall be assigned to vacancles in their respective grades as such vacancies shall occur in the Cavalry, or, in the discretion of the President, to such vacancies in their respective grades as shall occur in any other arm of the service."

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman makes the point of order, I would like to hear upon what grounds it is made.

Mr. PRINCE. I make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman makes the point of order without giving any reasons for it. Of course, it is not subject to the point of order, because it reduces not only the number of people in the employ of the Government, but it reduces the amount carried in this bill, and is germane to the subject matter.

Mr. MANN. How does it reduce the amount carried in this bill, I would like to inquire of the gentleman? That amendment does not reduce it; nothing is said in the amendment as to the amount. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is another individual amendment offered on the floor of the House—not a committee amendment. It does not come within the proviso of clause 2, Rule XXI, saying that an amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall be in order if it shall retrench expenditures. Not in order under this provision because it is not offered under that provision. It must be in order, if at all, under the provision that it reduces the number and salary of officers of the United States. Now, it does not purport to reduce either the salary or the officers of the United States. does not purport to reduce the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. If it is proposed to hold amendments like this in order under the Holman rule, there is no limitation upon an amendment which can be offered. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] the other day ruled upon amendments claimed to be in order under the Holman rule, and made what seemed to me a very clear and distinct ruling. If the rulings made by Mr. Garrett, as Chairman, shall be followed, it is perfectly clear that this amendment is not in order. Now, the gentleman from Virginia may say this abolishes certain regiments in the Army. That may say this abolishes certain regiments in the Army. That may be true; I do not know. That amendment might be in order if it were offered as an amendment by the committee that had jurisdiction of the subject matter, which is the gentleman's own committee; but if the Chair shall hold that any individual Member on the floor can offer any amendment which he says will retrench expenditures, that is a broadening of the rule which, when the rule was revised, the House thought was improper.

The original Holman rule simply provided that an amendment should be in order, which, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures; and because of the workings of the rule it was revised by the Democratic House by their inserting a provision in it that in order to make it in order simply as a retrenchment of expenditures it must come from a committee, and otherwise in order to make it in order it must provide for a reduction in the number or salary or the compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury. Now, this does not do that, and does not purport to do that. If it proposes to abolish officers or cut down their salary, it might be in order.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Under the interpretation referred to by the gentleman did not the Chair also state that the curtailment of expenses must appear on the face of the measure itself, and is there anything in this amendment to indicate this might not, as a matter of fact, be an increase in the number of Cavalry regiments? Of course we understand there are more than 10 regiments, but upon the face of the measure itself, when it says hereafter there shall be 10 regiments, is there anything to indicate that we now have more

Mr. MANN. I think it is the duty of the Chair to know what the law is on that subject.

Mr. TAGGART. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes. Mr. TAGGART. Would it not reduce the number of noncommissioned officers of the United States to the full extent of Mr. MANN. It would not reduce them in the slightest degree.

Mr. TAGGART. Why, it abolishes 5 regiments substantially.
Mr. MANN. Yes, it does; but it does not abolish their enlistments.

Mr. TAGGART. Why not?

Mr. MANN. These officers and these men are still in the service; it does not dispense with their services.

It does not dispense with their services. It does not purport

Mr. TAGGART. Does it not dispense with their services as fast as their term of enlistment expires?

Mr. MANN. Their services are dispensed with when their terms of service expire now.

Mr. TAGGART. Does it not abolish their officers? Mr. MANN. It does not abolish their officers; it does not intend to abolish their officers.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I offer proposes to reduce the number of Cavalry regiments in the Army and provides that after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be only 10 regiments of Cavalry in the United States Army. Under the Army reorganization act of February 2, 1901, it is provided in the first section:

That from and after the approval of this act the Army of the United States, including the existing organization, shall consist of 15 regiments of Cavalry.

So the amendment which I propose necessarily cuts off 5 regiments of Cavalry, and thereby must cut off 3,980 enlisted men who are now in 5 regiments of Cavalry in the service of the United States to-day. Under the amendment it will take effect the 1st day of July, 1912, and therefore will refer to the fiscal year with which this bill is dealing, and necessarily save the amount of money which you would have to pay in the next fiscal year to these 3,980 enlisted men. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] says that the amendment does not purport to cut off anybody's salary. That is just what it does. It proposes to do away with the services of persons now employed by the Government, and thereby to save the amount of the money which is now paid to those people during the next fiscal year.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What does the gentleman propose to do with these men? Does he propose to discharge immediately all the enlisted men in these five extra regiments?

Mr. HAY. Some of them will be reabsorbed. That goes to the merits of the question and has nothing to do with the point of order. I will discuss that when we come to the merits of the question. Now, the pay of these 3,980 men for the fiscal year with which we are dealing in this bill is $1,766,781. But granting, for the sake of the argument, that the amendment does not cut off the pay, yet if these regiments are cut off it will not be necessary to equip them, and it costs to equip them $161,754 from the Ordnance Bureau, and it costs $364,071 a year to subsist them, and the Quartermaster's Department has to pay for clothing, shoes, horses, and so forth, $1,490,561. So if there was no question of pay about it at all, which I do not admit, yet there would be a saving of very nearly $3,000,000 in the equipment of these men alone. And the rule does not provide that it is necessary to offer an amendment of this character from the committee. It says:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order except such as are germane to the subject matter of the bill.

There is no question that this is germane to the subject matter of the bill. The subject matter of the bill is an appropriation for the purpose of supporting the military establishment, and I propose to cut off a certain part of that military establishment in order to retrench expenditures. It says:

Shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States by the reduction of the compensation of any person.

It does not confine it to commissioned officers, but to any persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill. So I think this amendment meets with every requirement of this rule, and I do not hesitate in asking the Chair to overrule the point of order. Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, it is conceded that if this amendment is in order it must be in order under that part of the proviso of section 2, Rule XXI, which provides that it shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number of officers. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that on the face of this amendment it does not reduce the number of officers. It is specifically provided that, so far as commissioned officers are concerned, they shall be retained in the service. As to the enlisted men, it says The chairman declines to answer the question as to nothing. what is to become of the enlisted men-what is to become of their enlistment. These men are enlisted for three years, and it is not proposed, as I understand, to discharge them for the benefit of the service within the time of their enlistment. If it does not appear on the face of this amendment that there is to be a reduction—and I submit that it does not so appear in this amendment—the amendment does not bring itself within the rule at all, because in the case of commissioned officers it is specifically stated in the amendment itself that they shall not be reduced; and, as to the enlisted men, it does not appear that they will be reduced or how they shall be gotten rid of during their enlistments.

Mr. BURLESON. Does not the gentleman admit that, provision having been made for commissioned officers and having been made for noncommissioned officers and privates, the effect of it will be that their services will be dispensed with?

Mr. TILSON. It does not say so. Mr. BURLESON. If the privates and noncommissioned officers are not officers, they are surely employees of the Government.

Mr. TILSON. Is it intended that these men's services shall be terminated and that they shall have their discharges imme-

Mr. BURLESON. I suppose they will be absorbed by the other branches of the service. They will be commissioned out of service.

Mr. TILSON. It does not appear on the face of this amendment what will become of them. It does not appear anywhere that there is to be a reduction.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If they are absorbed by other branches of the service, necessarily this will not result in a decrease of expenditures.

Mr. TILSON. No; and it does not result in a decrease of the number, which is necessary to bring it within the rule.

Mr. BURLESON. All arms of the service, as I understand, are constantly being recruited.

Mr. TILSON. It does not so appear from this amendment, Mr. Chairman. Suppose all the Cavalry regiments are now at half size or at two-thirds size, and the enlisted men of the 5 extra regiments were turned over into the other 10, as they might be. Then there would not be a reduction of a single man. So far as it appears from this amendment, that may happen. deed, it may well happen if a sufficient number of vacancies exist in the entire Army. We should then have not only the same number of men, but the very same men, and whether they would receive more or less pay than formerly would depend upon the places to which transferred. In making his ruling, the Chair is not to assume facts which are not stated on the face of the amendment itself. If it is necessary to go into argument and submit facts in order to show a reduction, the reduction becomes problematical, and if it is problematical, so as to require outside facts, then the gentleman's amendment does not come within the provision of the rule.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is germane I am inclined to think is true, but is it in order, conceding that it is germane? The rule provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or any amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number.

Does this amendment on the face of it reduce the number of officers? It says so, but not specifically. It says they shall be taken care of. The number that are here now shall be taken care of hereafter. Then the number is not reduced. They are officers of the United States, connected with the Army. The rule says:

Shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

Their salary remains the same. The rule further provides:

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Does that show any reduction on the face of the amendment? Will the Chair go outside to find a basis for this amendment as one reducing the expenditures of the military establishment? I do not think it is proper for the Chair to travel outside of the proposition that is presented to him.

Now, has this proposition been presented by the committee? I say to you frankly that this is the first time that some members of the committee have ever heard of this proposition. Nowhere does it appear that it came before us as a committee. It is unauthorized by the committee, and is not a part of the bill which the committee has brought into the House. If the committee that has full authority to report this appropriation bill had brought in this measure, it would be germane to the whole bill and it would be a part of the report of the committee. If the committee had authorized this as an amendment, it would be an act of the committee. But this is an act of an individual, seeking to make germane an amendment that does not apply to this section and does not reduce expenditures on the face of the amendment.

I take it there is not a scintilla of evidence on the face of that amendment to show that it reduces the expenditures of the military establishment one farthing. If there is, I have not properly read it. I wish the Chairman would have the Clerk read it again, so that I can comment upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. There is nothing there that shows retrenchment. The rule further provides:

That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of a committee—

There is no report of the committee asking for this amendment-or any joint commission authorized by law, or the House members of such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

There is a proviso that it shall be upon the report of the committee. No committee has reported upon this. It is not in the bill. It is not in the report. The majority report does not suggest it. It is not a committee amendment, and it utterly fails to fall within the provisions of the Holman amendment to Rule XXI.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the proposition as to whether or not this is a retrenchment can be ascertained by this test: Every officer and every man attached to these cavalry regiments appears upon the pay rolls of the United States Government to-day, and according to rolls of the United States Government to-day, and according to this amendment, as interpreted by his proponents, every name will appear upon the rolls of the United States Government on the 2d day of July, 1912. There is no alteration whatsoever in any man's rank. There is no alteration or reduction whatsoever in any man's salary, because we specifically provide in the amendment that they shall be detailed to other duty in their respective grades. You specifically preserve their military status and continuance in the service; and if you do preserve it and provide for their delegation to other duty, carrying with it and provide for their delegation to other duty, carrying with it other responsibility, and carrying with it an equal amount of salary, an equal charge upon the Federal Treasury, how, then, do you work a reduction or a retrenchment in any manner, and how can the amendment come within the Holman rule?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite appropriate at this time to consider the language which was used by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] in ruling upon the same question heretofore, and which has been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]. The ruling was made on January 16, 1912, and is found on page 1049 of the Congression. SIONAL RECORD. I will read a short portion, which is not germane to this matter, in order that the House may get the connection. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] used the following language:

The Chair is of opinion that the Committee on Appropriations may not, under the rule, bring in as an integral part of an appropriation bill substantive legislation that, if introduced in the ordinary way in the House—that is, by bill or joint resolution presented by a Member—would go to another standing committee of the House for consideration

Now, here comes the part that is essential and pertinent:

Now, here comies the part that any Member of the House may offer from his place on the floor any amendment carrying such substantive legislation, even though that legislation would retrench expenditures, unless that Member offer it as the report of a committee or as a member of a joint commission which would have jurisdiction of the subject matter under the rules of the House. In other words, the scope is limited and the outposts are fixed by the rule to which the Committee on Appropriations may go or to which the individual Member may go.

Now, this language is quite explicit and proper, and it seems to me that it is the only conclusion that could be reached under the Holman rule. I may say further, that it has been held since that time by other Chairmen that this retrenchment must appear from the face of the amendment, taking into consideraion the existing law; that it can not be considered to be a retrenchment, so as to be within the rule, if it is a matter of argument or discussion.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some confusion as to the meaning of the word "enlistment" in the United States Army. It is not a contract in the full sense of the term. It may be severed at any time by order of the President of the United States or by order of the Secretary of War. If this amendment is placed in this law it will be the duty of the Secretary of War or the President of the United States to discharge 5 of the 15 regiments of Cavalry of the United States Army on the date fixed in the amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TAGGART. I will.
Mr. TILSON. Suppose there were a sufficient number of vacancies in the other 10 regiments to absorb all of the enlisted men in the 5 regiments, would it not be perfectly proper to add these additional men of the 5 regiments to the 10 regiments?

Mr. TAGGART. I was coming to that. I think it would be perfectly proper to have some of the men transferred as soon as practicable to the vacancies in the other 10 regiments

Mr. TILSON. Then where would the reduction come in? Mr. TAGGART. In the noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BURLESON. And the saving of the cost of recruiting the men for the other 10 regiments.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I would move an amendment to the pending amendment by adding these words thereto: "That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of this act either by discharging the noncommissioned officers and men of five regiments of Cavalry or transferring such noncommissioned officers and men as may be practicable, in his discretion, to other regiments."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Let me inquire, would not such an amendment as just suggested by the gentleman be an admission that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia will not work as a reduction?

Mr. TAGGART. It is not an admission, for there may not be room in the 10 regiments for the discharged men of the other 5 regiments, but there will be room for such veterans as are suitable to be transferred, and as to the balance, there will be an opportunity to discharge them or transfer them to other branches of the service at their request. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the military law, especially the fourth Article of War, which provides that the term of enlisted men may be terminated by order of the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, or the commanding officer of the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, under this rule there must be some amendments that are in order if offered from the floor of the House. The position taken by the gentleman on the other side is that any amendment which changes existing law is not in order unless it is offered as the result of a report of a committee or a joint commission authorized by law, or of the House Members of any such commission having jurisdic-tion of the subject matter of the amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The reading of the rule itself contemplates that there shall be certain amendments which retrench expenditures, which shall be in order when offered by individual Members from the floor. The rule is:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

And so forth.

For the purposes of this amendment it seems to me that that part of the rule is what the amendment pending must come within. Gentlemen state that because some provision is not made for the disposition of the individual privates who go out of the service that this amendment does not show a retrenchment by reducing the number of the officers of the United

The term "officers of the United States," as used in the rule, undoubtedly is used and is intended to apply in the most comprehensive manner possible. It applies to every class of persons in the service of the United States who are paid for their services out of the public fund. If the gentleman from Virginia had offered an amendment that from and after the 1st day of January, 1912, there should be no enlisted force, either of Infantary, 1912, there should be no emisted force, either of infantry or Cavalry or of the Coast Artillery, I suppose that some gentlemen might argue that that would not result in a reduction of the number of officers of the United States or of persons paid out of the Public Treasury.

But it seems to me quite clear that such a provision would mean, and no other construction could be placed upon it, that there should cease to be in the service of the United States men

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. MANN. If the law now provided the number of officers and the number of enlisted men of which the Army is composed, will this amendment, if agreed to, change that law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will. In what respect? Mr. MANN.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It reduces the number of Cavalry regiments, and it would to that extent reduce the enlisted force of the United States, provided for by law.

Mr. HAY. It would do so because the other organizations of the Army are, under the law, composed of so many men, and these men who are in these Cavalry organizations could not be put in the other organizations and increase those organizations, because the numbers in those organizations are fixed by law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law fixes the number of the organizations?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not recently read the reorganization act of the Army, but my recollection is—and if I be not correct I know the gentleman from Illinois will correct me the regiments of Infantry, the corps of Coast Artillery, and the number of regiments of Cavalry, and certain organizations of Light Artillery, Engineers, et cetera.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the gentleman aware that a great number of the organizations of the Army, including the Coast Artillery, are far from up to their authorized peace strength? In other words, there are a great number of vacancies existing throughout the Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that,

Mr. TILSON. Would there be anything to hinder these five regiments, every man of them, being turned right into other branches of the Army, so that there would not be a reduction of a single man anywhere? Therefore, it does not appear on the face of the bill that there would be any reduction whatsoever.

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman from Connecticut ought to state the proposition fairly.

Mr. TILSON. I mean to.
Mr. HAY. The Army organization act provides what the peace organization shall be.

Mr. TILSON. It does.

Mr. HAY. The peace organization at the present time is up to its strength, or very nearly so, in all the organizations.

Mr. TILSON. I do not so understand it. I understand that there are a very great number of vacancies.

Mr. HAY. I do not so understand. Mr. FITZGERALD. The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that under the law the department has authority to recruit up to a certain number. I know that it has had some difficulty in keeping the ranks filled up.

Mr. MANN. That number would not be changed by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. It would be to the extent of five regiments of Cavalry, because that is included within the total authorization.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas. Mr. CAMPBELL. It is contended that this amendment would effect certain economies. In what regiments would the economies be effected, if at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the merits of this question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Or does he wish to discuss the question of whether this amendment is in order?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I simply want to find out whether this amendment is in order under the Holman rule, and as indicating whether or not it is, in what regiments the economies would be effected?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if I am able to convince the Chair that this amendment is in order, that is all I care to undertake. To attempt to convince every gentleman on that side of the House-

Mr. CAMPBELL. But I am going upon the assumption that if the Chair's attention is called to the particular regiment in which these economies would be effected, it would aid the Chair in reaching his conclusion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be futile to attempt to convince every gentleman on that side of the House, either as to the propriety of the amendment under the rule or its value, if put into effect. Time is too limited to undertake any such task. It is quite apparent, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a reduction of the number of regiments from 15 to 10 does effect a reduction in the number of persons employed and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. If it does not, it is difficult to frame a provision of law that would do so. Suppose the amendment provided for the abolition of the entire 15 regiments of Cavalry? Would gentlemen still contend that it did not effect a reduction in the number of persons employed? Gentlemen are misconceiving the situation. It is a fact that at times the authorized number of enlistments have not been obtained, that while, for instance, there might be authorized in the entire Army 100,000 men, at certain periods the inability to obtain all those men would, simply by having men transferred from one branch of the service, fail to effect a retrenchment in expenditures; but whether this reduction is authorized or not, the department is authorized to enlist certain numbers in certain branches of the service, and the cutting out of a number of regiments of Cavalry would prevent enlistments up to the total that is now authorized by law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to contend anyone would be discharged or mustered out if this amendment were put in force?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to con-tend that anyone would be discharged or mustered out if this amendment were put in force?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I contend that the number of persons to be paid out of the Public Treasury would be reduced, the number authorized by law to be paid out of the Public Treasury would be lessened, and what happens to them or how they are severed from the pay roll does not concern the question now under discussion.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I understand the gentleman is not able to explain how that would happen?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will contain his soul in patience, when we come to the merits of the question that will be made perfectly clear. I wish now to narrow this controversy down so that gentlemen can continue, if they desire, to maintain their proposition that if 15 regiments are authorized by law and the number is reduced to 10 they can still continue to demonstrate, at least to their own satisfaction, that no reduction takes place. That is too much even for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [laughter] and many others who are listening to this discussion.

Mr. BUTLER. I have contained my soul in patience.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This seems so clear and so apparent I can not conceive of any possible amendment that can be offered that would be in order if this one be not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word on the point of order. The proposition that is confusing to the gentlemen on the other side seems to lie in the fact that they think there is a fixed limitation as to the number of officers and men constituting the Army, and that inasmuch as this does not undertake to change the fixed number of officers and men it does not on its face show a reduction; but, in point of fact, the Army law, as I recall it, authorizes certain corps, which together constitute a certain number of officers and men. Now, when you reduce the number of any one of the parts that go to make one of these subdivisions you necessarily reduce the total, unless you in the same provision increase one of the other subdivisions. That is not done here, and for that reason it must mathematically follow that the reduction of one branch carries with it a reduction of the total.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman address himself to this It is well known that there are a number of vacancies in all the organizations of the Army. Now, assuming there were enough vacancies—and I believe there are—in the entire Army to absorb all the men contained in these five regiments, does the gentleman contend that it would be improper for the President, after this law was passed, to transfer every one of those men of those five regiments into these other organizations which have vacancies, so that there will not be a reduction of a single man?

Mr. SHERLEY. The mistake the gentleman is making is in trying to bring into the question on the point of order facts that do not appear. Now, the one single question is whether the amendment, on its face as changing existing law, shows a reduction-

Mr. TILSON. That is what I contend, that it does not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, it does show a reduction, because it mathematically shows a reduction of the number of officers and men that can be in the Regular Army, and the assumption must be, if there is to be any assumption by the Chair, that the organization as it is authorized exists, and a reduction of that organization is a reduction of officers and men.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Mr. MONDELL. Is not this true: If the present enlisted strength of the remaining 10 regiments are low enough so that there is room in the 10 regiments for all of the men now

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is asking the question that was asked by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson].

Mr. MONDELL. I have not concluded my question. Mr. SHERLEY. I understand, but nothing new had de-

Mr. MONDELL. And if the men in the regiments disbanded were eligible for enlistment in the other regiments, then there would be no reduction? Is not that true?

Mr. SHERLEY. I answer the gentleman as I answered the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson].

Mr. MONDELL. Now, one further question. There are certain Cavalry regiments the men of whom are not eligible for enlistment in any other Cavalry regiments, owing to their color. The only way you could bring about a reduction clearly by an amendment of this kind would be by disbanding the two regiments the members of which are not eligible for enlistment in the other two.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the mistake the gentleman is making is not to have the point of order determined on the face of the record as presented, but on the ulterior facts which he brings in and which the Chair can not consider.

Mr. MONDELL. If the two negro regiments are disbanded, it would certainly bring about a reduction.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that these matters which he undertakes to bring in here can not be considered by the Chair in passing upon the question of the point of order, in my judgment.

Mr. PRINCE. The law authorizes 100,000 men in the Army. There are now about 80,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. W Mr. PRINCE. Yes. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the law authorize 100,000 men in enumerated branches of the Army?

Mr. PRINCE. I think not. It says that from and after the approval of the act it shall consist of so many regiments. Now it consists of those regiments, but the authorized strength is 100,000. Are you changing the authorized strength? Are you saying by this that it shall be reduced five regiments of Cavalry and the authorized strength of the Army shall be reduced to 95,000? If you do, your amendment is in order.

Mr. SHERLEY. You are reducing the total by the extent which you reduce one of the divisions that make the total, without increasing the other divisions—

Mr. PRINCE. There is the difference between us.

Mr. MANN. Does this reduce the authorized strength of 100,000?

Mr. PRINCE. It does not.
Mr. SHERLEY. It does, in this sense: There is an authorization, not simply of men, but men in certain branches of the service. Now, that is the fixed authorization. When you reduce the number of any one of those branches, without increasing the number in the other branches, you necessarily affect totals by all the laws of mathematics which I know of.

Mr. ANTHONY. May I ask the gentleman one question? Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to finish what I was going to say. I wish to say that the law authorizes 100,000 men. The present strength of the Army is 80,000. Now, if you abolish five, or any number of regiments, it would not require a single man to be discharged, nor would it necessarily reduce the number of officers or employees of the United States. That is what I broadly state.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who said that?

Mr. PRINCE. You are required to pass on this question of a point of order by the provision that is in sight and before you. You have no more right to guess the way he wants you to guess than I want you to guess the way he wants you to guess. I say that 100,000 men were authorized. If 100,000 troops were required to go anywhere in the United States where they were needed, the President could call forth 100,000 men, and he could put them in service.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Does not the gentleman think that cutting off five regiments of Cavalry would reduce the Army?

Mr. PRINCE. No; I do not.

Mr. TAGGART. Would it not reduce the strength of the

Mr. PRINCE. No: it would not, because you are merely changing the nature of the regiments in the Army. You are moving men from one organization to another. Mr. TAGGART. We have only 45 regiments of Infantry and Cavalry.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; but how many men are there in each regiment?

Mr. TAGGART. There is not now any definite fixed number. But there are about 800 in a regiment of Cavalry, and 30 regiments of Infantry are authorized.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes. How many is that? Mr. TAGGART. Twenty-four thousand.

Mr. PRINCE. Go on now and see whether you have 100,000 men.

Mr. TAGGART. We have not 100,000; we have about 86,000

Mr. PRINCE. Very well. If you have 86,000 men, and the law authorizes 100,000, where are you going to get the other 14,000? Where are you going to put them? If you transfer them from one organization to another you are not reducing the authorized strength that the President can call out. are only changing the form of the units. The number authorized by law is fixed at 100,000, and you are not offering an amendment to reduce the number of officers or men in the Army

That is the point I make, Mr. Chairman. The gentlemen say they are doing it by inference. Various gentlemen say the effect will be so and so. I say it is 100,000.

TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.
Mr. TAGGART. Does not the gentleman know that there are a multitude of officers connected with every regiment. the Army-officers that are noncommissioned officers, officers that are not commissioned officers, filling a variety of places?

There are even horseshoers and horse doctors and a multitude of camp followers following every one of these regiments, every one of whom will be abolished and disposed of and wiped out of the Army.

Mr. MANN. There will not be any of those officers abolished, because their number is fixed by law.

Mr. PRINCE. The veterinarians are fixed by law. The number of them is fixed.

Mr. TAGGART. When you abolish five regiments you abolish so many veterinarians, and farriers, and horseshoers, and so on.

Mr. PRINCE. Let us not becloud this discussion. The authorized strength of the Army is 100,000 men. There is no looking toward a reduction of the authorized strength in this amendment. It preserves the number of commissioned specifically, and it does not mention that it reduces the number of

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?
Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman read some authority to sustain that position. Would the gentleman mind stating to the House what it was? He read from some paper trying to uphold

Mr. PRINCE. I have a right to make my own statement, and I have a right to make my own memorandum.

That is an unusual thing on the Democratic side. My colleague from Illinois can write. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; I can write. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. The point of order is that Rule XIV is being violated by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. I desire a ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not violating the rule now. He is in his seat. Therefore the Chair declines to rule.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I desire a ruling from the Chair as to whether my point of order is to be sustained

The CHAIRMAN. That would be a most question, which the Chair would not like to decide. There is no violation of the rules before the body at the present time. That being so, there is nothing for the Chair to rule upon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there was nothing unusual in my request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince]. He read from a paper—from some memorandum. I did not know that it had been made by himself.

It was PRINCE on Military Law. [Laughter.] Mr. BUTLER. Mr. FITZGERALD. It seemed to give some information, and it was so peculiarly worded that it seemed to have been prepared by the writer with the rules of the House before him. whoever wrote it. It now appears from the statement of the gentleman's colleague [Mr. Mann] that it was written for the purpose of demonstrating to the House that the gentleman [Mr.

PRINCE] can write. [Laughter.]
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that is a demonstration that could not be offered in behalf of that side of the House. [Laughter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be necessary. [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is that it changes existing law. This is admitted. But it is urged in support of the amendment which is admitted to be germane, that it comes within the Holman rule, and is in order on the ground that it retrenches expenditure.

The Chair desires to place its ruling upon a foundation of au-thoritative precedent, and to conform to the established and familiar canons of parliamentary construction.

Many rulings have been made under the Holman rule. The Chair has examined these rulings in detail. Some of them are conflicting in part. Others are absolutely irreconcilable. others are harmonious and consistent, and may be cited as authority in point. One of these rulings was made upon an authority in point. One of these rulings was made upon an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, to a pension appropriation bill. Congressional Record, 1, 52, page 1792. This amendment consisted merely in the addition of the words "or other," to the existing law.

The point was promptly made that this amendment did not show on its face that it retrenched expenditures.

In this connection it is proper to state that it has been expressly held by Speaker Kerr, and concurred in by Chairman William L. Wilson, that in determining whether an amendment will operate to reduce expenditures, the Chair can look to the law of the land, so far as it is applicable. (Hinds, vol. 4, p. 595.)

The effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, was to increase the number of persons prohibited from the benefits of a particular clause of the pension law, thereby reducing the number of pensioners, as a necessary sequence. A reduction in the number of pensioners, carried with it a reduction in the amount that would be paid out for pensions, under the general head of pension appropriations. The De Armond amendment was held to be in order. It will be noted that this amendment was not directed to the amount of money actually appropriated by the bill. In terms it did not reduce the aggregate amount specifically carried for the payment of pensions. But the Chair was justified in concluding, certainly it so concluded, that in the execution of the pension laws the amount otherwise required for the purposes of pensions, would be reduced by the De Armond amendment.

There are a few general principles heretofore announced for the interpretation of the Holman rule, proper to be stated in this connection. I quote again from Mr. Chairman Wilson, con-curring with Speaker Kerr.

The purpose of the rule (the Holman rule) is most beneficent and proper, and it should have a liberal construction in the interest of retrenchment. (Hinds, vol. 4, p. 594.) Mr. Kerr was universally recognized as a learned and skillful parliamentarian. Mr. Wilson was an exceptionally brilliant and accomplished scholar.

In this connection, the Chair will state that it is not necessary, for an amendment to be in order, that it should be specifically directed to a reduction in terms of an amount carried in a bill. Of course if it is addressed to such an amount, and reduces the same in terms, it will be in order. As for instance if the sum of $1,000,000 is appropriated for a designated purpose pursuant to the requirements of existing law and an amendment is submitted, reducing this amount to $995,000, such an amendment will be in order. But the Holman rule admits of other amendments in order. The language of the rule is to the effect that germane amendments changing existing law are in order provided they retrench expenditures, by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The words "amounts of money covered by the bill," refer not only to the amounts specifically appropriated by the bill, but to the amounts required under the different heads, or items of expense to which the bill relates. And if the necessary effect of an amendment is to reduce in the operation of the departments, or bureaus, for which appropriations are made, the amount otherwise required for any one, or more heads, or items of expense, then a retrenchment has been effected by a reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill. only in this view of the rule, that the De Armond amendment was in order. This amendment, contemplated that in a system involving payments to pensioners, whatever the appropriations might be, the amount actually required for the administration of the law, would be appreciably reduced by a reduction in the number of pensioners. The Chair is not unmindful of the proviso in the second section of Rule XXI, but whatever meaning may be given to the proviso, it should not be construed to take away powers definitely given by the preceding paragraph. This paragraph permits germane amendments to change existing law provided they retrench expenditures in one of three ways. That proviso allows further amendments on the report of the committee having jurisdiction, provided they reduce expenditures. If the committee offers germane amendments. reducing expenditures in any way, they will be in order, and it will not be necessary to refer them to one of three heads. Power of action being plainly given by the paragraph standing alone, the proviso will not be deemed to take it away, unless such intention is plainly manifested. The two sections will be construed to stand together, and amendments offered, whether under the first paragraph, or the proviso, will be tested by the requirements of the head under which they appropriately fall. This is certain to give a liberal construction to the rule as a whole, in the interests of retrenchment.

The Chair will further say, that it is not enough for the Chair to think that an amendment may reduce expenses, or that it is likely to reduce expenditures.

The precedents say in this connection that the amendment, being in itself a complete piece of legislation, must operate ex proprio vigore, to effect a reduction of expenditures. The reduction must appear as a necessary result, that is, it must be apparent to the Chair that the amendment will operate of its own force, to effect a reduction. (Manual and Digest, p. 409, Hinds, vol. 4, p. 595.) But it is not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established with the rigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It is enough if, the amendment in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in one of the three ways indicated. This result must be a necessary result, not a conjectural result, or a problematical result. It is true that having reference to the difference of minds, one Chairman might hold that retrenchment would be the necessary result of an amendment, while another Chairman, or the committee on appeal might be of a different opinion. But this is inevitable. The law is clear, for instance, that at times a court upon the facts can hold as a matter of law that there was no negligence. Still upon the same facts one court will derive this conclusion, while another court on appeal, will reach a different conclusion, The ruling of the Chair on these points is subject to appeal to the committee.

What does this amendment propose to do? The present law provides for an establishment of 15 Cavalry regiments. proposed amendment limits the number of Cavalry regiments to 10. It is difficult for the Chair, by any fair process of reasoning, having reference to known facts, and the relative proportion between the branches of the Army, to see how 15 regiments of Cavalry can be maintained as cheaply as 10, or that a reduction of the Cavalry regiments from 15 to 10, will not effect a reduction in the amount which would be otherwise expended on this branch of the Army under existing law.

This amendment looks to the future, and while it provides for the officers, there is no provision for the retention of the men. But even if the men are retained, there will be a necessary reduction in the matter of horses, equipment and forage and so forth, in the case of 10 regiments as compared with 15. Moreover fewer officers will be required for the military establishment, upon a basis of 10 Cavalry regiments as against the existing 15. These results are certain. It is altogether problematical that such additions will be made to the Infantry that the economies effected by reducing the Cavalry regiments from 15 to 10, will be required to meet these additions to the Infantry, or to other branches of the service. Fairly considered the necessary effect of the reduction in regiments proposed by the amendment under consideration, is a retrenchment of expenditures. If the Chair was required to determine the precise amount saved by this amendment, he would be compelled to rule it out of order. The precise amount of reduction could not be determined. That would be a matter of speculation. But it is clear that a reduction will be effected by the necessary operation of this amendment.

The Chair will cite some additional precedents in support of his ruling:

In an amendment providing that a certain class of persons, now on the pension rolls, shall hereafter not receive pensions, the retrenchment of expenditure is apparent and the amendment is in order. (Manual and Digest, p. 409.)

To the pension appropriation bill, a proposed amendment transferring the Pension Bureau from the Department of the Interior, to the War Department, also providing that the officers of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Pensions be abolished, and that the duties of these offices be performed by Army officers, to be designated for that purpose, without additional pay, was held to be in order, being germane, and retrenching expenditures in the manner provided by the rule. (W. G. Wilson, chairman, Hinds, vol. 4, 3887.)

An amendment to the pension appropriation bill providing that no fee shall be paid to a member of an examining board, for services in which he did not actually participate, is not subject to a point of order under this rule, since while it changed existing law, its effect is to reduce expenditures by decreasing compensation. (Congressional Record, 52d Cong., 1st sess., p. 1792.)

The Chair does not undertake to fix in terms the amount of reduction that this amendment will carry, but that a reduction will follow seems to be a fair and necessary conclusion from its [Applause.]

The Chair wishes to say in conclusion that it has sought to construe this rule, in conformity with the precedents and its manifest intent, so as to give it vital force and effect, and enable the committee operating under its provisions, to accomplish some positive results in the way of economic achievement. In the words of Speaker Kerr it is a beneficent rule. It should be construed to secure beneficent results.

This ruling of the Chair does not take from the committee a particle of authority. In the first instance the Chair must be satisfied that the necessary effect of an amendment offered under the Holman rule will be a retrenchment of expenditures, in conformity with the rule, but from this ruling of the Chair holding the amendment to be in order, an appeal may be taken, and the committee in the exercise of its authority of ultimate interpretation can reverse the Chair, if it is in error and fix the interpretation which the committee in its wisdom thinks the rule should carry. The Chair overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment which I have offered reported

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following: "And the Secretary of War is directed to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that; of course the Secretary of War would have to carry it out anyway. Mr. Chairman, when the Army was reorganized in 1901 the

Cavalry was made much larger in proportion than was necessary, or was usual, in making the proportions between the Cavalry and other arms of the service.

In the English army the cavalry is only one-seventh of the infantry. In the Japanese army the proportion is about the same, whereas in our Army there is one-half as much Cavalry as there is Infantry. As a matter of fact, it is admitted by all military authorities that we have more Cavalry in our Army than we need or ought to have. The reason why this Cavalry was so much increased at that time, or the reason given, was that the Cavalry was more difficult to raise in a time of war, and therefore we ought to have it ready. But a very controlling reason was that the Cavalry at that time wanted promotion, and of course the more regiments of Cavalry you had the more chance of promotion you had; hence the Cavalry was made much larger.

At the time the Army was reorganized there were 25 regiments of Infantry and 10 regiments of Cavalry. We only added 5 regiments of Infantry and 5 regiments of Cavalry, making, as I say, twice as much Infantry as Cavalry, whereas before that time there was only two-fifths as much Cavalry as Infantry.
Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Was there any reason given for that increase? Mr. HAY. The reason given for the increase, as I said a moment ago, was that it was more difficult in the case of emergency, or in the time of war, to raise cavalry than it was infantry

Mr. BUTLER. That was a peace proposition.

Mr. HAY. It was a peace proposition, and that was the reason given.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the same reason exist now?

Mr. HAY. The same reason might be given now, but the underlying reason, as I stated, was that the Cavalry wanted promotion, and it happened that they had the influence to get it. In the Japanese-Russian War the Russian Army had a very large body of cavalry while the Japanese Army had very little cavalry. The result was, as I am informed by a distinguished United States Army officer, that the Russian Cavalry was of no particular use to Russia because they had no cavalry to fight. The Japanese had very little eavalry, just sufficient to act as eyes of the army—to do the scouting. The fact that the Russian Cavalry was allowed to be useless and unemployed added very greatly to the embarrassment of the Russian Army in that war.

Now, as to the saving to be accomplished by this amendment, it amounts on the enlisted men alone to $4,376,273. The officers who are take care of will gradually be absorbed, and in the end the number of officers in the Army will be reduced by 225. So that we not only save this amount by the reduction of the number of enlisted men, but we ultimately save the amounts paid annually to 225 officers of the Army.

Mr. Chairman, I would not advocate this reduction if I did not believe that it could be safely accomplished without in any way impairing the strength and efficiency of the Army

I would not advocate it unless I had been told by officers of the Army that it could be done without in any way hurting or injuring the efficiency of the Army.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I will. Mr. HAY.

Mr. BUTLER. What information has the committee officially upon the subject?

Mr. HAY. I do not know that it has any. I have not any, and any official information I would get would be opposed to this reduction. We understand that very well. We know that Secretary of War would not advocate the reduction of a single officer or a single man in the Army.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman propose to vote on this amendment to-night?

Mr. HAY.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia for the reason that I do not think it is sound military policy. The gentleman bases the argument for his amendment cutting off five regiments of Cavalry upon the ground that the present Regular Establishment is out of balance. That may be true, but in time of war the American Regular Army is simply the first line. It is the National Guard of the country that will be relied upon to furnish the large number of men which would be necessary to make a real army in this country, and I want to call the attention of this committee to the fact that the National Guard of this country, which is composed to day of 167,000 men, is woefully short in cavalry. Out of that total of 167,000 men there are just 5,000 cavalry which the National Guard could hope to bring into the field. You can not make a cavalryman overnight. It takes a year to make a competent cavalry soldier. Therefore in case of war in this country, in case the entire organized military force of the country is needed, if we called into the field the 70,000 men of our Regular Army and the 167,000 men who compose our National Guard, the percentage of Cavalry which we have would not be out of proportion or out of balance.

Taking into consideration the deficiency of Cavalry in the National Guard, the general average of Cavalry then resulting in this country will be about the equivalent of that in foreign armies to-day. Consider this great country of ours. We have an area of 3,700,000 square miles. Take the great West, the great areas of the countries to the south of us, where a large Cavalry force would be absolutely necessary in a campaign, and clearly 15 regiments of Cavalry would be a mere handful to cover that country. Take the situation down on the southern border of this country, for instance. If during the last year it had been necessary for the United States to have sent an army into Mexico in order to preserve order there, the small number of cavalrymen we had in the recent concentration of troops on the border would have been a mere handful to have accompanied an army of occupation into that country. The same is true to the north of us. In case it should be necessary to send an army into either of the countries on our borders the number of our Cavalry would be but a handful.

Taking into consideration the fact that the present National Guard is deficient in Cavalry, the present number of Regular Cavalry regiments is not at all out of proportion. I insert at this point some figures that have been furnished me by men who are authorities on this question, which will, I trust, convey some definite information to the committee upon this subject:

RATIO OF CAVALRY AND INFANTRY TO EACH OTHER AND TO TOTAL STRENGTH.

The following tables show the strength of Infantry and Cavalry of the several countries and the percentage of these two arms to the total peace strength:

Countries.	Infantry.	Cavalry.	Infantry.	Cavalry.
France	379, 640 404, 765 194, 123 580, 000 151, 261 167, 000 20, 326 149, 402	75,510 73,368 47,541 115,000 20,716 24,000 7,318 14,585	Per cent. 59.77 63.81 59.34 48.33 59.21 57.90 63.50 64.95	Per cent. 11.89 11.56 14.51 9.58 8.10 8.32 22.86 6.34
United States; Regulars. Organized Militia. Total	27,370 97,035	13,540 4,167 17,707	33.64 81.09	16.64 3.48 8.80

These data show that our Cavalry, both regular and militia, is only 17,700, or 8.8 per cent of the whole. It is considerably less than in France, Germany, Austria, and Russia, and about equal to that of England and Italy.

The following gives the fighting strength of existing organizations of the various countries on mobilization:

Countries.	Infantry rifles.	Cavalry sabers.
France Germany Austria. Russia. England. Italy. Mexico Japan	618, 450 633, 000 420, 300 973, 152 135, 020 300, 000 53, 760 228, 000	66, 750 76, 500 37, 800 111, 825 15, 000 20, 880 14, 016 14, 550
United States: Regulars. Organized Militia.	39,600 167,000	15, 225 5, 800
Total	206, 600	21,025

This shows that our percentage of sabers to bayonets is less than that in France, Germany, Russia, and England. The ratio of sabers to bayonets in the United States should, for reasons stated above, be larger than in other countries. A ratio of only 150 sabers to 1,000 bayonets would necessitate an increase over our expanded strength—15,000 regulars, 6,000 militia—of approximately 10,000 sabers. It is an unfortunate fact that much of our Militia Cavalry is far below a proper standard of efficiency, and in these estimates it is probably put too high.

The above data leave out of consideration the large Volunteer Army-at least 200,000-that would be organized at the beginning of a war. As it is not reasonable to believe that Cavalry organizations could be created as quickly or as effectively as Infantry ones, some additional peace Cavalry organizations should be reckoned on to supplement volunteer requirements. In the Rebellion the proportion of Cavalry to Infantry was approximately as follows: Two hundred and twenty-three regiments to 980 regiments. Since the authorized Cavalry regiment was by general orders, April 29, 1863, fixed at 1.244 and the Infantry regiment at 1,022, the ratio of sabers to bayonets was as 1 to 3.62; in other words, 276 sabers to 1,000 bayonets—27.6 per cent.

In a reasonable consideration of our first line of Infantry militia 145 and Regulars 30—say, 175 regiments—19 divisions, 5 field armies—it is right to assign 19 Cavalry regiments as divisional Cavalry and to give to each 2 field armies at least an independent Cavalry division, say, 2½ divisions—21 regiments.

Summing this up we see that the first line would require for its 175 Infantry regiments 40 Cavalry regiments instead of the 21—15 Regular and 6 militia—that we have. Estimating the Cavalry regiments at 1,200 and the Infantry regiments at 1,500, there results 183 sabers to 1,000 bayonets. Estimating the Cavalry regiments at 750, half the strength of Infantry regiments, the proportion would be 114 sabers to 1,000 bayonets.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that in the hearings before the committee it developed that the General Staff is now working on a proposition to reorganize the entire line of the Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. I know that to be the fact, and I believe it would be a great mistake for this body to legislate without any knowledge on the question on so important a matter as this.

Mr. KAHN. Did it not show in the evidence before the committee that the report of the General Staff with regard to reorganization would be made during the present session of Congress?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is correct. Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it not also true that it developed in the hearings that the so-called reorganization plan of the Army was never considered or thought of until after the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hax], the chairman of the committee, had introduced the bill now before the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman's memory may be better on that than mine.

Mr. PEPPER. Is that not the conclusion the gentleman came to from what he heard in the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not say as to that Mr. BURLESON. As a matter of fact, t

As a matter of fact, they are always attempting to reorganize.

Mr. ANTHONY. As a matter of fact, I know that the General Staff is now working on a general plan of reorganization.

Mr. BURLESON. They are always doing that. They are always just about to accomplish something.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes? Mr. BURLESON. But we never have the fruit of their labor. Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will abide his soul in patience, he will have such a report from the General Staff.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman permit another question? There was some discussion here yesterday as to two schools of thought, one believing that Congress should have the responsi-bility placed upon them in the matter of legislation with reference to the Army. Another school, referred to, I think by the gentleman from Illinois, was that the committees of Congress should go to the departments and ascertain their wishes. I would like to inquire, if the gentleman wishes to commit himself, in which school, if either, he places himself?

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe that the average Member of Congress should possess himself of sufficient information to decide himself upon general questions of policy.

Mr. PEPPER. That is a proposition, I think, we can all agree upon, but as to the proposition of views, does the gentleman believe we should rely upon the departments-the War Department in this case-or should we go ahead and work upon our own initiative and upon our own judgment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not entirely. I think the Members of this House should rely somewhat on the professional knowledge of men who make the military profession the study of their lives. Now, in turn I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, and I look upon the gentleman from Iowa as one of the very best authorities in this House on the subject of the National Guard.

Mr. PEPPER. If the gentleman's judgment upon that point is to be considered as a criterion, I am afraid his judgment would be discredited on other propositions.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentelman from Iowa a soldier?

Mr. PEPPER. No one has ever accused me of being one. Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to know that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know that the gentleman happens to have made a considerable study of National Guard matters, and I want to ask him the question if my statement is not correct that there is not to-day in our National Guard any cavalry to speak of.

Mr. PEPPER. I think that is practically correct, but I wish to say I do not believe very much to be necessary in the National Guard to-day, although I think a reasonable amount of Cavalry could be developed if the proper attention of the Government was given to this subject, and I want to suggest that I do not believe that the proposition to maintain in the Regular Army Cavalry sufficient in proportion to balance up with the National Guard could be maintained, because on that proposition the Government of the United States should maintain in this country Cavalry sufficient to take care of and balance up any army that might be called into the field, Volunteers, National Guard, or whatever it may be.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not true, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa, that on account of the great expense that is involved in the National Guard organization of Cavalry that the National Guard in most of the States is unable to-day to maintain a proper proportion of Cavalry?

Mr. PEPPER. I think that is true. Mr. ANTHONY. Therefore we must rely upon the Cavalry of the Regular Army to supply the need in time of war.

Mr. PEPPER. Whatever is necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. Therefore it is incumbent upon us to maintain the necessary Cavalry organization in the Regular Army.

Mr. PEPPER. But that question of what is necessary is a question of fact which I think we can well consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment to the amendment, as I understand it, now pending. Here is an illustration of a reorganization of the Army without any knowledge whatever. [Laughter.] The Committee on Military Affairs has brought in a supply bill and also a reorganization plan. At this moment of the discussion of the bill a proposition is made to dispose of one-third of the Cavalry of the United States, a proposition not considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, no hearings had upon it, no discussion in the proper committee, no provision made in the bill-a catch-as-catch-can we are now trying to load upon the great military establishment of this Government. What conclusion does it lead us to-that we ought to legislate on a supply bill as a supply bill?

We ought to take up the question of the reorganization of the Army as a separate and distinct proposition. We have an authorization for the enlistment of 100,000 men for the Army. We have thought, as evidenced by former legislation, that it should be composed of certain parts, and the tactical forces of the Army should be adjusted into so many Infantry, so many Cavalry, and so many Field Artillery, and other branches of the service. Now, without any knowledge, without any advice, or without any judgment of men who ought to know something about it, the proposition is made here to reduce the Cavalry by one-third. There is no provision made with reference to the Infantry-no provision made with reference to the Field Artillery, which is one of the most potent and powerful of the fighting portions of the Army-but the Cavalry is to be reduced without any knowledge or without any judgment.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I refer to the statement that you made that no advice from those in authority or those having charge of the military establishment had been received. I wish to inquire as to your opinion upon this proposition. Do you believe that, even though it could be demonstrated scientifically that the Cavalry should be reduced by five regiments, and even though it was apparent to every man in this House that such is the fact, we could call together 10 men, or say 20 men, or any number of men, out of the Army of the United States, and have them testify under oath before a committee, approving the proposition of reducing the Cavalry by five regiments or any other amount? Do you believe they would go before the committee and advocate that-either the Secretary of the Chief of Staff, or any man in the War Department? Do you think they would offer that advice to our committee?

Mr. PRINCE. I will answer the question as best I can. If I believed, as the gentleman says I believe, that I was in favor of reducing the Cavalry, I would reduce the Cavalry. What would I do? What is the proper thing to do? Present this as a proposition to the Committee on Military Affairs here from the War Department and call the Secretary of War before us. Remember, the Secretary of War is a civilian. The man who is Commander in Chief of the Army is a civilian. He has to go to the people to be elected to the distinguished office which he hopes to hold. The Cabinet he appoints are civilians. That Cabinet, together with the President, are responsive to the wishes of the people, and I do not believe there is any President of the United States or any Cabinet that he gathers around him who will be controlled by the War Department proper. Remember, the hand above all these officers is the hand that comes from the ranks of all the people. The officers are merely men who are to carry out the wishes of these civilians, and if the civilian President would recommend that the Army should be reduced, if his judgment should be the other way, and after a full and fair hearing it should be the judgment of the members of the Miliary Affairs Committee that it should be reduced,

I would go with my colleague on that proposition. Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. The gentleman from Illinois has had a great deal more experience on the Committee on Military Affairs than I have, and while the question I just asked was a hypothetical question, I would like to ask him a practical one.

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly; but do it briefly as you can, because my five minutes are going and may have already gone.

Mr. PEPPER. During all the time you have been on the Military Affairs Committee did you ever hear an Army officer advocate a reduction of either officers or men in the United States Army?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not know whether I have or have not. It makes no difference to me one way or the other. I have stood up in the Military Affairs Committee against the wishes of officers. I have stood upon the floor of this House against the wishes of officers. If there be one man more than another, perhaps, who has stood up in order to bring the Army down to a fighting machine and make it effective, I am he. I do not think the gentleman's criticism is fair.

Mr. BUTLER. Assuming that the military men would be against this suggestion, would it not be well to know the reasons why they are opposed to it?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not believe—
Mr. BUTLER. Would it not be well for us to know? I am looking for light. I do not know what is the right thing to do

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. PRINCE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] may have his time extended five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

BUTLER] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON rose.

I yield to my colleague. Mr. PRINCE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, what I do not know about the Army would make several books. I listened as I came into the Chamber to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAY] about the Cavalry, and I gathered from what he said and from the information that he furnished to the House that instead of cutting down this Cavalry force one-third we should cut it all off. He cited the experience of the combatants in the Russian-Japanese War, where the Russians were rich in cavalry and the Japanese did not have any cavalry to speak of, and stated that the Russians suffered. Now, if we are to go upon his information, I should vote for this bill and "see" him and "go" him two better. Now, what has my colleague to say touching [Laughter.] that information?

Well, I have been told this by men who Mr. PRINCE. pretend to know that the real fighting force of the Russian Army was never pitted against the Japanese. The main fighting force of the Russian Army had to be retained at home, back in that portion of Russia which was threatened by the then apparent insurrection. I am told that the real fighting force of the Russian Army never fought the Japanese, but was about ready to go to the front when our former President came along with his peace proposals and closed up the war. Whether that is true or not I do not know; but I do know, as to our Cavalry, as it is placed in the Army, and as to our Field Artillery, as it is placed in the Army-that is, as a tactical portion or fighting unit-that the one has a less important place than the other as our Army is now organized, and I fear if we go on and enact legislation by patchwork, as is sought to be done now by this legislation which is pending, we will make confusion worse confounded.

Now, one moment further. I do not believe that the officers of the Army are wholly and solely selfish. Where do they come from? We Members of Congress select bright young men from our districts, young men of good families, well-meaning and honorable young men. We send them to the Military Academy, and they are educated there, and become officers of our Army. We also take the bright young men that are enlisted, coming from the body of our people, young men who can not go through the regular establishment at West Point, and by selection and promotion they are made officers of the Army. When these two means of supply fail to furnish enough, we select young men that we know from different portions of the country and designate that they shall take examinations as civilians for commissions in the Army, and in that way they get in. Now, Mr. Chairman, can it be possible that all these three sources are corrupt? Is it possible that all these three sources of supply are selfish, and seek to do that which would be injurious to the country and against the best interests of the Army?

I am not one of those public men who believe that the Army is corrupt. I am not one of those public men who believe that the officers of the Army would stoop to do things that they ought not to do. I believe they are candid men. I believe they would give their lives, and if need be their honor, for the success of the Government. It may be that they are prejudiced in favor of their own calling or service. They may be, by reason of their peculiar education, prejudiced in behalf of the vocation which they follow. We find that to be the fact in all the Government departments. Every bureau seeks to magnify its importance, and every department does the same. I have seen a little bureau, since I have been a Member of Congress, grow almost into a department in consequence of the efforts of the men connected with it. The lawyer thinks his profession is the only profession. The physician thinks his profession is the only We are becoming specialists ourselves. Why criticize the Army officers for being specialists along their own line? I believe they can give us truthful information. I believe they do give us truthful information.

I heard the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Helm], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, state that he had called the Army officers before his committee, from the Chief of Staff down to the lower and less important officers, and he stated publicly on the floor of this House yesterday that he found them anxious to tell all they knew about Army expenditures. He found them willing to submit openly, freely, and frankly all the information they had upon questions of this kind. I have no patience with men, either in or out of Congress, who are opposing the officers of this Government, either in civil or military life. The Army officers have information which is of value to us, and we should use it. I am opposed to this kind of legislation.

"Oh," said the gentleman from Texas, "they are preparing to give us information, and yet never give it." They make They make their reports, they make their recommendations in the various executive communications that come to us. We are more at fault because we do not carry out their recommendations, or at least seek to carry out their recommendations in our own

I think this amendment ought not to prevail. It is not the place or the time to legislate—on an appropriation bill.

You have the power in your hands. You can put through by legislation you want. If the other branch declines to do any legislation you want. it, you have done your duty.

You ought not to load up this appropriation bill, purely a supply bill, with hodgepodge legislation. You ought not to legislate in this way, for it is not fair. We have not had the information that we ought to receive, and we have not fair and just knowledge upon which to base the proper legislation. For that reason we gentlemen of the minority said that this was not the time or place for general legislation of that kind.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the statutes of the United States in this matter. Under the statute 30 regiments of Infantry are provided, and the effective strength of those 30 regiments of Infantry may be raised until each company shall have 127 private soldiers, 6 sergeants, and 10 corporals, and until the whole effective strength of a company is 143 and of each regiment is 1,716 men, and the whole effective strength of the 30 regiments of Infantry may be made 51,480 men. Each one of the 12 troops of Cavalry in a regiment may consist of 76 private soldiers, 8 sergeants, and 8 corporals, making 92 in all, and making the number 1,104 in each regiment. The 10 regiments may then number 11.040 effective men. Then we would have an Army which at least would not have as many officers in proportion as we have now, and would have about 5 infantrymen to 1 cavalryman. That would at least absorb some of the 250 vacancies that we are talking about in the officers of the line of the Army. If these gentlemen who get heated about this matter would read history carefully, they would find out that when Gen. Grant took command of the Army of the Potomac in 1864, the Cavalry Arm of the Army of the Potomac consisted of only 12,000 men, and that was all that was placed under the command of Gen. Sheridan, in March, 1864. The terrible campaign of 1864 was fought out with only a thousand more Cavalry than would be authorized by law in time of profound peace, even with 10 regiments. Now, if these gentlemen have any beloved organization in the Cavalry, the opportunity is here and now to express their preference, and I would be happy to cooperate with them in naming the regiments that they desire to have eliminated from the 15. [Applause.]

The Army wants more Infantry and less Cavalry. In the last 150 years there has not been a battle in history, except the battle of Eylau, under the command of Napoleon, that was won with There was a cavalry attack at Mars la Tour, in the Franco-Prussian war, that turned out to be a horrible butchery and a murder that is a disgrace to the military annals of Europe. Cavalry will never again be ordered to charge upon infantry or artillery in position.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TAGGART. I will.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the gentleman read the campaigns of Hannibal in Italy, and if he has, will he continue to repeat his statement?

Mr. TAGGART. I have read the campaigns of Hannibal in Italy; but the infantry that he attacked were not armed with the Krag-Jörgensen rifle. [Applause.]
Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman read the campaign of the Japanese in China in the summer of 1900?

Mr. TAGGART. I have read something about that campaign.

I do not remember any particular thing about it.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know that in the battle of Yangstun a thousand Japanese cavalry charged the Chinese with 40 guns in place and captured them, with a loss of 200 of their number?

Mr. TAGGART. I have no doubt that a regiment of cavalry without arms could ride over Chinamen.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman mean to imply that our Army is now armed with the Krag-Jörgensen rifle?

Mr. TAGGART. Not at all. I did not say they were. They are armed with a much-improved rifle. I simply told the gentle man from South Carolina that the troops which were charged by Hannibal's cavalry were not armed with modern rifles.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman used the words "in all history." Now, I ask the gentleman, coming down to later his tory, has he read the campaigns of Gen. Forrest in the Civil

Mr. TAGGART. I have heard and read of some of the movements of Gen. Forrest.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has not read all of them. If he has read them and is familiar with what Gen. Forrest did and the actions he engaged in and the results he accomplished, does the gentleman still wish to let his statement stand?

Mr. TAGGART. Let me answer the gentleman's question by asking another. Would the gentleman say for one moment that cavalry ought to attack trained infantry in open ground in this day of humanity?

Mr. FINLEY. I do say this, that no army corps is complete without a proper complement of cavalry.

Mr. TAGGART. Does not the gentleman think that 11,000 cavalry is something in the nature of a proper complement of cavalry?

Mr. FINLEY. That is a question for debate and difference of opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended five min-utes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the unit of the Army is the private soldier. He is the man who does the business. Everything else is grouped about him. Everything that is done is done for him, and every order that is given finally reaches him. The question is, Is he more effective on foot than he is mounted?

Modern small arms and artillery have rendered it utterly impracticable at this date, and has for more than half a century made it impracticable for the cavalry to attack infantry or artillery in position, if the infantry will remain firm and attend to its duty.

One of the most pathetic things in all history is the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava. The brigade was ordered to make an attack on certain troops before they removed guns from a hill in the amphitheater in which the British Army was operating. They mistook the order and charged into the Russian Army. One-half of their number was slain in the charge, and that was 60 years ago, when every Russian had to load a muzzle-loading rifle or fieldpiece. I wish to say at this time that there is no pretense anywhere in the world that cavalry has any other function except to be eyes and ears of an army. It has not been used in any war for any other purpose in late years, except at Mars-la-Tour, where there was one of the worst tragedies in military annals in the war that occurred between France and Germany.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in conclusion that I think the President of the United States has full authority to place the Infantry at 50,000; that he can raise the Cavalry to 10,000; and that we can have more Infantry than we have now, and as much Cavalry in 10 regiments as we have now under the law as it stands. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the real issue here is not the achievements of Hannibal in Italy or the successes or failures of Gen. Forrest as a Cavalry officer during the Civil War, but, as I understand it, the question to be decided is whether the Cavalry arm of our Army as it is shall be reduced by 33½ per cent; and on that proposition I intend to be recorded in the affirmative. Mr. Chairman, as has been said by the able chairman of our Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. HAY, of Virginia, Great Britain maintains a cavalry force constituting only one-seventh of the strength of the infantry she carries, and the military experts of that great country agree that this is amply sufficient. Japan-and we are bound to admit that the Japanese have demonstrated that they are some fighters provides a cavalry in numbers equaling only about one-seventh of the infantry forces she maintains.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. In a moment. But here in this country the Cavalry arm, as now authorized by law, equals one-half the Infantry in the service of the Army. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. What was the experience of the British Army in South Africa during the Boer War in regard to cavalry?

Mr. BURLESON. The cavalry was practically of no service to the British in the Boer War. They were practically compelled to abandon the use of cavalry because of the terrific expense involved in its transportation across the seas, and the Boers made but little use of cavalry, as they were always acting on the defensive.

Mr. BUTLER. How about the Cavalry at San Juan Hill? The gentleman must not forget that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. I hope to reach that important epoch in our history before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I now want to direct attention to the fact that during the Russo-Japanese War we sent to the scene of that conflict a number of military experts—the ablest officers connected with the Army of the United States were sent there-to gather information which would be of value to us from a military standpoint, and my understanding is that one of the best informed of all these experts reported on his return that the cavalry arm of the Russian Army was practically valueless in that war, and that when the query was propounded to Russian cavalry officers as to why the cavalry was not more effective, the only defense they could make for the little service they rendered was that the Japanese had no cavalry to pit against them. In other words, the large cavalry force used by the Russian Army was of little value or was ineffective because of the fact that the Japanese did not put up a cavalry force to combat them.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked about San Juan ill. The truth is there was none but— Mr. BUTLER. Yes; before we go home let us have something about San Juan Hill. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas, but I would like to read further from our military expert who witnessed the Russo-Japanese War.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman why he compares the efficiency of a wild Cossack cavalryman to a trained American cavalryman?

Mr. BURLESON. Wild Cossack cavalrymen! Mr. Chairman, Russia has produced some of the most brilliant cavalry officers known to history, and the Cossack cavalry of Russia were noted for their reckless bravery and have achieved as brilliant victories in war as any cavalry in the world. plause.

Mr. ANTHONY. Any military authority will tell the gentleman that the Cossack cavalryman of Russia is absolutely untrained for modern warfare.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, right in that connection I want to read from the report of one of the military experts, who was sent to the scene of the Russo-Japanese War, as to the need of cavalry in this country and as to the value of the cavalry in that war. I read from his report:

Our own Cavalry, if brought up to its full strength, would be about two-thirds as numerous as the cavalry force that Gen. Kuropatkin con-sidered unnecessarily large for an army of nearly 400,000 men.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the gentleman if he had two-thirds

cavalry

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no; as I have stated, the cavalry of the Russian Army equals only one-seventh of its infantry. Think of it, the cavalry of the Russian Army constitutes oneseventh of its infantry, and at the present time our Cavalry is one-half as large as our Infantry. If this amendment be adopted, it will be one-third as large as the Infantry. My judgment is that the ment is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the ex-Speaker of the House, is right when he said that this amendment does not go far enough; that there should be a further reduction of the Cavalry, and instead of reducing the arm by 5 regiments, leaving 10, we should cut out 10 regiments and leave only 5, and then we would have a larger percentage of Cavalry, as compared with Infantry, than is carried by other civilized countries similarly situated. One of the valuable recommendations made by the military expert to whom I referred was that the Cavalry Arm of our Army be reduced, and I am glad to have this opportunity to act upon his advice.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment to the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. With Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question now is on agreeing to the The CHAIRMAN. amendment as amended. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire the amendment as first offered to be read?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment now close.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withhold his motion for five minutes.

Mr. HAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a good deal of hesitancy in taking the time of the House at this late hour and in the presence of all of these great military experts from whom we have heard in the discussion of this matter. The question before the House is not whether we have an evenly balanced military organization for war purposes, but, rather, whether we have a military organization suited to the conditions existing in this country.

I was a member of the Military Committee at the time of the reorganization. I remember well the arguments made on behalf of and in favor of increasing the Cavalry. I remember the arguments made on the floor of the House, and at that time they were convincing. Our Army as we maintain it is not maintained as an evenly balanced organization ready for war. It is maintained as a nucleus upon which we may build in time We all know that the average farmer's boy can be drilled into a good soldier in a comparatively short period of time, but it requires a very considerable time to make a good cavalryman, and it takes even a greater length of time to train a cavalry horse. As has been well said here, in time of actual war we would have to depend upon our citizen soldiery, and we would build our establishment upon the nucleus formed by the regular establishment; but in such an event our present proportion of cavalry is rather too small than too large.

Taking into consideration, Mr. Chairman, the situation as it now confronts us, if we are threatened at all in the near future it is to the south. If we shall have any use for our Army in the near future, it will be along our southern borders, where cavalry rather than infantry is needed. Do gentleman living along the Rio Grande, in New Mexico, Arizona, and southern California desire to have those borders exposed?

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes, and I regret that I can not yield. I am not a military expert, but it does not require a military expert to know that in these days cavalry can not ordinarily successfully charge infantry or artillery. Any schoolboy knows that, but in scouting service, in covering enormous territory in case that is necessary, there is no arm that is as available or so useful as the cavalry. What if we should be confronted with a condition arising in Mexico, in the near future, necessitating our sending our Army there to protect American lives and property? What portion of our Army would be needed, would be useful, would be immediately available, to scatter abroad through the northern States of that Republic for the purpose of restoring order?

The Cavalry; and we have not a man too many or an organization too many. [Applause.] At any moment might arise the necessity for the only possible use to which our Army might be put for years to come, and yet gentlemen on the other side propose to deprive us of the very arm we shall need, if we need any portion at all.

Mr. TAGGART. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not a militarist, I do not believe in a great army; I do not know but what I would be willing to join in reducing somewhat our armed service after full discussion, but to reduce the Cavalry at this time, without informa-tion, without a committee having gone into the matter, without having heard from the War Department, with a threatening condition on our southern border, is, in my judgment, the rankest kind of folly, and it seems to me that the House may well calmly consider the situation before us. If we want to reorganize the Army in the future and reduce the proportion of Cavalry, the time, place, and way to do it is calmly, dispassionately, after discussion in committee rooms, by hearings, consider the matter fully, and then come here and legislate intelligently with regard to our entire armed force and not as we are proceeding piecemeal at this time. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18956, making appropriations for the Army, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, February 10, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19339) granting public lands to the cities of Boulder and Canon City, in the State of Colorado, for public park purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 313), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14055) to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 317), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3475) extending the time of payment to certain homesteads on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, reported the same with amendment, ac-companied by a report (No. 315), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COVINGTON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4551) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Savannah River, at or near the mouth of Stevens Creek, between the counties of Edgefield, S. C., and Columbia, Ga.," approved August 5, 1909, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 316), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HARRISON of New York, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13679) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the receipt of certified checks drawn on national and State banks for duties on imports and internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1911, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 314), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8171) granting an increase of pension to Thomas McDonough; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 13308) granting an increase of pension to Charles B. Ross; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 15425) granting a pension to Harry M. Haaga; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 19807) to provide for the examination and survey of Westchester Creek, N. Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. FOSS: A bill (H. R. 19808) for erecting a suitable memorial to John Ericsson; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HEFLIN: A bill (H. R. 19809) to require agents, brokers, and members of cotton exchanges and other persons in reporting or publishing notices of interstate or foreign sales of cotton to state specifically whether the sale is that of cotton futures or of actual cotton; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RUCKER of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 19810) to amend paragraph 1, section 24, of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PUJO: Resolution (H. Res. 411) to investigate banking and currency conditions; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 240) amending public resolution No. 8, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, approved February 23, 1901, providing for the printing annually of the report on field operations of the Division of Soils, Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BORLAND: A bill (H. R. 19811) for the relief of Francis L. Flanders; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 19812) to remove the charge of desertion against John L. Kelly; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALLAWAY (by request): A bill (H. R. 19813) for the relief of the estate of John Wesley Crowder, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 19814) for the relief of William Long, jr.; to the Committee on War Claims. By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 19815) granting an increase of pension to George Hagner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 19816) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Francis M. Helm; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 19817) for the relief of Emiliano Martinez; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19818) for the relief of the widow and heirs of Francisco Vigil, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19819) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the widow of the late Tranquilino Luna, in full for his contest expenses in the contested-election case of Manzanares v. Luna; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 19820) granting an increase of pension to Sue B. Merrill; to the Committee on Pen-

By Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 19821) granting an increase of pension to Zachary T. Goldsmith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 19822) for the relief of Wilber F. Stone; to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, February 10, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the

following prayer:

O Lord, our God and our Father, from whom nothing is hid, cleanse our hearts from all guile and open our eyes to the beauty of holiness that we may resist the temptations which allure. That with firm and steadfast steps we may walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. In the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus; author and finisher of our faith.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. The question has to do with an article in the newspaper called the Commoner, of which I send a copy to the Clerk's desk and ask that the extract which I have marked be considered in connection with the entire article.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the extract.

The Clerk read as follows:

The 13 Democrats opposing the law give the benefit of the doubt to the predatory interests. If the 13 had their way about it, the courts would have no chance to decide the question on the side of the people.

A man who really believes that the President should be permitted to make his appointments on secret recommendations can not be trusted to represent a Democratic constituency.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor] offered an amendment to a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, which amendment was in these Hereafter, before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or supreme judge, he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant.

At the time this amendment was proposed it was clear to my mind that it attempted an unconstitutional interference with the powers and duties of the executive department of the Government, and having sworn to support the Constitution, I felt it my duty to vote against the proposition. I did not at that time suppose that it would ever be seriously contended that the Constitution gave to Congress, directly or by implication, any such power as that proposed to be exercised by the Cullop amendment. The language of the Constitution is so clear and explicit upon the matter, and its interpretation has always been so uniform and unequivocal, that I felt justified in taking it for granted that even the author of that resolution was without respect for its constitutional warrant. The Constitution provides that the President-

Shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the fundamental law of the land. The Constitution further requires that-Senators and Representatives shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, in a recent issue of his newspaper, has seen fit to blacklist my name, together with the names of other Democratic Representatives, for voting against the Cullop amendment. In his article of condemnation he says:

The opponents of the amendment say it is unconstitutional. I jection is ridiculous, but suppose it were a doubtful question? not let the court decide the question of constitutionality?

If this statement had proceeded from the pen of a person of less importance than Mr. Bryan it could very well be treated as the ranting of an ignorant demagogue, but coming from a man licensed to practice law and who has been three times defeated for the Presidency, it is entitled to patient, if not reverential, consideration. If Mr. Bryan had devoted as much of his time to reading the Constitution and the decisions of the higher courts in its interpretation as he has to assaults upon the integrity of these high tribunals, he would have known that the article of the Constitution in question had been many times passed upon by the Supreme Court. And wherever, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court has shed light upon the provision of the Constitution under consideration, it has made it plain that there is no warrant in the Constitution for interference on the part of Congress with the powers and duties of the Executive. But I shall not rely alone upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am not unaware of Mr. Bryan's contempt for that august tribunal. One of the early Congresses of the United States passed a resolution very similar to the Cullop amendment. That resolution was drawn under the identical section of the Constitution with which the Cullop amendment sought to deal. George Washington was President, His message to Congress declining to respect the demands of the resolution is a fitting answer to Mr. Bryan's article, and I quote the exact language:

UNITED STATES, March 30, 1796.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

With the utmost attention I have considered your resolution of the 24th instant, requesting me to lay before your House a copy of the instructions to the minister of the United States who negotiated the treaty with the King of Great Britain, together with the correspondence and other documents relative to that treaty, excepting such of the said papers as any existing negotiation may render improper to be disclosed. In deliberating upon this subject it was impossible for me to to lose sight of the principle which some have avowed in its discussion or to avoid extending my views to the consequences which must flow from the admission of that principle.

Having been a member of the general convention, and knowing the principles on which the Constitution was formed, I have ever entertained but one opinion on this subject; and from the first establishment of the Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion—that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and that every treaty so made and promulgated thenceforward became the law of the land. It is thus that the treaty-making power has been understood by foreign nations, and in all the treaties made by them we have declared and they have believed that, when ratified by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, they became obligatory. In this construction of the Constitution every House of Representatives has heretofore acquiesced, and until the present time not a doubt or suspicion has appeared, to my knowledge, that this construction was not the true one. Nay, they have more than acquiesced; for till now, without controverting the obligation of such treaties, they have made all the requisite provisions for carrying them into effect.

As therefore it is perfectly clear to my understanding that the assent of the House of Representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty; as the treaty with Great Britain exhibits in itself all the objects requiring legislative provision, and on these the papers called for can throw no light, and as it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office, under all the circumstances of this case, forbids a compliance with your request.

George Washington. GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. Bryan says that our objection to the Cullop amendment as being unconstitutional is absurd. Andrew Jackson would not have taken that view of it. Old Hickory had a demand made upon him while President very similar to the Cullop amendment. His answer to that demand was more vigorous than polite, but it is well worth Mr. Bryan's consideration as touching the question of the absurdity of our contention that the Cullop amendment is without the shadow of warrant in the Constitution. President Jackson's message is in full as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 12, 1833.

To the Senate of the United States:

Washington, D. C., December 12, 1853.

To the Senate of the United States:

I have attentively considered the resolution of the Senate of the 11th instant, requesting the President of the United States to communicate to the Senate "a copy of the paper which has been published, and which purports to have been read by him to the heads of the executive departments, dated the 18th day of September last, relating to the removal of the deposits of the public money from the Bank of the United States and its offices."

The Executive is a coordinate and independent branch of the Government equally with the Senate, and I have yet to learn under what constitutional authority that branch of the Legislature has a right to require of me an account of any communication, either verbally or in writing, made to the heads of departments acting as a Cabinet council. As well might I be required to detail to the Senate the free and private conversations I have held with those officers on any subject relating to their duties and my own.

Feeling my responsibility to the American people, I am willing upon all occasions to explain to them the grounds of my conduct, and I am willing upon all proper occasions to give to either branch of the Legislature any information in my possession that can be useful in the execution of the appropriate duties confided to them.

Knowing the constitutional rights of the Senate, I shall be the last man under any circumstances to interfere with them. Knowing those of the Executive, I shall at all times endeavor to maintain them agreeably to the provisions of the Constitution and the solemn oath I have taken to support and defend it.

I am constrained, therefore, by a proper sense of my own self-respect and of the rights secured by the Constitution to the Executive branch of the Government to decline a compliance with your request.

Andrew Jackson.

[Applause.]

[Applause.]

If Mr. Bryan wants a case more directly in point, it can be found in a message to the House of Representatives delivered by President Tyler. That message fits the Cullop amendment with mathematical precision, and is in full as follows:

Washington, D. C., March 23, 1842.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 16th instant, in the following words, viz, "Resolved, That the President of the United States and the heads of the several departments be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives the names of such of the Members, if any, of the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Congresses who have been applicants for office, and for what offices, distinguishing between those who have applied in person and those whose applications were made by friends, whether in person or by writing," has been transmitted to me for my consideration.

If it were consistent with the rights and duties of the executive department, it would afford me great pleasure to furnish in this, as in all cases in which proper information is demanded, a ready compliance with the wishes of the House of Representatives. But since, in my view, general consideration of policy and propriety, as well as a proper defense of the rights and safeguards of the executive department, require of me, as the Chief Magistrate, to refuse compliance with the terms of this resolution it is incumbent on me to urge for the consideration of the House of Representatives my reasons for declining to give the desired information.

All appointments to office made by a President become, from the date terms of this resolution it is incumbent on me to urge for the consideration of the House of Representatives my reasons for declining to give the desired information.

All appointments to office made by a President become, from the date of their nomination to the Senate, official acts, which are matter of record and are at the proper time made known to the House of Representatives and to the country. But applications for office or letters respecting appointments or conversations held with individuals on such subjects are not official proceedings and can not by any means be made to partake of the character of official proceedings unless, after the nomination of such person so writing or conversing, the President shall think proper to lay such correspondence or such conversations before the Senate. Applications for office are in their very nature confidential, and if the reasons assigned for such applications or the names of the applicants were communicated, not only would such implied confidence be wantonly violated, but, in addition, it is quite obvious that a mass of vague, incoherent, and personal matter would be made public at a vast consumption of time, money, and trouble, without accomplishing of vending in any manner to accomplish, as it appears to me, any useful object connected with a sound and constitutional administration of the Government in any of its branches.

But there is a consideration of a still more effective and lofty character which is, with me, entirely decisive of the correctness of the view that I have taken of the question. While I shall ever evince the greatest readiness to communicate to the House of Representatives all proper information which the House shall deem necessary to a due discharge of its constitution and laws of the United States, to protect the executive department from all encroachment on its powers, rights, and duties. In my judgment, a compliance with the resolution which has been transmitted to me would be a surrender of duties and powers which the Constitution has c

For these reasons, so perfectly convincing to my mind, I beg leave respectfully to repeat, in conclusion, that I can not comply with the request contained in the above resolution.

JOHN TYLER.

[Applause.]

President James Madison, the father of the Constitution, was in perfect accord with the other eminent authorities I have quoted upon the question. President Madison went so far as to refuse to confer with a committee of the Senate upon the subject of nominations, declaring that, such a conference was unwarranted by the Constitution.

If I cared to take up the time of the House I could add to this list of authorities the messages of Presidents Grant, Hayes, Cleveland, and others of our Presidents, but I shall content myself with a brief extract from the message of President Buchanan:

Except in this single case (impeaching power) the Constitution has invested the House of Representatives with no power, no jurisdiction, no supremacy whatever over the President. In all other respects he is quite as independent of them as they are of him. As a coordinate branch of the Government he is their equal. Indeed, he is the only direct representative on earth of the people of each and all of the sovereign States. To them, and to them alone, is he responsible whilst acting within the sphere of his constitutional duty, and not in any manner to the House of Representatives. The people have thought proper to invest him with the most homorable, responsible, and dignified office in the world, and in the individual, however unworthy, now holding this exalted position, will take care so far as in him lies, that their rights and prerogatives shall never be violated in his person, but shall pass to his successors unimpaired by the adoption of a dangerous precedent. He will defend them to the last extremity against any unconstitutional attempt, come from what quarter it may, to abridge the constitutional rights of the Executive and render him subservient to any human power except themselves.

Mr. Speaker, an attempt was made by the Senate during the first term of President Cleveland to encroach upon the constitutional powers of the Executive in very much the same fashion as proposed by the Cullop amendment. That attempted usurpation was combated by every Democrat who sat in that body. Among the Democratic Senators who then announced a doctrine which Mr. Bryan now says is absurd, I may mention Coke and Maxey, of Texas; Pugh, of Alabama; Vest, of Missouri; and Jackson, of Tennessee, who later became an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Time forbids me to quote from all of the speeches and reports of these learned expounders of the Constitution, but at the risk of tiring the House I shall read from the speech of Senator Coke, of Texas: Senator Coke said:

Shall read from the speech of Senator Coke, of Texas:

Senator Coke said:

Think for a moment, Mr. Presideat, of the condition in which the President would be placed under the operation of the rule laid down by the Senator from Vermont. The President has vested in him all the executive power of the Government—that power which enforces the laws and appoints and removes officers. Who would write to the President recommending the removal of a dishonest officer? Who would write him of suspicions that an officer was faithless? Who would write him warning him against a bad man seeking an appointment? Who would advise him of anything going wrong if all these letters were to be open to the public and liable at any time upon the suggestion of partisan malice to be published to the world? The President would be isolated; his sources of information would be cut off, and his efficiency as an executive officer greatly impaired. In all our courts certain confidential communications are protected on grounds of public policy, and where is a higher public policy than that which protects the President in withholding his private and personal papers from the public gaze when through that means the entire executive department of a great government receives increased vigor and efficiency?

In refusing courteously but firmly to deliver upon demand of the Senate papers referring to the suspension of officers, a matter resting solely within the discretion of the President, with which the Senate has no concern and over which it has no jurisdiction, and in refusing to deliver copies of private, unofficial, and personal papers, while tendering to the Senate promptly all public and official papers and documents in the departments, the President has walked in the path trodden by all his predecessors. George Washington, the first President, established the first precedent in a similar case, and the record has been read in this debate to establish it.

Andrew Jackson more than once maintained the prerogatives of the presidential office by ref

Mr. Speaker, if I cared to do so, I could fill a volume of the Congressional Record with decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, messages of Presidents, and speeches of learned exponents of the Constitution in support of my position. Indeed, the question is so clear, the language of the Constitu-tion so explicit, and the authorities so agreed that, but for Mr. Bryan's weighty opinion, I would have felt it an insult to the intelligence of this body to engage in a discussion of the question. But with Mr. Bryan no question is ever settled until it is settled wrong, and no position is ever certain until he makes it so. [Applause and laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, aside from the fact that the Cullop amendment was a flagrant attempt to violate the Constitution, it was and is a dangerous and indefensible proposition. It carries to the American people the false and sinister assumption that the Presidency and the Supreme Court are corrupt. I do not believe that is true, sir, and I refuse to teach that doctrine. No corrupt man has ever occupied the White House, and no corrupt judge has ever sat when the bench of the Supreme Court. upon the bench of the Supreme Court. [Applause.] If I be-lieved that damnable doctrine I would join a revolution to over-throw the Republic. Neither Mr. Bryan nor the author of this resolution, nor any other power upon this earth, can drive me to teach the people that there is corruption in the heads of these great departments of the Government. If those who seek to destroy the confidence of the people in the patriotism of the President and purity of the Supreme Court should succeed the people would be amply justified in blotting this free Government from the face of the earth. There are no greater enemies of the people in a free Government than those who teach the people to distrust honest and faithful public servants. plause.]

Mr. Bryan's insinuation that I am a servant of predatory interests, and his statement that I can not be trusted to represent a Democratic constituency, are but the harmless vaporings of a discredited demagogue. [Applause.] I neither fear his power nor respect his judgment. I am accountable alone to those whose commission I hold. Mr. Bryan has led the Democratic Party to three disastrous defeats. Like the Bourbons of old, he has learned nothing and forgotten nothing. He has profited nothing from the lessons of Moscow, Leipzig, Waterloo, but, hovering upon the flanks of the Democracy like an evil genius, he points our columns straight to the rock of St. Helena. Mr. Speaker, under your able leadership the shattered forces of our party have been restored to power in one of the branches of Congress. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Under the wise and statesmanlike leadership of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] [applause on the Democratic side] we are moving forward with steady step and unbroken front to complete victory. We have passed bills reducing the tax bur-dens of the people. We have shown the country that the Democratic Party is capable of cohesive effort and constructive statesmanship. The people are ready to give us more power. In this situation, sir, it is a calamity, if not a crime, for Mr. Bryan to sow seeds of discord in the ranks of the party—his I am almost persuaded to join Gov. Wilson party and ours. in his desire to find some decent and orderly method of knocking him into a cocked hat. [Loud applause and laughter.]

Whatever we do here displeases him. The prospect of Democratic success seems to anger his very soul. For myself I prefer to follow the leadership of the gentleman from Alabama. That leadership promises victory and reform. I have followed the Don Quixote of Nebraska until I am weary with a war upon windmills. [Laughter.] I demand to be led against the flesh-and-blood enemies of Democracy. If there be Sancho Panzas on this side of the Chamber who still hug the delusion of the governorship of an island, let them continue to follow the vagaries of their master. But I bid them chase their follies in peace and leave the disillusioned hosts of Democracy to the attention of more serious and sensible employment.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF WILEY V. HUGHES.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Elections No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, what is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill is to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the right object. Why does the gentleman desire to take up the bill at this time?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] will permit, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] that the bill passed the House several weeks ago, it went to the Senate, and in the Senate it was amended by striking out everything except the enacting clause. The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Carter, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new paragraph:

"Provided, further, That all officers of Cavalry made surplus by such reduction shall be transferred proportionately to the Infantry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, Engineer and Signal Corps, according to their relative commissioned personnel strength; and that the officers so transferred shall take rank in the branch to which transferred according to length of commissioned service: And provided further, That no officer shall be reduced in grade: Provided further, That there shall be no promotion from a lower to a higher grade in any branch of the military service until the officers in that grade shall have been reduced below the number now provided by law for that grade."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I should like to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which was adopted just previous to this provides for cutting off five regiments of Cavalry. It provided that the surplus officers of those five regiments should be assigned to the other branches of the service. This amendment which I offer provides that these surplus officers shall be proportionately assigned to the different branches of the service according to the relative personnel strength of those branches. It also provides that in the assignment of these surplus officers they shall be assigned according to their length of service in the Army. That would be a measure which would insure absolute equity in the distribution of these surplus officers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will this increase the number of officers authorized in the other branches of the service?

Mr. ANTHONY. The amendment is drawn so as not to

Mr. ANTHONY. The amendment is drawn so as not to increase the number of officers in the various grades.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now authorized by law?

Mr. ANTHONY. Now authorized by law.

Mr. HAY. I do not care to make the point of order, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOSPITAL CORPS.

For pay of enlisted men, $850,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in lines 10 and 11, the words "eight hundred and fifty thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nine hundred and forty-four thousand nine hundred and seventy-six."

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman for his reason in offering that amendment?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that the estimates are based upon the enlisted strength.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 10, strike out the words "eight hundred and fifty thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nine hundred and forty-four thousand nine hundred and seventy-six."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the estimates were based upon an enlisted strength of 3,500 men in the Hospital Corps. I understand it, the corps is practically full up to that number of men. It is a mathematical computation to determine just how much money is required to pay that number of men. I sincerely hope the amendment will prevail. I feel confident that if it does not prevail and the figures now in the bill be allowed to remain, there will be a deficit in this item for the next fiscal year.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, this item, like all other items providing for the pay of enlisted men, is based on a calculation or estimate that all the enlisted men now allowed will be in the service during the next fiscal year. As a matter of fact there will probably not be that number of men, and the small cut that has been made in this item, in my judgment, will not operate in any way to produce a deficiency. Moreover, the entire pay for the whole Army is in one fund, so that if there should be a deficiency in any one item here it can be made. should be a deficiency in any one item here it can be made up from some other item where we may have appropriated too I therefore hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KAHN) there were 32 ayes and 60 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service, $160,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "sixty," in line 13, page 9, the word "eight," so that it will read "one hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, page 9, after the word "sixty," insert the word "eight." Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the estimates for service pay were very carefully made, and unless the full amount asked for be allowed I feel confident that there will be a deficiency in this item, and for that reason I offer the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is hardly necessary for me to go Mr. HAY. over again what I said before, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia a question?
Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman v

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman why the item in ref-erence to five first-class sergeants is omitted from the bill?

The item now under consideration is the additional pay for length of service for men enlisted in the Hospital

Mr. MANN. I know it; but this item that I refer to should follow that.

Mr. HAY. As soon as we get through with this amendment we will consider that. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. MANN. In the current law following this item we are now considering is pay of sergeants of the first class of the Hospital Corps and another for the pay of certain privates. What I wished to know was whether the omission of those items in this bill was intentional or not.

Mr. HAY. The bill was made up according to the estimates submitted by the War Department, and I think the gentleman will find that provision in another part of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I see; that is in the service-school detachment. Mr. HAY. Yes; and it is carried in the bill at some other point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixty messengers, at $720 each per annum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the number of messengers under the Chief of Staff, as well as the number of clerks, is considerably re-Were those reductions recommended by Gen. Wood?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, some of them were. We reduced them six or seven more than was recommended by the Chief of Staff, upon a statement made by him, and upon a statement made by the Secretary of War in his annual report. I will state that the Secretary of War, on page 12 of his report, states that by a change of the Territorial departments and divisions there could be saved $445,000 each year. Among other things, he mentioned the fact that messengers and clerks could be cut That order carrying out the new Territorial departments and divisions went into effect on the 1st day of July, 1911.

It has therefore been in operation for over six months. this was an appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, we assumed that this could be done in that year. Chief of Staff, in a statement made to the United States Senate in Senate Document 42, Sixty-second Congress, stated that they could reduce the number of clerks. I will read what he stated:

The territorial administrative work of the Army can be at least as well done under the new organization as under the present and the tactical work required of department commands far better. The personnel required to carry on the work under the new organization will be from 40 to 50 officers, 130 to 140 clerks, and 30 to 40 messengers less than are now required by the present organization, and the consequent annual saving to the Government will be from $200,000 to $300,000. $300,000.

Mr. MANN. Then this reduction, in the main, at least, is on account of some reorganization in the department.

Mr. HAY. A reorganization of the territorial divisions and departments.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I would state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois and the members of the Committee of the Whole House that the number of clerks reduced in the bill is somewhat larger than that recommended by the department at this time. The department, as the chairman of the committee has just stated, said that by reason of a change of the divisions of the War Department a considerable saving would be made to the country; and I want to say in that connection that the department has manifested every desire to reduce the expenses of the War Department. Furthermore, the testimony before the committee shows that quite a large number of changes are in contemplation that will reduce the expenses of the military establishment by several millions of dollars. The committee, however, in considering the bill, decided to cut off more clerks and messengers than the department had asked for at this time. I understand that the work of the department will not be crippled, and therefore the minority members of the committee do not propose to endeavor to raise the number to the number that were estimated for by the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will acquiesce in this reduction, I understand, because the work of the department will not be impaired. Is that the position of the gentleman?

Mr. KAHN. If I thought that the work of the department would be impaired I certainly would try to have the number of clerks increased to the number that the department asked for, but I believe that the work will not be impaired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And, therefore, the gentleman acquiesces, although he does not advocate.

Mr. KAHN. I do not oppose it, and I shall vote for the provisions as they stand in the bill.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. For a statement along the line the gentleman has made.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Mr. HELM. I understand that the subject immediately at hand now is the question of the number of clerks? I wish to say to the gentleman from California that one of the highest officials in the War Department was before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Mr. KAHN. A reduction in the number of clerks and mes-

Mr. HELM. While this statement was made by one of the highest officials in the War Department-not in the hearings or the sitting of the committee-yet I do not think I transgress any rule of propriety in saying that one of the very highest officials in the War Department said that the number of employees could be reduced very, very considerably, and the way to do it was to cut off the supplies; that an annual reduction of 10 per cent for several years would work no inconvenience to the department and the service, but an absolute benefit to the service.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman that he simply states what I stated a moment ago, that the War Department itself has announced that it is trying to work out a plan whereby it will be able to save many hundreds of thousands of dollars to the people of this country by reducing the number of unnecessary employees. They are trying to simplify the thing that the gentleman himself spoke of several days ago, namely, the paper work at the department. The department is en-deavoring in good faith to do that.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Along the line I have been speaking I wish to make a statement to square myself with the statement I made on the occasion to which the gentleman from California has just referred, namely, the paper work in the War Department. Perhaps the inference might be drawn from the statement I made on the floor that steps had not been taken to eliminate these supernumerary employees and clerks. My criticism, perhaps, was not well taken in that regard, and I was to some extent wrong in so far as my statement might tend to be understood that the department had not taken steps and given this matter consideration. The fact of the case is that they have for some time been giving this matter attention and have succeeded in accomplishing much that has redounded to the benefit of the department and its efficiency; and I wish to make this statement in order to square myself along that line.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

And said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and position in which they are to serve: Provided, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at head-quarters of divisions, departments, posts commanded by general officers, or office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty with any bureau in the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is a provision in the bill which has been carried for several years. Would this affect the assignment of these clerks who would be dropped under the appropriations act? There are clerks now in the service who are not appropriated for next year, and I take it that the department will take care of them if they have vacancies where they can be fitted in.

Mr. HAY. Yes; I suppose so. I suppose they could be taken care of in those positions if there are any places for them there.

Mr. MANN. But here is a prohibition that has been carried for years to prevent the transfer of clerks. The question I raised was whether that prohibition ought to be in this bill where, if we cut down the number of clerks, it may be desirable to fill vacancies by transfers. I simply call it to the attention of the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. The purpose of the provision, of course, was-

Mr. MANN. I understand; and I am in sympathy with the purpose of the provision.

Mr. HAY. If any of these clerks are going to be dropped under this bill, why, I would be very glad to see them taken care of anywhere they can be taken care of-

Mr. MANN. I take it everyone would agree to that.

Mr. HAY. And if the gentleman can offer any proposition which looks to that I would be very glad to accept it.

Mr. MANN. Of course that provision is subject to the point of order, and I could have made the point of order; but instead of that I called it to the attention of the gentleman, as I know he means to deal fairly with these clerks, in whom I am not personally interested. If they are to be dropped from one place and fitted into another, it would be a very proper thing.

Mr. HAY. I think so; yes. The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence Department: For pay of officers in the Subsistence Department, $123,800: Provided, That so much of section 1261 of the Revised Statutes as pertains to additional pay for acting commissaries be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that that is a statute which is repealed providing for additional pay to these officers of $100 a year.

Mr. MANN. I understand the department advised it, but what was the reason for having that provided for in the first instance, if the gentleman can tell?

Mr. HAY. It was provided for many, many years ago, and presume the reason was they had additional duties to perform, which now can be performed by the extra officers in the various battalions and commands under the organization act of 1901.

Mr. MANN. Are these acting commissaries commissioned officers?

Mr. HAY. They are line officers. They are not detailed to the Subsistence Department, but they are line officers at their posts, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED OFFICERS.

For pay of officers on the retired list and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $2,800,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, on page 14, line 4, I move to strike out the words "eight hundred thousand" and insert the words "nine hundred and eleven thousand five hundred and seventy-five.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 4, strike out the words "eight hundred thousand" and insert the words "nine hundred and eleven thousand five hundred and seventy-five."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the estimate for the pay of retired officers is a mathematical calculation, and the only hypothesis upon which you could reduce the amount is that a larger number of officers are going to die during the current year, or, rather, during the year for which this appropriation is made. As against that hypothesis there is always a possibility of more officers going on the retired list. The estimate has been carefully made, and unless it be restored in accordance with the amendment I have offered, I feel confident that a deficiency appropriation will be asked for.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the amount provided for for the pay of officers on the retired list in this bill is ample, in my judgment, to meet whatever may be required. It is a wellknown fact that you can not make a mathematically exact computation of how many people are going to be on a list who are subject to die at any time, and it is also a well-known fact that most of the officers on the retired list who die are those of advanced grade and who are drawing the highest pay. The appropriation has not been cut in a haphazard way, and I believe that we are making ample provision, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the reduction in the bill from the estimates on this item is caused in any way by the provision in section 7 of the bill proposing to eliminate the provision for the four years' service at West Point?

Mr. HAY. Somewhat. There are a good many officers on the retired list who are enjoying that pay by reason of their service at the Military Academy.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is quite fair to those officers who have been retired to cut off a portion of their compensation?

Mr. HAY. Well, it was very difficult to make a distinction between them and those on the active list.

Mr. MANN. I can see it is not an easy matter.
Mr. HAY. It would not be fair, in my judgment, to apply a principle to one class and not apply it to the other. It may work a little hardship, but I do not think it would work any great hardship, because most of the men have served the 20 years under which they are entitled to receive the additional compensation, not counting the 4 years at the academy.

And I want to call the attention of the committee to this particular proposition, that it was stated in the hearing that all the retirements by age were anticipated, but the deaths were not anticipated. So that you see the reason for the cut, so far as providing for those who die, on the retired list,

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. Mr. HAY. The amendment pending is the amendment that has already been reported, offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. There has been some discussion on it, and thought it was advisable to have it read again. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Kahn: "Page 14, line 4, strike out the words 'eight hundred thousand' and insert in lieu thereof the words 'nine hundred and eleven thousand five hundred and seventy-five.""

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of the enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, $2,150,000. Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to strike out in line 15 the words "one hundred and fifty thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and forty-nine thousand nine hundred and forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15 strike out the words "one hundred and fifty thousand" and insert the words "two hundred and forty-nine thousand nine hundred and forty."

Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment for the Mr. KAHN. same reasons that I offered the former amendment. I fully believe that the entire amount of the estimate will be required to pay the enlisted men who are on the retired list, and unless the amount of the estimate should be appropriated there will be a deficiency in the item.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The gentleman has offered a number of amendments to increase the amounts appropriated by the bill, in order to conform with the estimates of the department, to pay officers and men where the amount of the pay is fixed by law?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.
Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think, however, that the amounts provided in the bill will be sufficient to provide the necessary pay until next December, after the election in Novemman from Illinois, and I believe that in December there will be estimates from the department calling for deficiency appropriations to make good the reductions in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes that these deficiency estimates will come to a Republican House?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Not next December. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KAHN. They will come to a Democratic House in

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes, in December; but— Mr. KAHN. But, of course, after the 4th of March of next year we on this side will appropriate, so that there will be no necessity for deficiency appropriations. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. There will be an end, then, to this sham reform.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]
Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in response to the insinuations of the gentleman from Illinois-

Mr. BURLESON. They were made jokingly-

Mr. HAY. That the cuts made in this bill were not made for any political purpose; but if they had been so made, we would simply have been following the example set by the gentlemen on the other side, who two years ago did make cuts which did result in deficiency appropriations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, the cuts which have been made here were made because it was believed that they could be made safely, without in any way interfering with or impairing the efficiency or stopping the pay of any man in the Army. As to the prophecy of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Wyoming, I am glad to know that they are having some consolation in their hearts in thinking what they hope will come to pass—
Mr. BURLESON. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast" breast"

Mr. HAY. But which, in the present temper of the country, will never come to pass. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.1

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 26, noes 22.

Mr. KAHN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman. Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Hay and Mr. KAHN. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 30, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The item in reference to retired pay of enlisted men is one that involves a great expenditure of the public money under this bill, and it has involved a great expenditure of the public money for many years past. In this bill the amount appropriated under this item is 14-per cent of the entire appropriations for enlisted men. In the hearings had before the committee on the question of the service corps, which is contemplated in the legislative features of this bill, it was stated that in the computation made to show the savings to the country by reason of the enactment of the section providing for the service corps, the matter of retired pay had been considered and that retired pay would probably go to approximately 4 per cent of the number of men in the corps, because the number of men who were drawing retired pay among the enlisted men was about 4 per cent of the Army; and I submit that, like many of the other statements with reference to the savings to be made, the figures are misleading.

Four per cent can not be the proper percentage in the Army as constituted, with a maximum enlisted force of 80,000 men. Up to 1898 the Army was comprised of 25,000 enlisted men. Then came the Spanish-American War, and there was a considerable increase. Finally, in 1901, the law was changed, and from that time we have had an Army with a maximum strength of 80,000 enlisted men. So that, as a matter of fact, the 4 per cent can not refer to the 80,000 men, because they could not have gone on the retired list. All of the men who are now on the retired list must have begun their service when the strength of the Army was only 25,000 men. Therefore I desire to point out to the committee that the figures given to the Committee on Military Affairs are erroneous, and that the savings that were contemplated can not be made; that is, the savings will not be as great as was figured out upon the basis of a 4 per cent list of retired men.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 10 contract surgeons, at $1,800 each per annum, $18,000. Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the pay of contract surgeons is fixed by law at $1,800.

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is. It always has been. Mr. MANN. Heretofore there have been 20 of them.

Mr. HAY. Yes. We cut them down one-half, because under the present arrangement in that corps they have a large number of reserve surgeons who can serve whenever they are ordered to do so, and they have been employing them; and when the Medical Corps was increased it was stated that they would do away entirely with the contract surgeons. They have been gradually cutting them down. We thought, in view of the fact that the corps has been increased, and that they are adding to the corps this year a considerable number of that increase, we could do away with one-half of these contract surgeons in are adding to them this year.

Are they adding to the commissioned officers? Mr. HAY. Yes; under the law so many of them go in every ear for five years. This, I believe, is the third year, and they year for five years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of the committee state, if he remembers, how many men there now are in the Medical Corps from this reserve corps that was created a few years ago?

Mr. HAY. I do not know, Mr. Chairman. I can not answer that. There are a considerable number of them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not true that the medical reserve officers have pretty nearly superseded the contract surgeons?

Mr. HAY. That is what I have stated. They are allowed to employ them, and they have practically taken the places of these contract surgeons.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They absorb them into the regular line?

Mr. HAY. Into the line; yes.
Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 15 Army paymasters' clerks, retired, $24,750.48.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that this is in accordance with a law passed at the last session of Congress giving to Army paymasters' clerks the same privileges as are now enjoyed by paymasters' clerks in the Navy.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I remember the act of Congress, which I very strenuously opposed when it was up for passage. that, as I understand it, since the passage of the act of Congress 15 or 16 paymasters' clerks, who were purely civilian employees prior to that time, have been placed on the retired list at three-quarters pay. I remember, I think, the statement that was made on the floor of the House at the time was that there were very few of these paymasters' clerks who were of sufficient age and service to be retired. Mr. HAY. I do not recollect what was said on the floor of the House, but this provision was put in the bill in accordance with that law. The gentleman may remember that the provision was put on the Army appropriation bill not in this House, but in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. But it was discussed in the House. Mr. HAY. Yes; of course, it was discussed in the House.

Mr. MANN. And I am calling attention to it as an illustration of what happens whenever you create a retired list in any branch of the service. Congress is led to believe, and under that belief enacts legislation, that there are only a few that will be retired and that there never will be very many retired. But here, the first crack out of the box, we find 16, which is a large percentage of these paymasters' clerks, going on the retired list. Just what will happen when we add four or six thousand more enlisted men in the Army in place of the civilian employees I do not undertake to say, but I apprehend that 20 per cent of them will get on the retired list sooner or later. I do not know that I am opposed to that, but Congress is up against the proposition whether it will create a civil pension list, and also whether, being opposed to that, it allows the department to—what you might almost call sneak in and put certain classes of civilian employees on the retired list, without treating them all alike. There is no more reason for putting Army paymasters' clerks on the retired list than there is of putting all the clerks in the War Department on the retired list.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as I recollect the matter, it was up before the Military Committee of the House, and the committee did not take favorable action on the bill. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has stated, the measure to make the paymasters' clerks officers of the Army was put on in the other branch of Congress. As I recall, in the hearings before the committee it was stated that not more than three or four clerks would go on the retired list at the beginning. I have in mind now the section of this bill the gentleman from Illinois has referred to. Five thousand civilian employees are to be incorporated in the service corps—noncombatants. It was stated to our committee that some of these men are 68 years old, and I believe the language of the bill would allow these men to be enlisted under such regulations as the Secretary of War may make.

Now, I believe confidently that if that section of this bill be enacted into law these men will be enlisted—at any rate, those that the department desires to have enlisted—and that next year there will come in a large appropriation for the pay of retired service-corps employees. That is one reason that impelled the minority members of the committee to oppose this provision of the pending bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was gratified to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] say what he did about the growth of the retired list, particularly in connection with the law enacted two years ago retiring the paymasters' clerks. I am pleased to say that my skirts are clean as to that particular invasion of the retired list. I did not believe in it when it was done, and stated that it was a civil-service pension, and as such I opposed it, and to all such legislation I am in uncompromising hostility.

I do not believe, however, that the cases are parallel-that the corps of enlisted men or the service corps is parallel with that provision. We have had a large number of employees, and it is not intended to increase them. It is intended to put them into the service corps and subject them to military regulations. Gen. Aleshire and others testified as to the probable results of it, and my recollection is that that opinion was concurred in by all of them—that it would effect an important annual saving to the Government. They are enlisted men. I remember asking the question if in the event of an emergency these enlisted men, who were doing noncombatant service, could be used for other purposes. The answer was, as I remember it, that they were on the same plane as the Hospital Corps men and would render most efficient and valuable service that should be done by somebody. I believe in an enlisted service corps to dis-place the service corps of high-priced civil employees, and I believe it will result in a large annual saving to the Government.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman recall that when the measure was before the Committee on Military Affairs to make the Army pay clerks officers of the Army it was stated by Gen. Whipple, I believe, that very few would go on the retired list? Mr. SLAYDEN. No; but if the gentleman says he said that I accept the gentleman's statement about it.

Mr. KAHN. I have that impression. Instead of very few,

Mr. KAHN. I have that impression. Instead of very few, 16, I believe, have gone on the retired list the first year.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Some, I think, went on in 20 days.
Mr. KAHN. I dare say that is so; I do not doubt it for a moment. Probably the ink was scarcely dry before some of them made application to be retired. The point I desire to make at this time, however, is this: That in the organization of the service corps, provided for in this bill, opportunity will be given to all clerks and employees in the various departments consolidated in the supply corps to enlist in the service corps.

The Secretary of War will be able to make such regulations as he may desire to enable those men to enlist, and it was stated before the committee that many of those clerks are ad-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Let me ask the gentleman, in that connection, if it is the intention to include them in the service corps? Mr. KAHN. The Secretary has authority to do it, and I am positive it is intended to do it, for, if the gentleman will recall, I think it was Geft. Sharpe who stated that he had some

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. I believe Gen. Sharpe stated to the committee that he had some men who were well along in years, but whose services were exceedingly valuable to the department. I do not know whether any other staff officer testified on that point, but I believe Gen. Sharpe did.

Mr. HAY. Let me ask the gentleman a question. What does the gentleman propose to do with these old clerks?

Mr. KAHN. If you do not have a service corps? Mr. HAY. If you continue them until they die or resign or are removed for cause?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then they get paid a pension-

Mr. KAHN. They do not get a pension at all.
Mr. HAY. Draw a salary while they are unable to perform their duties?

Mr. KAHN. On the contrary, Gen. Sharpe's statement was that they were exceedingly efficient and that if the servicecorps provision were enacted into law he would want a number of these old men to enlist because of their value as employees to the department, and I want simply to call to the attention of the gentleman from Texas that if this service corps be established many of these old employees will be retired.

Mr. HAY. And if they are not retired, they will be kept in the service until they die, as we all know, and therefore be a much greater expense to the Government than they would be on the retired list.

Mr. MANN. That is the whole question of a civil-pension

Mr. HAY. I am not talking about a civil-pension list. The gentleman is talking about the enlisted men.

Mr. PRINCE, Will the gentleman permit a suggestion on that point?

Mr. PRINCE. Look on page 54 of the bill, about the center of the page, beginning line 10, and you will find this language:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War may fix the limits of age within which civilian employees who are actually employed by the Government when this act takes effect and who are to be replaced by enlisted men under the terms of this act may enlist in the supply corps.

Evidently a clear suggestion to the Secretary of War without fixing the limit of age within which civilian employees were actually employed by the Government; in other words, the right to put them on the retired list. We might as well face it first

Mr. HAY. What does the gentleman propose to do with them now; propose to keep them in the service?

Mr. PRINCE. I propose you leave the whole service corps-Mr. HAY. I am not talking about that; I am talking about the men who were there before-

Mr. PRINCE. Let them stay where they are now.

Mr. HAY. Exactly; they are not pensioned. Paymasters' clerks and a few men doing clerical work put on the retired list at retired pay as against other clerks who are receiving nothing.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. You say you are proposing to keep them there until they die?

Mr. PRINCE. I did not say that. I said to let them stay where they are. Let the operation of law go on.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is presumable that people who are on the retired list sometimes die.

Mr. PRINCE. Some of them die, and some of them are removed for cause.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No clerk who is physically and perhaps otherwise disqualified from rendering adequate service in return for his monthly stipend resigns because a kind-hearted Government and a kind-hearted administration permits him to continue on the pay roll, even though the salaries they receive are virtually a pension, despite the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] to the contrary. What I mean by that is that they draw the salary of the place but render very little service. Now, which will cost the Government the greater sum of money-to retire the enlisted man after he has reached an advanced age at three-quarters of the pay of an enlisted man, or to keep incapable clerks on the list as employees until they die of old age?

It is a pure speculation on my part as well as Mr. PRINCE. upon yours, but I would say at the period of 15 or 20 years there would be more people on the retired list as the result of a service corps, and the expense would be greater to the Government, than a like number in the civil service and keeping them employed when they are practically useless.

MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised to hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] admit that apparently the controlling argument which they have in favor of the proposed service corps is the establishment of a system of civil pensions.

Mr. HAY. I deny that I said anything of the sort. Mr. MONDELL. And for the purpose of establishing-

Mr. HAY. The gentleman can not put words in my mouth. Mr. SLAYDEN. I can not permit the gentleman to interpret my language in that way.

Mr. MONDELL. I regret that I misunderstood the gentlemen. I will state it in another way. They are defending the establishment of a service corps as they would defend a bill for the establishment of a civil pension list, giving exactly the same reasons for the establishment of this corps that they would for the establishment of a civil pension list, if they favored it. Now, if we are going to establish that kind of a policy in the country we ought to reach it with regard to the entire Government service and not by piecemeal with reference to certain employees of the Government.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to interrupt the gentleman for just a moment. The gentleman makes a mistake in assuming that this is a civil-service corps. It is to be a part of the Army, and the rate of wages paid in the Army for enlisted men of the same rank.

Mr. MONDELL. The civil employees are to be civil employees of the military service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the soldiers who are doing civil work now are not civil employees.

Mr. MONDELL. They are enlisted men, and enlisted under conditions which make them fit for the performance of military duties. But this service corps might be constituted of men most of whom could be retired in a very brief period. We have here an illuminating illustration of what would occur under the operation of your provision for a service corps. illuminating because, within a year after we pass a bill to place on the retired list certain civil employees of the military establishment, we find that 12 to 14 per cent of the entire appropriation for that corps is to be paid to men who are now performing no service. We have heard for a long time that the pen is mightier than the sword. Here is apparently proof that the pen is deadlier than the sword, for more men who wield the pen are placed upon the retired list, I presume because of disability incurred in the service, than we have of the fighting corps of the Army, proportionately. It seems to me that it would be well, and that has always been the view I have taken in regard to all of these matters, that we should keep our military establishment as a fighting force. If it is good policy to establish a civil pension list, let us do it, having in view the necessities and the condition of our entire civil establishment. It certainly can not be justified in connection with the military establishment alone.

Every man who draws a pension or who is on the retired list of the Army should be a man who, while rendering the service for which he is pensioned or for which he secures the retired pay, was ready and prepared at any time to expose himself to the bullets of a hostile force. We ought to know, when we salute a man who wears the uniform of the United States Army, that he is really a fighting man, that he obtained his title and his emoluments as a fighting man.

I think we ought to maintain the military establishment as a military establishment strictly, as an efficient fighting force, and that every man who has a title in our Army should acquire that title as a fighting man, and that any man who receives emolument by reason of service should receive it by reason of his service as a part of a fighting force. This includes, of course, the men of the Medical Corps who are liable at any time to be called to do dangerous duty. My thought is that we should keep the military and civil services separate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming is entirely mistaken as to the character of this proposed service The gentleman says you must maintain an army as a fighting machine. I would like to know how we are going to maintain it as such if we are not to have teamsters and wagonmasters and mechanics and all the other various branches of semimilitary service which must be performed in connection with the Army.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true, of course; and they are very honorable occupations. But the gentleman would not say that these men ought to be given military titles or be paid pensions or retired pay as fighting men?

Mr. HAY. No; I am not advocating that at all. matter of fact during the last six years the veterinarians of the Army have been given pay and allowances by this Congress. The dental surgeons have been made into a corps and given title by this Congress, and have been permitted to go on the

Now, it is all very well to say that it ought not to have been done, but as a matter of fact it has been done, and it is a part of the law to-day, and, so far as I know, the gentleman from Wyoming helped to do it. This service corps is intended, among other things, to replace certain men who are now detached from their commands and who are now performing duties not of a military character at all; not the duties of a soldier, strictly speaking, but the duties of teamsters and wagonmasters and clerks and stenographers and all the various kinds of duties that ought to be performed not by soldiers but by men in a service corps.

The gentleman says that nobody ought to have a pension who does not fight. Yet if the pensions were taken away from all the people who now enjoy them but did not fight, it would be a very great saving to this country, and I believe it ought to be

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman realizes, does he not, that all of those men placed themselves in a position where they could have been called upon to fight at any time, and it was not their fault that they were not called on to fight and did not fight?

Mr. HAY. I did not say anything of the kind. Mr. MONDELL. Oh, if the gentleman is referring to dependents of fighting soldiers, that is a very different thing.

Mr. HAY. No; I am not referring to the dependents of fighting soldiers, but I am referring to the soldiers themselves who never fought.

Mr. MONDELL. But they enlisted to fight.

Mr. HAY. Some of them enlisted to fight, and some of them enlisted not to fight. The gentleman knows that the Hospital Corps of the Army is an organization composed of noncombatants, men who do not fight, and yet the members of that

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman knows also that the Hospital Corps is often exposed to hostile fire.

Yes; and so is the teamster and the wagonmaster. Mr. HAY. and so are all the other people employed with the Army when-ever it goes into the field. They are many times liable to receive the hostile fire of the enemy, so far as that is concerned.

This service corps is a comparatively small corps. It saves money. It saves a large amount of money. I can not see that any objection has been made to it, except because it does save money.

Mr. MONDELL. Was not the argument made for this retirement of paymasters' clerks that it would save money?

Mr. HAY. Never on earth that I have heard of. I never heard anybody make any such argument.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who was responsible for that legislation?

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Not the gentleman from Texas or myself. Mr. HAY. It has been shown that this service corps will save money; and therefore I do not see any reason why men who are in the service of the Army should not be paid as enlisted men. They are not civilians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to a civil pension list, nor do I wish to be understood as being opposed to the creation of a service corps. The matter having been brought up, the proposition in the bill for the creation of a service corps will operate to put a certain class of employees now on the civilian side onto the military side and provide a pension for them, or, rather, provide retired pay for them.

In the consideration of bills which necessarily will soon come before Congress for the creation of a civil-pension list or a civilretirement list, it is essential that Congress give consideration to the length of service which will allow retirement and to the amount of pay which the retired officers or employees shall re-The most insidious method of legislation is to offer propositions to a body opposed to a general principle, which involve the general principle, and obtain the acquiescence of the body, so that in the end the general principle itself will be acquiesced in. A man now a clerk or a stenographer in the Army will, under this bill, be placed in the military service, and after he has had 30 years' service, when he is 50 years old, if he enters at the age of 20, he will go on the retired list for life at three-quarters pay and allowances. I ask the gentleman how much that will amount to, to the highest paid noncommis-sioned officer? If anybody can tell me I should like to have the information.

Mr. HAY. I can tell the gentleman. Mr. MANN. My information is that it amounts to in the neighborhood of $100 a month.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman says "Oh, no." How much are the allowances?

Mr. HAY. I will tell the gentleman in a moment.
Mr. MANN. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the 15 Army paymasters are to receive $24,750 in pay alone, and that does not include their allowances. The total would amount to $200 a month.

Mr. HAY. That is a different proposition. Mr. MANN. I know it is.

Mr. HAY. I will give the gentleman the figures in a moment. Mr. MANN. The highest paid noncommissioned officer receives, I believe, $1,400 a year, with allowances.

Mr. HAY. What noncommissioned officer is that? I will undertake to say there is no noncommissioned officer who receives $1,400 a year.

Mr. MANN. That amount may be with the allowances. think they receive in the neighborhood of $100 a month, some of them, with allowances for quarters, lights, heat, fuel, subsistence, and so forth.

Mr. HAY. I have the figures here. The largest pay of any noncommissioned officer is $900 a year.

Mr. MANN. That is the pay?
Mr. HAY. That is the pay; yes; but when he gets on the retired list he only gets three-fourths of the pay and no allow-

Mr. MANN. He does not get any allowances?

Mr. HAY. No.
Mr. MANN. Then I am mistaken about that, if the gentleman is correct, but I do not think he is.

Mr. HAY. I have the Paymaster General's report as my anthority

Mr. MANN. Ni Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. MANN. Is Nine hundred dollars a year is the flat pay?

Is there any increase on account of extra service?

Mr. MANN. Is there any increase on account of extra service: Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How much does that amount to? I will not detain the gentleman. I have been informed, and I believe the information is correct, that some retired enlisted men receive over $100 a month as retired pay and allowances. But, be that as it may, I have no objection to it. To take a clerk or stenographer under the Government and give him retired pay at the mad of 20 years' service or if he serves in the Philippines at end of 30 years' service, or if he serves in the Philippines at that time at the end of 15 years' service, to give him threequarters pay and allowances for life is not a proper consideration in the creation of a civil pension list.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I think we are coming to the creation of a civil pension list. I do not want to see Congress, if it can avoid it, for the purpose of creating a service corps, which may be desirable and necessary; I say, I do not wish to see the Government give these clerks or other civilian employees of the Government, after only a few years service, when they are in the very prime of life, a higher retired pay proportionate to the regular pay that will induce them to go on the retired

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. What is the allowance of a retired enlisted man-he speaks of retired pay and allow-

They have no allowances on the retired list, as I understand it. I want to state to the gentleman from Illinois that the highest pay of the highest grade of noncommissioned officers is $99 a month, which is in his seventh enlistment, so that if a man has served 30 years in the Army in the highest grade he gets $99 a month or $1,188 a year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Can the gentleman tell us now how many enlisted men are on the retired list?

Mr. HAY. I stated that the other day. I think it is 3,200 and a little over.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the committee, has given this informa-tion in his statement the other day. On February 3, on page 1697 of the RECORD, he said this:

1697 of the Record, he said this:

Mr. Mann. I take it that if they were working with the clerks they would work with citizens.

Mr. Hay. Yes; for a while.

Mr. Mann. Will the gentleman incorporate in his remarks a statement showing the total amount that would be received by each of these classes, both pay and commutation or allowance?

Mr. Hay. I will read it to the gentleman now. Master electricians would receive $1,143.81 a year; sergeants of the first class would receive $1,113.81 a year; sergeants would receive $1,010.81 a year; corporals would receive $51.81 a year; privates would receive $788.31 a year; and cooks, $933.31 a year.

Mr. Mann. Does that include commutation or subsistence?

Mr. Hay. That includes everything—pay, commutation for quarters, food, clothing, and everything that the enlisted men of the Signal Corps now receive.

now receive.

I will ask the chairman if that includes longevity pay? Mr. HAY. Longevity pay depends on the number of years they serve. I have just stated to the gentleman from Illinois that a man serving his seventh enlistment gets $99 a month, or $1,188 a year. That is the highest pay of a noncommissioned officer.

Mr. PRINCE. In other words, it is practically $100 a month.

Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. PRINCE. Under the provisions of this bill the Secretary of War can fix the limit——

Mr. HAY. Oh, the gentleman is assuming that everybody will get into the place of the highest noncommissioned officer, which is impossible, for there are only 15 provided for in the

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; but it is quite likely that those 15 will receive the highest pay and be put on the retired list about the time that the ink is dry.

Mr. HAY. I think that would be hardly possible, presume that there is any dishonesty among the officers who are going to carry out the provisions in this act, and surely they would not put a man as master electrician on the retired list who was only a wagoner or a teamster.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not think they would, but I have before me an illustration of less than one year. I remember distinctly that I asked how many men would be affected by the retirement provision for paymasters' clerks, and it was estimated that there would be four or six. Sixteen are now there at retired pay of about $200 a month. The old soldier who fought four years in the Civil War is given $12 a month against $200 for men working in comfortable quarters as paymasters' clerks. That is a fair sample of what a civil pension list for clerks will amount to.

The men who do the service for their country receive but little, and the men who do but little, except in the clerical sense, will receive the large pay. I am not going to subscribe to the civil-service pension list yet, and I am opposed to it in this shape.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know anybody who is in favor of a civil-service pension list, and surely I am not. am not advocating anything of the sort, nor is there anything of that sort in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and compensation of reporters and witnesses attending the same, $35,000: Provided, That hereafter enlisted men may be detailed to serve as stenographic reporters for general courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and retiring boards, and while so serving shall receive extra pay at the rate of not exceeding 5 cents for each 100 words taken in shorthand and transcribed, such extra pay to be met from the annual appropriation for expenses of courts-martial, etc.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that provision beginning on line 5 of page 16, for the purpose of having the chairman explain to the committee the reason for it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the provision on page 16 of the bill providing that enlisted men may be detailed to serve as stenographic reporters is recommended by the War Department, as it will decrease the expense of these trials. The letter of the Secretary of War recommending this legislation is as fol-

War Department,

Washington, December 9, 1911.

Dear Mr. President: I have the honor to transmit herewith a proposed amendment to the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The purpose of the amendment is to effect an economy in the expenses of general courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and retiring boards.

The employment of a stenographic reporter to record the proceedings, testimony, etc., of such courts and boards is frequently necessary to conserve the time of the numerous officers sitting thereon. Such duty not being of a strictly military nature, it is fitting that a small compensation should be paid to enlisted men performing it, as is done in all other cases of extra duty not of a military nature performed by enlisted men.

The law at present forbids the payment of compensation to enlisted men for clerical work on courts-martial.

Stenographic reporting requires the services of a specially trained man, and it is deemed proper to pay to an enlisted man performing such duty a modest compensation, which will enable the War Department to utilize the services of soldiers skilled in this class of work and obviate the payment of a much higher rate to civilian stenographers.

Very respectfully,

H. L. Stimson.

The PRESIDENT.
The White House.

That is the only explanation I have to make.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire whether or not there was any further consideration given by the committee to the proposition than the mere receipt of the letter from the Secretary of War?

Mr. HAY. Yes. We questioned the Paymaster General in

Mr. MURRAY. It seems to me that this provision brings up a question of whether or not it is proper to have enlisted men do a kind of high-grade special work that men in ordinary private life are paid not 5 cents a hundred words for doing, but in my city-and, I think, in most cities of the country-at the rate of 25 cents per folio of 100 words. It does not seem to me, as one who had some service in the Army during the War with Spain, to be proper to have enlisted men brought in direct competition with men who are making a living out of this kind of high-class skilled work. Of course, if the committee has considered that phase of the thing, I do not mean to be insistent against it, but the chairman says that about all there was to it was the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that it is the custom in the Army to employ soldiers for all kinds of work, and to pay them extra-duty pay, ranging from 25 to 50 cents a day, in accordance with the character of the work which they perform. This is simply in line with the practice in I do not think that it could be called coming into competition with men in civil life, because it is Army work, and if we have men in the Army who are capable of performing it there is no reason why we should not employ them to do it.

Mr. MURRAY. I think there is a reason, if I may suggest it to the chairman, and it is not this case alone that has been called to my attention as a Member of the House. In the navy yard in Boston, in the district that I have the honor to represent, they recently took enlisted men from the ships and had them do the work that the civilian employees of the navy yard had been doing for a long time—ordinary laboring work and electrical work, both skilled and unskilled mechanical work of one sort and another. Men in the military or naval establishment may have a peculiar kind of skill that would equip them to do work that has so long been done by civilians, but to bring these enlisted men into direct competition with civilian employees raises a question of policy whether or not that is a kind of economy to which this House should commit the Government. I think they are parallel cases. I wondered if the matter had been gone into with sufficient care to justify us in this House in voting for a thing that may establish a new policy on the part of the Government.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly.

KAHN. As the gentleman has suggested, there is no doubt but that considerable money will be saved in the pay of stenographers.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; but is it a wise economy?

Mr. KAHN. I do not agree that it is; but it is in line with what the gentleman's party has done at the present session of Congress, in cutting down the fees of the stenographers to com-

Mr. MURRAY. Of course I do not mean to make this a partisan question. I might retort in kind that a Republican Secretary of War has recommended this to the chairman of this committee. Let us not get off on a tangent.

Mr. KAHN. A Republican Secretary of War—

Mr. MURRAY. I raised the question in all sincerity—

Mr. HAY. I read the Secretary's letter.

Mr. MURRAY. Let us not get into that, because the gentleman knows, of course, a Republican Secretary of War does it in this case just the same as a Republican Secretary of the Navy does it in the navy-yard case that I mentioned; but let Navy does it in the navy-yard case that I mentioned; but let us not go into the political aspect of the thing. Let us treat it upon a broader basis than that. Now, is it wise for the heads of the Army and Navy Departments of the Government to establish these things, which I grant are money savers? There is no question about that feature of the plan. But are they wise economies? Is it wise to pay stenographers one fifth of the amount that is allowed in Boston and, I suppose, is allowed

Mr. MANN. Fifteen cents is paid by the House now.

Mr. KAHN. The rate paid is nearly the same all over the

Mr. MURRAY. By the way, I want to suggest, as one who knows something about the intelligence that is required to do shorthand work, that I do not believe there is a class of men in the world that have to display a higher amount of intelli-gence than the men who take these notes and transcribe them.

The time of the gentleman from Massa-The CHAIRMAN.

chusetts has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask for three minutes. Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MURRAY. I ask for five minutes, as the gentleman from Texas wants to ask me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURRAY. The man who takes these shorthand notes not only must hear what is said and get it clearly into his mind, but he must also possess the mechanical skill to put the thought quickly on paper and then be able to read his notes. I do not believe it is wise economy to have enlisted men drawn in the service not for fighting purposes but for shorthand writing. Men are brought in the service, as the gentleman from Wyoming aptly stated here to-day, for fighting purposes and for the preservation of peace, and I do not believe it is wise to attempt to train here within the Army a class of shorthand writers, or in the Navy a class of men to compete with men in civilian employ. I understand the gentleman from Texas desires to ask me a question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am not able to find the hearings at this moment-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly; but I do not understand that any hearing was given on the subject, but simply the recommendation of the department taken.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As the chairman of the committee stated, for many years it has been the custom to have soldiers paid for extra-duty work-

Mr. MURRAY. Yes, I understand that.
Mr. SLAYDEN (continuing). Thirty-five or 50 cents a day.
There are enlisted men, at least there are said to be, who are capable stenographers. capable stenographers. Now, they ask, and there is no reason I can see why they should be denied, the privilege of earning more money by doing this work, and if it can be done in a satisfactory manner at less cost, or the same cost to the Government, I fail to see why it should not be done.

Mr. MURRAY. Well, there is this reason: It is bringing enlisted men into competition with men in legitimate, wellrecognized professions and employments outside of the enlisted service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Suppose you had a court-martial at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and there was no stenographer there, you would not want to send to Boston for one, would you?

Mr. MURRAY. Of course not; that question answers itself.

Of course, I am not asking that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What would you do if you had in the ranks stenographer who was competent; would you not use him?

Mr. MURRAY. I would in that case— Mr. SLAYDEN. That is all that is wanted.

Mr. MURRAY. No—
Mr. SLAYDEN. That is all they want to do.

Mr. MURRAY.. Pardon me, I will state what this bill

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is all the item seeks to do. Mr. MURRAY. What does this bill do? Does not this commit our Government to a policy of bringing enlisted men in competition with men in private employment? And it is the same sort of thing that was done in the Navy Department in the illustration which I cited. Is that a wise policy? It is not enough to say to me what you would do in a post off on the frontier. If you believe it is a wise policy, I would like to hear something so that I can vote for it. I simply meant to raise the question.

Mr. HAY. It is a policy which has been adopted in all the other branches of work in the Army. That is one strong argument for this service corps. There are 2,400 men that are doing work at garrisons throughout the country that ought to be done by service-corps men. Personally I do not care anything about this proviso.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a money saver.
Mr. MURRAY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] says it is a money saver. But is it wise?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, as I was going to say, it was put in on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, who says there are certain men in the Army who have the ability to do this work and they want to have the detail to do it. As to the broad policy of whether or not we ought to permit competition with men in civil life, I agree with the gentleman from Massa-chusetts [Mr. Murray]. I do not believe we ought to do it.

Mr. MURRAY. Does not this bring them into competition?
Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not believe this is the kind and character of competition to which he refers. It is not like your case in the navy yard, where enlisted men are brought in to do the purely civilian employee's work. It is military work, and they simply want a private soldier or an enlisted man to do the work before a military board. It is true if they do not do this, they will have to employ a civilian to do it, and therefore it may be said this man would come in competition with the civilian employee. I do not think it is a parallel case. course, the paragraph is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. MURRAY. I will not insist on the point of order.
Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order for the purpose of hearing an explanation by the chairman, but since he has ceased his remarks I renew the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move, then, to strike out the last word. My objection to this proviso is one that has not been suggested by the gentlemen who have heretofore discussed it. In the first place, I do not believe there are many enlisted men in the Army who are competent to perform this service. Nor do I believe that if there are competent men to do the work such as is required in these cases the allowance made is anything like adequate.

Let us understand, Mr. Chairman, what this means. A man is on trial by court-martial. His honor is at stake and the honor of the American Army may be at stake, and you bring in, as has been suggested by gentlemen on the other side of the House, a man who has been in the backwoods for years doing military service, who has, no doubt, forgotten everything he ever knew in a practical way about his profession as a shorthand writer, and he is placed at the desk in the presence of a man who has raised his hand and taken an oath to tell the whole truth for or against a soldier who may be on trial for Now, it is important not only that the whole truth be told but that the whole truth be recorded. And the incompetent man can not record the whole truth under those circumstances. All experienced stenographers will verify this That record is taken up for review in many cases by the Secretary of War, and in a number of cases by the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army; and I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that any man in the enlisted force of the Army, who, if he had ever been competent, has retired from the business of writing shorthand, is competent to do that work and do it efficiently and reliably.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I understand, it leaves it optional with the Secretary of War as to whether he shall select an enlisted man. It says he "may do it."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understand it is optional. but if the proviso amounts to anything it is dependent upon their taking advantage of it. If they do not take advantage of it, the proviso is useless. If they do take advantage of it, they incur the very risks I have pointed out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. One further question. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes,

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact now that enlisted men do mechanical work?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; enlisted men do mechanical work, as any man in this House can do mechanical work; but to do this work requires the rarest kind of skill and constant practice.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Are they not paid extra for doing that in the Army at times?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is true; but, aside from the usual objections that are made to that policy—

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was asking the questions as a matter of information.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. My high regard for the gentleman assures me that the gentleman is not entering into a useless controversy, and I want to answer his questions re-

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] will permit, wherein the making these enlisted men do this stenographic work differs in principle from permitting the Marine Band or any other military band receiving pay from the United States Treasury to compete with other musicians? You know there has been a very great deal of discussion about that, about what is alleged to be the injustice of permitting it. These men already receive pay and are assured of enough to keep them well. Then when an opportunity comes up, if they are permitted to play for any company or gathering, they can underbid musicians practicing their profession in civil life. It has met with a very serious protest, and very justly so, I think.

Mr. HAY. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that it is a parallel case. I think this was intended merely for cases of emergency, and, anyway, it is not recommended by the Secretary of War or insisted upon by him. Personally I do not care anything about the provision. It will save very little money, if any, and if the point of order is insisted on, it will not meet with opposition from me.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I was not taking issue with the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, as the Chair understands.

Mr. COOPER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that it is too late to make a point of order. Otherwise I would make it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] that it is too late now to make the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, by striking out the proviso, beginning on line 5, down to and including line 13, on page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 5, strike out the proviso beginning on line 5, down and including line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will In those places where it is impossible to get a civilian stenographer, if there be an enlisted man who can do the work, I presume the department now, under existing law, can employ him for that purpose and give him extra-duty pay. The prevailing rate for stenographic work is pretty nearly the same all over the country. The average rate, I think, is about 30 cents a folio. This proposition would take away opportunities for employment for civilians.

I think the amount of saving that would be made by the enactment of this legislation would be so small that it is hardly worth while to consider it. At any rate, I do not think that the enlisted men should be thrown into competition with civilian stenographers.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not this secure to the enlisted man his pay? If you leave it to the option of the court-martial he may get no pay at all. He might be required to perform the service without having any additional pay. Do you not take the certainty away from him if you strike out this provision of the law?

Mr. KAHN. There is an item in this bill for extra-duty pay to soldiers who are given employment other than military employment.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. The Secretary of War states, as to the employment of stenographic reporters, that the law at present forbids the payment of compensation to enlisted men for clerical work on courts-martial, so that under the law as it is now it would be impossible to detail a man to do this work.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that he would get nothing.

Mr. HAY. But you can not detail him for it.

Mr. BUTLER. If the service is performed, it is performed voluntarily, and he can receive no compensation for it.

Mr. HAY. They can not volunteer. They can not employ an enlisted man on this work. The purpose of this proviso was to give them the authority to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand, and I quite agree with the gentleman; but is it not lawful for an enlisted man to volunteer to perform such service?

Mr. HAY. No; it is not. It is so stated.
Mr. BUTLER. I accept the gentleman's statement. He is Mr. BUTLER. better informed than I am on this question.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better strike this provision out.

Mr. HAY. I would say to the gentleman that I have no objection in the world to striking it out. I am not opposing the striking out of the proviso.

Mr. PRINCE. The objections that I have to it are these: First, it looks as if the Government of the United States is fixing the amount of compensation per hundred words for short-hand writing and transcribing notes at 5 cents for each 100 words. The next objection is that it is having a soldier come in competition with a civilian. Both of these objections are minor, in a sense, and yet quite important to the civilian who enters into competition with the soldier.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRINCE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not be just as proper to prohibit the efficers of the Army from appearing as counsel in these cases, thereby depriving members of our learned profession of the opportunity to do these things?

Are any of them here now interfering with us? Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but Army officers appear as counsel in all these court-martial cases, and come in competition with, and indeed exclude, lawyers from that class of work.

Mr. BUTLER. It is the worst kind of competition, because they do the work for nothing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think we should prohibit that outrageous abuse?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I think so, and I think we ought to take care of ourselves.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman can offer an amendment to that effect if he wishes to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HAY. I move that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. We have consumed 20 minutes on a provision that we all agree can go out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to its going out of the bill. Mr. HAY. Then I move that all debate on this amendment Mr. HAY. Then I m be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that debate be closed in 10 minutes.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRINCE. The main objection is that here are men who have not kept abreast with the profession, a very technical and exacting one, of shorthand reporting. These enlisted men will be called upon to take down the charges made, the words spoken, and all the proceedings in the trial of officers. An officer's life in a sense is at stake. His honor is at stake, and it seems to me that in cases of that kind the most skillful men should be employed in the performance of that duty. It is of as great importance in its way as having stenographers here in the House of Representatives. It requires as much skill and knowledge on the part of a stenographer to do the work as in any court proceeding, because this is a kind of court proceeding. If there are clerical errors in the proceedings as transcribed, how can either side correct them? If a mistake is made by the shorthand reporter, that mistake, perhaps, has to go clear up to the President of the United States. If this be a saving of money at all it is, as the chairman very well says, at the expense of too great an interest to the officers on trial and to the Army as a whole. I hope the Committee of the Whole will strike out this proviso and leave the law as it is, forbidding enlisted men being assigned to this duty. must be a good reason for that, and this is simply another innovation. It is true that the Secretary of War has asked it, but he may have done so at the suggestion of some one else, perhaps not thinking how far-reaching it would be. we can unite upon this proposition of striking this provision from the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman consume his five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. He consumed four minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill was recommended by the Secretary of War, and it seems to me for very sufficient reasons. If I had not thought the provision a proper one, I should have made the point of order against it and it would have been stricken out, as it is clearly subject to a point of order.

What are the facts? Courts-martial are constantly being held at places where civilian stenographers are not available. The question is, first, whether you can employ an enlisted man without paying him anything to perform stenographic work or whether you will do without the stenographic work, take the testimony in longhand, and prolong the services of the officers working on courts-martial to three times as long as would otherwise be occupied. I think the reasons given by the Secretary of War in his communication to the President on the subject, which were referred to Congress, are extremely cogent and sufficient for including this provision in the law. Whether the extra 5 cents which is provided is sufficient compensation or not, it is not much more than is authorized by law. At present the courts-martial, held as they are constantly at outlying points, must be without a stenographer or else require the enlisted man to work without any extra pay. All this provision asks is to give the enlisted man who serves as stenographer an extra 5 cents for every 100 words he takes and transcribes. This is fair to the stenographer, to the enlisted man, and in the large cities where they seldom have courts-martial it may be that they will employ more expert stenographers. But as long as we are holding courts-martial throughout the world, I think we ought to provide for the payment of the enlisted man who performs the service.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. COOPER. As I understand it, men enlist in the United States Army to stand up and be shot at if called upon to do so in defense of the country. What authority is there to compel the enlisted man who may be an expert portrait painter to paint portraits or, if he be a stenographer, to take stenographic work? Are either of these things that can be required of him under the terms of his enlistment as a soldier in the United States Army?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the law would require any enlisted man to serve or not. I know that all through the Army enlisted men are detailed to perform extra duty and are paid extra-duty pay. It runs all through the service. It is in the interest of the service and for the interest of the enlisted man who does the work.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that an enlisted man, a stenographer, who protested against being compelled to report the proceedings of a court-martial when the mercury was 90 or 100 in the shade and to accept pay at the rate of only 5 cents for receiving and transcribing 100 words, could nevertheless be compelled to do the work, although other stenographers receive 30 cents per 100 words? Why should be, if he be an expert and makes such protest, be required to do the work for 5 cents when he enlisted only to be a soldier? I do not think there is any authority to compel him to do it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether there is any authority to require an enlisted man to black an officer's boots.

Mr. BUTLER. He ought not to be permitted to do it, and the officer who would compel him to do it should be courtmartialed.

Mr. MANN. It makes no difference. When a man performs extra duty he should receive extra-duty pay. The question is not whether he should receive 50 cents or 5 cents for 100 words; he ought to be paid something where he now receives nothing, The War Department says he ought to be paid something. I regret to disagree with gentlemen in regard to this, but I believe it is an important provision in the bill in the interest of both the service and the enlisted man.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will it be in order for me to submit an amendment? The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend by striking out the word five," in line 10, and inserting the word "twenty."

Mr. MANN. That is more than we pay in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BUTLER. If I have any time to yield.
Mr. BUCHANAN. Why not make it the prevailing rate of Mr. BUTLER. I thought I was making it at the prevailing rate of pay. Mr. HAY.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:
